Patterson, and Rev. C. B. Althoff. Among the lecturers will be: Dr. M. P. Boynton, Dr. Benj. Otto, Rev. Geo. R. Stair, Rev. Chas. Kessler, Rev. J. B. Rogers, Rev. Charles Field, Dr. James Asa White, Rev. M. G. Dickinson, Mr. W. G. Brimson and others. Mr. Herman D. Sorg, 3040 W. Washington Blvd., is the registrar and upon application at this address will furnish further information. The first term will be for six weeks. A nominal charge will be made for tuition. Men and women from all the Baptist churches of all nationalities will be welcomed. Examinations and credits will be given to all those who desire to meet the standard requirements. The financial obligations, apart from the time donated by prominent Chicago Baptist ministers and laymen, and the small fee above stated, have been met by the gift of a generous Baptist layman. The committee in charge of the institute, which has been appointed from the board of trustees of the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, consists of President George W. Taft, chairman; Prof. A. S. Carman, secretary; Mr. O. K. Mitchell, Rev. Herman Kaaz, Rev. Swaney Nelson, and C. J. Kurtz, M. D. For several years, there has been a growing conviction among Northern Baptists that institute work of a distinctively denominational character should be done and this school is established in order to meet this great and imperative need.

The National Christian Conference in China

By JAMES H. FRANKLIN

In the year 1907 a significant missionary conference was held at Shanghai, in celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the beginning, by Robert Morrison, of evangelical missionary work in China. The late Dr. Henry C. Mable, then Home Secretary of the Foreign Mission Society, and eight or ten other Northern Baptists attended the conference, which was considered the most notable missionary gathering ever held up to that time in the Far East. May 2-11, 1922, a second National Christian Conference is to be held in China which promises to be of even greater importance than the one held fifteen years ago.

The gathering in 1907, known as the Morrison Centenary, was composed almost exclusively of foreign missionaries. So rapid has been the development of Chinese leadership the last fifteen years that in the conference to be held within a few weeks at least half of the delegates will come from Chinese churches, and perhaps nothing will be more interesting in connection with the proposed meetings than the evidence of the progress of native leaders.

In preparation for the National Christian Conference, surveys have been in preparation for the last two or three years, and the results are now being published in a large volume which will furnish the most complete data ever collected on missionary work in China, including the present occupation of the field, the progress of the work, unoccupied areas, and the outstanding problems in connection with the rise of national consciousness. Moreover, five commissions, composed of missionaries and Chinese leaders, have been preparing reports on topics of special importance, after personal visitation of many fields and correspondence with persons in all parts of China. The five general topics on which the commissions will report to the large conference are as follows: (1) The present state of Christianity in China; (2) the future task of the church; (3) the message of the church; (4) the development of leadership for the work; (5) coordination and cooperation of the church.

The mission boards of America and Europe are being urged to send some of their own members and secretaries as delegates to the important gathering.

In connection with the national conference, the three missions in China supported by Northern Baptists are preparing to hold a denominational conference at Shanghai, for the discussion of problems of peculiar interest to our own work. This will be the first time such a representative conference has been organized by our Northern Baptist missions in China, and it is anticipated that the discussions will prove most valuable.

A Noteworthy Utterance

Bishop Hughes, the able and vigorous Methodist leader, gave an address at the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in Park Street Church that was almost revolutionary. It was in no sense an heretical statement, rather was it massively orthodox, with a deal of Bible behind it, and plenty of religious history, ancient and modern. Nobody was disposed to gainsay it—he couldn't very well. He was too busily engaged in wondering why he had never thought of it, and waxed eloquent upon it himself. Certainly the bishop was eloquent, and it was the eloquence of knowledge and conviction. But it was given to the wrong audience. They were mostly ministers, when they should have been laymen; for the address from beginning to end glorified the privilege, the passion, and the prowess, of the layman in all religious history, and proved that lay evangelism that was so mighty in the theocracy of long ago should be still mightier in the spiritual democracy of today.

A New Idea

The bishop's virile plea came with the force of a new idea. After he had made it, it seemed as old as the hills, and as evermore present, but we had been almost blind to it. The sweep of the bishop from the remote past to the living present was marvellously comprehensive, and it was shown that always the official priest had been subordinate to the flaming layman, and often made superfluous. Jesus included no priest in the "Twelve": The priest cuts no figure in the apostolical age; and we marked it when a bishop himself reminds us that it was when apostolicity had lost its pith and punch that it began to indulge in priests, bishops, and the inevitable ecclesiasticism. Bishop Hughes is always proving to us that nothing in the bishopric need prevent a true servant of God from blazing, warming, and shedding light.

A Unitarian Zealot

Our eruptive and imaginative friend who edits the Christian Register, that usually prim and passionless Unitarian organ, has provoked various replies to his lurid and sustained exaggerations about premillennial Baptists. Some "prophet" has opened his eyes, and he sees myriads of gory and militant Fundamentalists subduing the earth. One writer informs him that "Baptists are merely having one of those 'bad times' that go their round among the different denominations." While our bad time is on, we shall neither be panic-stricken nor lapse into assinnity, but in spite of stormy prophecies, when we reach Indianapolis, we shall disappoint the prophets of evil by showing ourselves able in Christian fashion to attend to our own business. By that time we shall have gotten rid of much heat, and perhaps discovered that our greatest differences are not doctrinal but administrative: that they compel changes in men and methods; that such changes bring a great calm, and in time considerable money to our enterprises. The great majority of the Baptists are keeping cool—not all of them get cranky and overheated. The bulk of the premillennialists among us are quietly nourishing their chief comfort and not interfering with the comfort of their brethren. Indeed most of us are taking heed to the exhortation of Oliver Cromwell to some of the overloaded zealots of his day—"I beseech you, brethren, in the bowels of Jesus Christ not to forget that it is possible for you to be mistaken!"

Baptists in Prohibition

Harold D. Wilson, and James P. Roberts, his successor as government prohibition agent in Massachusetts, are both young Baptists. They are good friends, good churchmen, and, prohibitively, both mean business. Harold was a sort of John the Baptist and, like the original John, got beheaded. Instead of confining his activities to the humble private "stills" of Giuseppe Macaroni and Angelo Spaghetti, innocent of fear he actually came down like a pile-driver on the cocktails of the assembled politicians of the G. O. P. at the Quincy House Banquet, thinking that enforcement at the top would make things easier at the bottom. But he made a mistake. At once the politicians called up the "high top" at Washington and "got him." Being naturally a live man, with incredible quickness Harold issued a book with the significant title—"Dry Laws and Wet Politicians," which, as Horace Greeley used to say, "Makes mighty interesting reading." So at the present time we have a Baptist team pushing the prohibition campaign: Harold fighting on page and platform, and James rushing the rummies into the courts.

Lent Is Increasing

The period called "Lent" is, in some respects, taken more seriously every year. Go back twenty-five years in recollection, and the comparison is almost startling. Now, evangelicals generally seem disposed to utilize the period as though it presented some advantages. Both union movements and special efforts of individual churches are more common than ever. The individual church plans and pursues its purposes through Lent to ensure an Easter ingathering. The union movements are participated in by the different denominations in certain great centers in the city, such as Tremont Temple, King's Chapel, Park Street Church, Old South Church, with its revolutionary associations. In the last named church this is "Baptist week" with daily noon services conducted by Dr. Arbuckle, Rev. Frank M. Swaffield and Dr. W. Gray Rosselle. The large go-to-meeting class in Boston gives full congregations at these services.

The Old First Church

An effort is being made to gather all of the activities of the united church in the ornate meeting house on Commonwealth Avenue, transferring the Sunday school, prayer meeting, and evening service from the Warren Avenue center. Time will tell how the experiment will work out, but it has begun with promise. Is it to be demonstrated that a popular evening service, with attractive music, pungent evangelistic preaching, and an atmosphere of gospel fervor, can strongly and permanently live in the somewhat exclusive Back Bay district? Dr. De Blois is making a decidedly good start. Now may the large congregation that is filling the floor of the spacious church, fill the galleries also! It would be a great triumph.

Two Bits

March 20 the Ministers' Conference had a "Ladies' Day." It is a fresh notion and was launched in a rain storm. But ministers and their wives came out in force and it was quite a social function, with a dinner and a most inspiring address by Professor Vaughan of Boston University.

Doctor A. C. Dixon, of Baltimore, in addition to his two Sundays at Tremont Temple, is giving noon-day addresses at Park Street Church on the days between the Sundays. He is pursuing some of his usual lines of teaching with all his old-time power.

Wisconsin News and Notes

Francis Wayland House

The Francis Wayland House has been opened at Madison. This is the first step in the movement of Baptists to establish a Foundation in honor of Francis Wayland at Madison, the seat of Wisconsin's great university. For the present this house will be the home of the student pastor, Mr. J. B. Gleason, and his wife. The following from one of the papers of Madison explains the uses to which the house will be put:

"The opening of a student house marks the climax of fifteen years of work among the students of Wisconsin. The house will be open all the time for social gatherings, committee meetings, and as a general meeting place for Baptist students. By next fall it is hoped not only to have this as a meeting place, but a home for twelve men students."

This has been realized by the purchase of a splendid flat right near the University Campus, the lower floor of which is to be the pastor's home, with rooms for student meetings, and the upper floor will be used for dormitory purposes. The house was opened several weeks ago with appropriate ceremonies under the direction of Pastor Wallace, Student Pastor Gleason and the local committee on young peoples' work. This beginning has been made possible by the New World Movement.

Ice and Snow

Several weeks ago northern Wisconsin was visited by a severe storm of sleet and rain which covered the earth with a solid sheet of ice. The heavy ice caused much damage to property besides cutting off that section of the country from the rest of the world, by breaking down telegraph and telephone connections, and interfering with the transportation systems. No great damage was done to any of our Baptist property, but to break down trees and interfere with the night services.

Pastor Robert Gordon, of Fond du Lac, gave his people a sermon on "The Song Of The Storm" and it was received so well that it was printed by request.

Evangelism to the Front

This is the time evangelism is being stressed in Wisconsin. We have set as our goal 1,600 baptisms for the current year—no small task for Wisconsin Baptists, but they are moving forward to accomplish it. On every hand are those who are beginning to plan for Easter classes while others, not waiting for that, are in the midst of such campaigns now. Pastor Mayo, at Elkhorn, had the assistance of Pastor Dorward in a gracious meeting. More than twenty-five went forward and the church will receive some choice members. Pastor Parsons, of West Allis, has recently had the assistance of Pastor Harms, of Oconomowoc. Other meetings are in progress. The February number of the Wisconsin Baptist reports 100 additions by baptisms, not to say anything about those not reported.

City Mission Work

The Milwaukee City Union is moving forward with its program. Recently the plan of work was standardized by the adoption of a departmentalized system, which will give intense study and oversight to the various phases of the city mission work. The union will soon be incorporated and beginning May 1 it is hoped that it will have a city missionary giving a large share of his time to this work. In connection with his work in Milwaukee he will give some time to other cities having mission work. Milwaukee Baptists are doing four kinds of city mission work. We have a splendid work among the Poles, a work among the Negroes, the beginnings of a Christian Center, and a mission among English-speaking people in a growing suburb. As the years pass it is hoped that Milwaukee will take a front rank in city mission work. There is room for much work.

Some News and Notes

Rev. C. A. Boyd, our genial religious education director, is off to the South and East on a well-earned vacation.

The sympathy of the brethren goes to Dr. Henry Clarke, of Racine, recently bereaved by the loss of his wife; also to Pastor H. C. Carnell, whose wife recently underwent an operation for appendicitis.

Dr. A. LeGrand was the chief speaker at a banquet for Baptist students at Madison March 11. Over 150 students were present and it was a great occasion. The students are appreciating the new Francis Wayland home.

Church News by States

NEW JERSEY

LIVINGSTON AVENUE CHURCH, of Brunswick, N. J., celebrated its fiftieth anniversary March 12-19.

NEW YORK

THE TUSCARORA INDIAN CHURCH pledged $17 per cent of its quota and in January had paid 45 per cent with the expectancy of reaching 100 per cent by April 30.

REV. I. A. HOTALING of Homer Church reports in his March calendar that eighty-eight tithers gave in 1921 an average for current expenses of $14.44 per member; while the 191 other contributors gave $7.20. For beneficences the eighty-eight tithers gave an average of $20.70, while the other contributors gave an average of $5.38 per member. If all regular contributors had given on the same basis as the tithers, the church would have had $4,295.44 more to dispense.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the New York City Baptist Mission Society will be held May 2. The annual meeting of the Baptist Church Extension Society of Brooklyn and Queens will be held Tuesday evening, May 9.

GREENE AVE. CHURCH, Brooklyn, makes steady progress in its effort to be out of debt by Easter. The debts of the church, which amounted to $30,000 six months ago, have been reduced to about $6,000. The church gallery, which has not been used in nearly ten years, is now occupied by large numbers every Sunday. In spite of a rapidly changing environment Greene Avenue Church is facing the future confident that great things will be accomplished. Several of its young people are on the foreign fields. One of its members, Mr. Oscar T. Smith, has recently been ordained and another, Mr. Nicholas Schoeppler, is at Newton Theological Institution.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. A. B. BOWSER, of Ford City, has opened a mission in a village across the river composed of Italians, Serbians and Hungarian-Croatians. These people have left the Catholic church and requested Mr. Bowser to preach for them. A fine room in the public school building has been given for their use on Sunday. Sunday, March 5, Mr. Bowser preached to over one hundred. A Bible school is being organized.

REYNOLDSVILLE: Largest attendance, March 19, when Lord's Supper was administered. Fifty-five received the hand of fellowship, fifty being baptized, while others await the ordinance of baptism; four conversions at the evening service. Prayer meeting increased 800 per cent, attended by the power of Holy Spirit. Bible school increased 300 per cent. W. W. G. organized. Church budget adopted, and will make every member canvass at end of year.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. C. W. SHERIFF HAS RESIGNED the pastorate of Canton Church to accept the call of Grace Church, Camden; Rev. W. J. T. Rumsey goes from Turbotville to Emporium, beginning his pastorate there April 1; on the same date Rev. C. M. Conway opens his work at Nanticoke, going there from the Luzerne Avenue Church, Pittston, where he has given eighteen years of service. Rev. A. M. Gregg closes a pastorate of eleven years at Monongahela on April 16 and goes to the First Church, Milton.

BETHLEHEM CHURCH, REV. FRED R. McARTHUR, pastor, has adopted the slogan, "Double the membership by Easter." After careful preparatory work, Rev. Arthur B. Strickland, state superintendent of evangelism, held a two weeks' meeting at the church, during which seventy-three definite decisions for Christ were made. A new baptistry has been installed and it is planned to have baptism at every service until Easter, including prayer meetings and sessions of the Bible school.

MAINE

THE MAIN STREET CHURCH of Saco mourns the loss of one of its strongest and most valued leaders in the passing of Deacon Charles H. Tuxbury on March 4, at the age of eighty-one years. For more than thirty years he and his family were active in the work of Main Street Church. The funeral service was held in the church March 6 and was largely attended by church people and townspeople.

RHODE ISLAND

REV. JAMES E. NORCROSS assisted Central Church, Providence; the Newport churches; the Roger Williams and the Woonsocket churches recently in the stewardship campaign.

REV. S. D. RINGROSE, pastor of Roger Williams Church, conducted a series of evangelistic meetings in Plainfield Street Church. A number accepted Christ.

ILLINOIS

REV. RUSSELL A. RAPSON, formerly of Roodhouse, began work in his new field, East Park Church, Decatur, March 12.

SPARLAND: The church began two weeks of special meetings Feb. 26, following two weeks of cottage prayer meetings. Six conversions, the uniting of two by letter and a strengthening of the church as a whole was the result. Pastor L. B. Wilkinson preached and conducted the music.

DR. FRANKLIN W. SWIFT, evangelist, of Rochelle, Ill., held a series of meetings with the Davis Memorial Church, Mount Vernon, Rev. J. E. Noftsinger, pastor, Feb. 12-26. Though the attendance was interfered with by sickness, there was a deep interest from the beginning and results were gratifying. March 5 he began a series of meetings with First Church of Everett, Dr. W. E. Henry, pastor. This series will be followed by one with First Church of Bellingham, Rev. D. M. McPhail Pastor.

WOMAN'S BAPTIST MISSION UNION held its annual meeting at Tabernacle Church, Chicago, March 14, with an attendance of over 500. Reports showed marked progress. The election of officers for 1922-23 was as follows: President, Mrs. Ralph P. Fales, re-elected; first vice-president, Mrs. F. S. Osgood, re-elected; second vice-president, Mrs. W. H. Cossum; recording secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Charles H. Parkes; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Ernest Ridgeway, re-elected. This was known as "pastors' day." Thirty pastors came for luncheon and remained throughout the afternoon session. Dr. A. E. Peterson, state board of promotion director, answered questions on the continuation campaign.

Frances Shimer School

The trustees met at Metcalf Hall, Feb. 11, with three Chicago trustees present—Doctors Butler, Dickerson, and Seares, and George Klewer of the office of C. A. Eckstorm, architect. After prolonged examination of the revised sketches of the proposed new dormitory, it was unanimously voted to approve the plans and to advertise for bids as soon as the plans and specifications are ready. The building will provide for between fifty and fifty-five pupils and teachers. The intention is to have the building ready for the opening September 13. The cost is estimated at over $45,000.

OHIO

FROM MARCH 1 TO EASTER has been set aside for individual personal work in Pemberton Church. The week preceding Easter there will be special services.

A REVIVAL SPIRIT has been manifested at First Church, Middleport, since September, with eighty-six members received since then.

ROSCO CHURCH, Rev. M. L. Wattering, pastor, began special services March 8.

MARCH 5, EIGHT new members were given the hand of fellowship at Immanuel Church, Cleveland. An evangelistic campaign is planned for the first two weeks of April.

CENTREVILLE IS ENTHUSIASTIC over a pastor in the field and services every Sabbath.

ON WEDNESDAY EVENING, Feb. 8, Central Church, Columbus, received seventy-eight members, fifty-seven candidates for baptism, eleven by letter, ten by experience.

ALEXANDRIA REPORTS A COURSE in religious education from the fourth through the eighth grade of the school. There are plans for a D. V. B. S. in summer. Though an agricultural community, Alexandria hopes to make its mark on the New World Movement.

FIRST CHURCH, CANTON, held a series of evangelistic meetings lasting for two weeks. Rev. Dan F. Rittenhouse of Columbus was the evangelist Feb. 28-March 9, and Dr. H. F. Stillwell, March 10-12. Close to ninety names were turned in of those who desired to unite with the church by experience, letter, confession of faith and baptism.

THE KRAMER-MITCHELL revival campaign now going on at the Market Street Church, Zanesville, is showing splendid results. Congregations overflow the building, religious zeal is rising, conversions are numerous, nearly one hundred up to date.

ROCKVILLE, BLUE ROCK, Duncan Falls, and Salt Creek churches have hired Rev. H. U. Rough of Mt. Gilead, O., to be their pastor.

THE BRYN-ZION and Franklin churches, under one pastorate, have been without a pastor since Jan. 1. Any one interested in this country field may correspond with Lloyd Jackson, Clerk, Mt. Gilead.

FEB. 12, REV. MCFARLANE of Hill Crest Church, Columbus, began evangelistic services continuing until March 5. A number of young people were converted, nineteen having already followed their Savior in baptism.

CUYAHOGA FALLS CHURCH has had a revival under the preaching of Rev. A. M. Dixon, of Wason. Meetings closed Feb. 19 with twenty-nine accessions, twenty-two for baptism, seven by letter.

SUGAR RUN CHURCH has closed a series of special meetings conducted by Rev. Wiggins of Amelia. The church is without a pastor.

THE W. W. G. OF LAGRANGE CHURCH sent two delegates to the convention at Toledo. At the annual meeting held recently, the report of finance committee showed all obligations of the church met and a balance $17.37 in the treasury.

TENTH AVENUE CHURCH, Columbus, is looking forward to evangelistic meetings under the leadership of Dr. Stilwell, beginning April 2. Pastor Phillips is assisting Rev. A. J. Bowser of Delaware in meetings.

GRANVILLE CHURCH, CLEVELAND, is still pastorless. The work of former pastor, Dr. Alonzo Stark, is still felt and there are prayers for another of his spirit.

TROY CHURCH, near Frost, is over 100 years old. It has no pastor and only a few members left. Rev. A. K. McCall, of Columbus, spent Sunday, Feb. 26, here.

JAN. 1, REV. H. C. FLETCHER began his pastorate with Newcomertown and Pleasant View churches. March 5, four weeks of meetings with Pleasant View were closed with eight conversions and a great community awakening. Plans are being worked for a three-week campaign at First Church, Newcomertown, beginning March 25. Mr. Fletcher is his own evangelist.

OVER FORTY ARE READY to unite with First Church of Massillon, of which Rev. C. H. Donaldson recently became pastor. Revival meetings in charge of the pastor will begin April 2.

TWELVE HAVE BEEN RECEIVED into membership of First Church, Geneva, T. G. Erler, pastor, since Nov. 1, 1921. Bible school has increased nearly 50 per cent in attendance.

AN EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN at Emmanuel Church, Toledo, during January, in which Evangelist Earle T. Favro preached, resulted in about 100 being either converted or reclaimed. In response to a call from the Baptist laymen's council, the state board of promotion and the state convention, the pastor, E. G. Griffith, has been released from pastoral duties to serve in the Northwest district during the continuation campaign.

LITTLE MUSKINGUM OWNS the oldest meeting house in southeastern Ohio—a brick building 50x40 feet and ninety-three years old. Rev. J. D. Riley was pastor for several decades, retiring at eighty. Leonard W. Riley is his grandson. At present the church is pastorless. It has given $428 to the New World Movement and more is coming.

REV. R. B. SMITH, pastor of First Church, Springfield, has closed a three weeks' revival as a result of which nearly 100 new members have been received. Dr. Smith has conducted the revival of this church for each of the four years that he has been pastor, during which time five men from the church have been ordained to the gospel ministry. This year K. L. Cramer, gospel singer of Pittsburgh, assisted.

AFFAIRS ARE MOVING RAPIDLY in the Norwood Church since the coming to their pastorate on Feb. 5 of Rev. Miles W. Smith, formerly of Stratford St. Church, West Roxbury, Boston. On the evening of February 23 a goodly number of Miami Church members and their pastors were present at a public recognition service in honor of Mr. Smith's coming to Norwood.

MICHIGAN

REV. W. A. STEINKRAUS, pastor of Scotten Ave. Church, Detroit, recently conducted an evangelistic campaign at Fenton. During his absence from his own church, Dr. H. C. Gleiss and Rev. Geo. W. Bates filled the pulpit.

IMLAY CITY—"It is no credit of mine," writes Rev. E. J. Cross, pastor, "that the Baptist church is filled at least once a month. One month we had Dr. B. G. Mattson, director of city extension work of the Congregational churches of Michigan; another month Dr. Eben Mumford of the Michigan Agricultural College, who spoke upon the "Application of Christian Principles to Rural Economics" and another month the program was purely musical under the direction of the Royal Oak Male Quartette." You may be sure that each month will see some other helpful service for which the pastor is (not) responsible.

LESLIE WOMEN STARTED their Forward Step Campaign, with the staging of the pageant "Others," patronized by a crowded house and a large offering.

MARCH 19 WAS TITHING SUNDAY at Owosso Church, Rev. H. A. Waite, pastor, following a week when every one was requested to tithe. Meetings with Evangelists Littrell and Moody have just closed with 139 converts.

THE REGULAR EXECUTIVE SESSION of the Board of the Women's Baptist Mission Society of Michigan was held in Woodward Avenue Church, Detroit, Tuesday, March 14. The Home Mission Society will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary, to be called the golden anniversary. The annual blanks are ready to go out. It is hoped they will receive prompt attention. Reports show that the day of prayer was observed generally all over the state. A new society has been organized at Millington. Central district annual meeting will be held in Battle Creek May 2-4. Miss Bertha Kirschke has been transferred to the Russian work but will still work the Bohemian field. Miss Lund will take Miss Kirschke's place at First Hungarian Church, Delray, and will also do work at River Rouge. Eighty-eight new garments for children have been donated by ladies of First Church. Box and supply committee shows that goods valued at $130 have been sent. White Cross work going slowly. Miss Heaton told of talking to Miss Sigrid Johnson, who is at present in Detroit, regarding needs on foreign field. From May 1-Oct. 1 Miss Heaton may be addressed at Charlevoix, Mich. Plans were discussed for coming state convention to be held in Jackson May 16, and turned over to committee. Miss Brimmon was present and told the ladies she was assured of victory for almost everywhere the ladies are praying.

WISCONSIN

FEB. 17-19, A DEPUTATION TEAM from the University of Wisconsin, composed of Baptist students, three men and two women, connected with Madison First Church, Dr. J. Sherman Wallace, pastor and Rev. J. B. Gleason, university pastor, visited Delavan, assisting the pastor there, Rev. Robert Lincoln Kelley. The team was under the leadership of E. H. Gibson, quarterback of Wisconsin's varsity eleven last fall. Talks were given by the members of the team at the Delavan High School, mixers for fathers and sons, and for mothers and daughters were conducted, an afternoon, Saturday, was spent in mixed games and genuine fun, ending with ravenous appetites which rapidly made away with a simple "bean" supper. Sunday the activities of the church were turned over to the deputation team. At the closing service twelve young people made clear cut, definite decisions for the Christian life. Harlin G. Loomer, senior academic this year, is the chairman at Madison of the young people's committee handling these deputation teams and their dating.

REV. WM. T. DORWARD, of Tabernacle Church, Milwaukee, assisted Rev. Ralph Mayo, Elkhorn, in special meetings for two weeks, during which eighteen persons

NEBRASKA

Grand Island College

The annual meeting of the board of trustees was held March 7 with Mr. James R. Foree, president of the board, as chairman. At the invitation of the trustees the members of the committee on institutional education were present as guests. The six trustees elected to the board were C. J. Pope, of Lincoln, George Sutherland, R. C. Woodruff and A. B. Newell, of Grand Island, I. W. Carpenter and C. V. Nelson of Omaha.

The treasurer's report showed that the college is paying current expenses and gradually reducing its indebtedness. There was money in the building repair fund sufficient to enable the college to pay three old notes, one for $791.47, another $125.00 and the other $500.00. The librarian reported that since September 2, 1921, 127 new books had been added to the library. The report of the registrar showed that 152 students have been enrolled during the year, an increase over last year of about 70 per cent.

The trustees were encouraged by the report made by the department of institutional education in which the college was promised the services of Rev. Allan H. Bissell as field worker, his work to begin the first of May. Mr. Bissell is now serving in the department of promotion and those who have become acquainted with him believe he will do excellent work in the educational field.

The fact that European students were without food, clothing and shelter led students of Grand Island College, to make contributions to the European Student Relief Fund. Not satisfied with this, however, without any suggestion from the faculty those who eat at the college dining room, voted to do without dessert, and at noon have the Russian meal, of milk or cocoa and bread, for one week. This saved about $35.00, which has been sent to the students in Europe.

The college is giving hearty cooperation to the Continuation Campaign of the New World Movement. At the request of the president many of the students and all but one member of the faculty have made pledges which will be paid before April 30. The pledges given by faculty members are designated to the college and some of the trustees have followed their example.

SOUTH DAKOTA

APRIL 1 DR. JOHN ERNEST COOK takes up his work as executive secretary of the Baptist Council of Richmond, Va. He has been with the Watertown church for nearly four years.

IN 1891 THE FIRST GERMAN BAPTIST Church of Emery, S. D. received a gift of $500 from the church edifice gift fund of The American Home Mission Society to assist in completing its house of worship. Since then the church has prospered and recently decided that it was able to refund the gift it had received so many years ago. A check for the full amount was paid December, 1921, and a few weeks later the church adopted a resolution of appreciation and mailed it to the society.

A PAGEANT, "The Striking of America's Hour," was given by the women of the missionary society of the church at Mobridge. It was received with enthusiasm and netted about $75. This work is significant in the light of the fact that Mobridge Church is only thirteen months old, organized by Dr. Geo. E. Burlingame Feb. 6, 1921, with twenty-four charter members and some others to be received as charter members upon their baptism. The membership has grown to forty-six, nine of these received since Jan. 1, when Rev. J. O. Parrott became pastor.

REV. S. FRASER LANGFORD of First Church, Redlands, reports a splendid revival service under the direction of Miss Amy Lee Stockton and the Wilde-Knight Quartet. The total attendance during the campaign was 18,000 people, the largest attendance being between 1,200 and 1,300 people. There were sixty-two decisions to join the church during the meetings, forty-two have been baptized and the remainder came by letter and experience. This makes 421 people who have joined this church in the last two and one-half years.

Rev. Thomas P. Holloway: In Memoriam

REV. THOMAS P. HOLLOWAY, executive secretary of the New Jersey Convention, died on the evening of Monday, March 20. In the very midst of his toil, God called him. He was on his way to preach at a little New Jersey country church on March 12 when overtaken with pneumonia which resulted in his death a week later. No church ever called on him in vain for any service that he was able to render. He was never too busy or too over-burdened to give of himself and his labor for God.

Dr. Holloway, was born in Burlington, N. J., in 1865. His parents removed to Philadelphia in his early life, and most of his boyhood was spent in that city. When about sixteen he was converted, and united with the Tenth Church, then under the pastoral care of Dr. A. J. Rowland. He was educated at South Jersey Institute, the University of Pennsylvania and Crozer Seminary. Bucknell University conferred on him the degree of D. D. in 1915. His first pastorate was at Bustleton, Pa., where he rebuilt and paid for a parsonage. After a fruitful ministry of six years, he became pastor of the Huntington Church, Baltimore, where he remained for four years. During this pastorate there were many accessions to the church and the auditorium was enlarged and improved. While in Baltimore Dr. Holloway was active in state work and was strongly urged to accept the executive secretaryship of the Maryland state convention, but this he declined. The next four years of his ministerial life were spent as pastor of the College Street Church of Annapolis, Md., where a fine new meeting house was built and paid for and much successful work was done among the officers and students of the United States Naval Academy a number of whom were baptized.

From Annapolis Dr. Holloway removed to Wilmington, Del. where he became pastor of the Second Church. His ministry of eleven years in Wilmington was a great success. A splendid church edifice was built and paid for, many were baptized and benevolences of the church greatly increased. He was one of the three ministers specially responsible for the passage of proper state marriage laws and was recognized through the state as one of the leaders of evangelical sentiment.

Feeling called to war work, Dr. Holloway offered his services to the government and spent eleven months in camp pastorate. On retiring from this service he was unanimously called to the pastorate of the First Church, Kalamazoo, Mich., one of the leading churches of the Middle West and closely associated with Kalamazoo College. His ministry there has been eminently successful in every way.

At the funeral services held in the Peddie Memorial Church, Newark, N. J., Rev. J. Earle Edwards paid him the following tribute:

"Our chief executive is living and giving today in the great advance and he is living in us, and giving to us, and to all the world besides, as he never has given before. Our Lord has in the flesh interpreters of his divine life. Our chief executive was an interpreter of his Christ.

"This son of God reproduces in us a sense of the comprehensiveness of Christianity. He was a man—he said what he thought, when he ought, and with a smile. He has rebuked us; and told us how he appreciated what we were doing. He enjoyed our developing. An indefatigable worker, but never too busy to receive his beloved companion of earth in the inner office while the other callers might wait just a moment. A leader of men, he over and over again told us that the greatest assets of the Kingdom of God in New Jersey Convention were the pastors of the local churches. A friend of all he was the counsellor of youth; scores of young men and women went out from the churches of which he was pastor into colleges; and they came back stronger Christians. They did not lose their faith. He had a passion for men.

"Our chief executive was a prophet. To him Jesus Christ could save the whole man and through the whole man the whole of human society. But none other than Christ. This son of God reproduces in you and in us all his associates, a sense of the high calling of the Christian ministry. We must be preachers, consecrated to Christ, students of the Word of life, thoroughly trained and thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

Religious Literature

Though other friends may come and go,
And some may stoop to treason,
His books remain, through loss or gain,
And season after season
The faithful friends for every mood,
His joy and sorrow sharing;
For old times' sake, they'll lighter make
The burdens he is bearing.

Oh, he has counsel at his side,
And wisdom for his duty,
And laughter gay for hours of play
And tenderness and beauty,
And fellowship divinely rare,
True friends who never doubt him,
Unchanging love, and God above,
Who keeps good books about him.

"It Is to Laugh"

"When the eyes are shut, the hearing becomes more acute," says a medical authority. We have noticed people trying this experiment in church.—London Opinion

The Irish lad and Yiddish boy were engaged in verbal combat. Finally the subject came down to respective churches.

"I guess I know that Father Harriety knows more than your Rabbi," the little Irish boy insisted.

"Sure, he does; vy not?" replied the Jew boy. "You tell him everything."—Treat 'Em Square.

"Why you call my boy a poor nut?" queried an indignant mother, who confronted the dietitian of a New Jersey charities association the other morning at her office door. And the latter has not yet found a way of convincing Mrs. Caruso that "poor nut" on the face of Angelo's card stands for poor nutrition.—Survey.

Dr. Scrivener of textual criticism fame was once minister of a remote parish in Cornwall, and was visited by another clergyman, who asked the great scholar how his new assistant was getting on.

"I'm sorry to tell you," replied Scrivener, shaking his head, "that he has foot and mouth disease."

"Foot and mouth disease!" said the visitor in horrified tones. "I never knew that human beings were liable to that dreadful malady. I thought it was confined to the lower animals."

"Well," rejoined Scrivener, "my assistant has it, and has it badly. He won't visit, and he can't preach"—Epworth Herald.

Books! Books! Books!

Field work at the Missionary Training School in Chicago prepares the student for work among the foreign-speaking peoples to which she is sent, so that she may not find herself an utter stranger in Porto Rico, Santa Barbara or Mexico. A fascinating story of the classes held in an empty box car for the Spanish-speaking children who live in the Chicago railroad yards was told by Miss Alice T. Hill, instructor in Spanish at the Training School, in the November issue of Missions. If you will look this up and read it you will acquire a background which cannot but make Miss Hill's present appeal for supplies a call to your own soul. She is much in need of English story books for box-car boys from ten to fourteen years old—books such as you used to thrill to when you were a boy or such as your own small sons enjoy today. These Mexican boys also like painting and drawing books of all kinds. All packages should be sent to the Christian Americanization Department of the Woman's Home Mission Society, addressed to Miss Gertrude deClercq at 2969 Vernon Avenue, Chicago.

OBITUARY

MRS. MARGARET W. JAMESON

Mrs. Margaret W. Jameson died Feb. 28, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Bayard T. Brown, after an illness of two years. Mrs. Jameson was the widow of Rev. E. H. E. Jameson who was for many years District Secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society. Besides her daughter she leaves a son, H. A. Jameson of Philadelphia, and six grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the home of her daughter, conducted by her pastor, Rev. F. M. MacKay.

of our young people to attend. Scores of private homes in the Twin Cities will be thrown open to entertain friends. Instead of asking the hotels to make a contribution toward the expense of the convention, the committee is asking them rather to give us the minimum rate so that our guests at the convention may find it possible to secure good accommodations near the convention hall. Ample provision will be made to care for automobiles. All trails lead to the Twin Cities. Let's go.

The auditorium will accommodate 12,000 persons. We can use as much of the building as will be needed. A great chorus choir of 1,000 voices is being arranged.

The entire program is being built up around the motto of the convention, "Forward with Christ." On the first day of the convention the addresses will center around the idea "Forward with Christ in our study life"; the second day, "Forward with Christ in the giving of our money"; the third day, "Forward with Christ in our devotional life"; and the last day, "Forward with Christ in the giving of lives," culminating in the great coronation service Sunday evening.

"Without a vision the people perish." Moses knew the needs of his brethren but neglected to take up the task of leadership for forty years. In the experience at the burning bush there came the crisis of decision and the world is indebted to Moses for his great work. Without that crisis of decision we might never have had the Exodus or the Decalogue. There are thousands of our young people who need a great vision of God. Let us pray that this convention will become the crisis of decision to the thousands of delegates who shall gather. This great opportunity may never come to the young people of the Northwest again. Every pastor, and Sunday-school superintendent and president of Young People's Society—or other church leader should do everything in his power to have as many delegates from his church as possible. Our aim in the Twin Cities is 100 per cent of our resident members registered for the convention. Our aim for the state and Northwest is 100 per cent of our churches represented by delegates—as many as possible.

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

A CHOIR TO BE PROUD OF

By H. W. PORTER

The choir of the Huntingdon Baptist Church of Baltimore, Md., earnestly desires to realize and to be what a choir should be as a leader of the worship of God.

Before each service the pastor and choir assemble in the Sunday-school room for prayer, and then enter the auditorium as a body.

At each rehearsal the thought is impressed that worship is the reason for the existence of the choir. Rehearsals close with some passage from God's Word and with prayer.

Words of anthems are carefully scrutinized, and an anthem is not used if the words are unscriptural or if they are meaningless, for it is realized that the words are the important factor, the music being the medium of impartation.

The choir is like a family, having interest in each other, and the choir leader is always looked to by the members in their joys and sorrows, and they seek his prayers and advice in their troubles.

Likewise the pastor's relation to the choir is very close. When the present pastor accepted the call to this church he publicly assigned the choir as one reason for his acceptance.

The choir is on the pastor's right, and the director stands with him on the pulpit platform, ever ready to cooperate with the pastor throughout the service.

The organist is not only efficient as a musician, but in hearty sympathy with the director and choir, both musically and spiritually. His evident desire is to glorify God in what he is doing.

The relation between the church and the choir is also sympathetic, and it cooperates by informing the director of any good voices that may be heard in the congregation. Instead of this choir being the "war department" of the church, it and the church are truly one.

A fine young soprano who had to join another church and so connected herself with its choir later, reported that the drilling was not as thorough, the family feeling not present, and that especially she missed the spiritual tone.

The choir likes to sing any good anthem that praises the Lord Jesus, but it greatly delights in having some that bring it down to hard work. In rehearsing one of the Lorenz Publishing Company's cantatas it doubled on rehearsals and offered to remain each time as late as proved necessary. The choir has several times gone to other churches and institutions to render the cantatas it has learned.

At present its membership includes nine sopranos, five altos, six tenors, five basses, and the balance is good, as is manifest when the choir sings unaccompanied. It includes a male quartet and female quartet, and is also divided into first and second of each part, so can readily sing in men's chorus, in women's chorus, or in eight parts.

It chiefly uses the Lorenz publications and has acquired a fine library carefully selected and so arranged that any anthem can be instantly taken out; the record is kept of each anthem, its composer, where found, and when used.

Altogether the choir trusts that it is to some extent realizing its desire to truly worship God.—The Choir Leader.

MUSIC REVIEW

From J. Fischer & Bro., New York, N. Y.

A Sprig of Rosemary.....Koenmenich ($5.50)
Il était une fois.....Murray-Davey ($5.60)
Myosotis.....Dunn
Call Me Thine.....Forsyth

The first two of interest to singers in search of novelty material for their programs. The first is a sympathetic setting of a poem by Amy Lowell, calling for no great feats of vocalism, and promising appeal for its melodic directness. It is somewhat unusual to find an American publisher putting out a song with only the French text, especially so when the foreign text is not of that evanescent quality that defies successful transition to another language. But, whatever the reason animating the issuance of the second title listed above with only a foreign text, it is none the less a very effective song; especially so for the singer with a light, high, lyric voice. The range is quite restricted, and the melody appealing.

In Myosotis we observe that the attractiveness of the mood-coloring is not sufficient to overcome the diffuseness of the melodic outline. Seekers of delicate shadings of sentiment will be interested in the song. When one picks up a published work by Mr. Forsyth there is always a comfortable feeling that nothing will be revealed that is not technically polished, mechanically correct and saying a worthwhile thought in a sane definite fashion. This little song is no exception to this rule. The coy humor of the lines by Samuel Taylor Coleridge is well brought out by the clever manipulations of the saucy music.

The Choir Leader for March, 1922.

This issue of a splendid monthly choir magazine is titled as the "Easter Number," and it well lives up to the designation. Effective festival anthems by Bell, Ashford, Wilson, Heyser and Spence provide valuable and effective material for the special music of this season. And besides the usual thought-provoking editorials, we find some interesting articles by Porter, von Berge, Bannard, Hackett, and others; all in all, a most valuable series of practical points for the organist and choir director.

NEW ORGAN FOR U. OF I.

The church for Baptist students at the University of Illinois, Champaign, is attempting to complete its equipment by the installation of a pipe organ. It now has $1,000 in cash; the kind of organ needed can be secured for $3,750. The students are trying to raise the remaining $2,750 in a special Easter offering, which, because of the Easter recess, will be taken Sunday, April 9. Any wishing to have a part in this offering will mail checks to Rev. Martin S. Bryan, University pastor, before April 9, he will place them in the offering. The church is now having a special eight-weeks' course of fifty students in Sunday-school teaching training.

Must Missionaries Come Home?

CAN our conscience endure having to live with them if they are recalled? Would not their presence torment us with the recollection that we failed them at a time of crisis, that in an hour of the most dire and universal need everywhere for a Savior, we actually reversed the flow of the evangelizing stream?

In apostolic days, as now, missionaries sometimes came home from the field for various reasons—to report progress and declare how graciously God had owned their work, to secure new recruits to meet the enlarging demands of the task, to confirm the faith of the churches which had sent them out. But never did they return at the behest of churches which had wearied of the burden of their support.

What if, in an economic situation similar to ours, the early Christians had recalled their representatives? It is difficult to imagine, but suppose such a passage as Acts 11:27-30, quoted in the left hand column below, read instead like the right hand column:

"And in these days came prophets. . . And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world.

"Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren . . . which also they did."

Then the disciples took counsel together concerning this matter and sent messengers to them that labored in the gospel at Joppa and in Tarsus and in the region of Tyre and Sidon, saying, "Because of the famine that is come upon the world it is too great a burden that we should longer give you sustenance; we therefore give it as our judgment that ye shall no longer proclaim the gospel among the Gentiles, but return to the places whence ye went out."

Somehow it doesn't sound quite right. It simply wasn't done in the apostolic churches. The recall of missionaries for want of support is a strictly modern procedure, difficult to buttress with scripture.

Must they come home? We are in council now, more than a million of us Northern Baptists, in these fateful spring days, to reach a conclusion. Shall we write a new and strange chapter for the Acts of the Apostles? Or shall we not rather rewrite the old record:

" . . . Great dearth throughout all the world. Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren, which also they did."

Easter

ONCE more Easter pours its tides of gladness and exultant life over all the earth. The churches burgeon with bloom, the choirs chant with rapture, the returning sun confirms the great hope as he arises. Easter day is come again! Oh, for the Easter faith! Shall these dead live again? Can the desolate waste spaces of the earth bring forth bud and leaf and fruit? Can the sleeping peoples be awakened? Can dying races renew their ancient vigor? Can the seats of Mammon become the City of God?

Hear the parable of Easter; the parable of the healing waters, the awakening sun, the risen Christ. In dry valleys desolate stretches of sage brush need only the touch of the waters stored in the mountains to become gardens and fruitful orchards.

The cold fields, bare and sodden, burst into bloom under the fingers of the sun. The heart of man, long numbed with pain and sin, trembles into life with the coming of Christ. We have water enough and sun enough and gospel enough to transfigure the earth. We need to become channels of blessing.

—Helen Barrett Montgomery.

Fresh from the Field

At the March meeting of the executive committee of the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board 178 applications were received and approved for membership in the retiring pension plan. This is the largest number received in any month since the plan was inaugurated.

Humane Sunday is to be observed this week on April 30 and Be Kind to Animals week from April 24-29. It is expected that there will be many special programs in Sunday schools and young people's societies.

Dr. Frederick F. Shannon, pastor of Central Church, is to be the speaker at the noon-day meetings held under the auspices of the Chicago Church Federation during Easter week, April 10-14, at the First Methodist Church, Chicago, Clark and Washington Streets, from 12:10 to 12:40 o'clock.

Mr. Russell Morris Brougner has accepted a call to the Tabernacle Church, Chicago, and began his work April 1. He is to continue his studies during April.

The sixty-seventh session of the Southern Baptist Convention will open in the city of Jacksonville, Fla., on May 17 and will adjourn on the Monday following. Sessions are to be held in the Billy Sunday Tabernacle.

The new federal prohibition chief in Pennsylvania is a Baptist minister, J. Thomas Davis, former pastor and Y. M. C. A. worker at Blairsville. He continues to supply nearby churches on Sundays. He was county chairman for Indiana County in the New World Movement campaign.

Home Secretary P. H. J. Lerrigo of the Foreign Mission Society is receiving many invitations to address churches, conventions, and other organizations regarding his recent observations in Belgian Congo. Dr. Lerrigo has a stirring story to tell and everywhere he is heard with interest. The churches are stimulated by the addresses based on his visit to Africa and his study of mission work in the Congo Mission.

The following missionaries, returning to their stations, sailed from Vancouver, B. C., on March 18: Dr. William Axling of Japan, head of Tokyo Tabernacle, and known as the missionary statesman of Japan; Dr. Ma Saw Sa of Rangoon, superintendent of Lady Duffering Hospital, and one of our Golden Jubilee guests; Najaki San of Osaka, Japan, dean of the Osaka Bible Training School, another of our Jubilee guests; Miss Amy Acock of Yokohama, Japan; Miss Anna V. Johnson of Manila, Philippine Islands; Rev. and Mrs. A. G. Adams of Shanghai, China; Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Steadman of Morioka, Japan, sailed from Vancouver on March 22. It will be remembered that Mr. Steadman was formerly in charge of the Fukun Maru, our Gospel Ship in the Inland Seas, until his ill health forced him to live in a cooler part of Japan.

Dr. E. P. Brand, formerly state secretary for Illinois, writes from Tucson, Arizona, which place he reached recently in his travels, that he and Mrs. Brand are having a fine vacation but will return a month earlier than planned owing to the fact that the Northern Baptist Convention meets in Indianapolis in June instead of in Seattle in July.

To perpetuate the name of Ernest L. Tustin, late director of the Department of Welfare of Philadelphia, and the former dearly loved president of the Northern Baptist Convention, the city council of Philadelphia has set aside a tract of land to be called the Ernest L. Tustin Recreation Center. This playground, says the Bucknell Alumni Monthly, had been planned by Mr. Tustin for the benefit of the inmates of the City's Institution, and his plans will be completed by the city.

The many friends of Dr. Frederick A. Agar, church efficiency secretary of the General Board of Promotion, as well as the wide circle of readers of his former books, will be delighted to hear that he is publishing a new book, "Manual of Church Methods," which will be off the press during the month. The "Manual of Church Methods" deals in an interesting but concise and business-like way, with the organization and management of the local church. It points out obvious pitfalls and difficulties, and indicates the remedies for them. In general, it performs for every local church in the country, fortunate enough to secure a copy of the book, the same service that Dr. Agar has extended through his lectures and advice to the churches that he has visited. Dr. Agar has won the title of "The Doctor for Sick Churches" through his former work along this line. He has helped revolutionize and revivify hundreds of Baptist churches through the country, and has been loaned for the same purpose to churches of other denominations. Several of his former books are used for church study.

All Southern California pastors gathered in Los Angeles recently for a day of prayer for the success of the campaign. Two churches, the Temple Church of Los Angeles, and the First Church of Pasadena, have each taken $50,000 as a goal for new pledges. The Temple Church has already secured $15,000 of this amount from two families among its members.

In Minnesota Mr. Theodore Christianson of Dawson has withdrawn from the congressional race against Andrew J. Volstead. The reason given is that opposition to Volstead is almost entirely on account of the part he has played in prohibition enforcement. Mr. Christianson believes in such enforcement and would not hinder it in any way.

Evangelist J. N. Edmondson of Atwood, Ill., closed a campaign with the First Church, Kansas City, Kansas, Rev. Lewis C. Bowerman, pastor, on March 19, with some seventy-five conversions.

Would You Eat This Food

If you were in Russia, you would face the grim alternative of uneatable food or death from starvation

Bread is made of straw, potato parings and weeds.
People are eating leaves, roots, grass, bark of trees—never before considered fit for man or beast.
Dogs and cats have long since disappeared from many villages.
In one village 2500 horses have been reduced to 10.
In their famine madness, many people are resorting to cannibalism.

Twelve Million People are starving and two-thirds of all Russia's population are on hunger rations. Think of the children!

A Gift of Ten Dollars Will Send:

49 pounds of flour
25 pounds of rice
20 pound cans of milk
10 pounds of sugar
10 pounds of fats
3 pounds of tea

Total 117 pounds of food for $10.

Larger gifts will make available correspondingly larger quantities of food.

Immediate help is necessary. The Foreign Mission Society is prepared to receive contributions for relief in Russia. Funds will be expended through and with the approval of the American Relief Administration, Herbert Hoover, Chairman.

Send all contributions designated "Russian Relief," either to your State Promotion Director, or to

Enjoy Poor Health

As a pastor we found that our ministerial peace depended upon frequent calls upon certain saints. In one case we well remember the rebukes we received when the intervals were too long. The good woman always responded to our greeting "How are you?" "Well, elder, I enjoy very poor health." She did. It was her stock in trade. Without her human ills life would have been tedious to her. We cannot help but wonder what some folks would talk about if the denomination should suddenly appear without spot or wrinkle or any such thing. Life would be so changed that even THE BAPTIST would be a little lonesome. What would be the subject of conversation when the brethren passed this way?

Killam's Kollum

They Know a Good Thing

What other Baptist weekly newspaper gives two full pages each week to the work of the young people? Silence. Young folks know that THE BAPTIST is giving them a square deal. They mean to build up the subscription list. In recent issues of the paper the distribution of the 4,000 new annual subscriptions has been given. Southern California was allotted eighty as its quota. The church at Fresno sent in twenty-one which is more than 25 per cent of the allotment for the whole convention. East Washington has a quota of twenty-one and the World Wide Guild of Spokane has sent in eleven of this number. Think of it! Watch this column for facts on the campaign.

Then Why Quote It?

The Reformed Church Messenger quotes in full in its editorial pages our observations on denominational jumping-jacks italicizing certain parts. Its comment is, "Of course it should not be told in Gath, nor whispered in the streets of Askalon, that such a state of affairs is possible in the Reformed Church. Who does not know that—well, in some of our denominational gatherings modesty and self-restraint are so universal that the occasional visitor is forcibly reminded of those old-time prayer meetings which were noted for their long and painful silences! The kind of jumping jack above referred to may be very common in some communions, but what a rara avis in the Reformed Church!" Note the exclamation marks. It reminds us of one of our youthful habits. When we told an unusually big one we kept our fingers crossed which meant that we did not mean what we said. The Messenger's editor must have had his fingers crossed.

Ingenious but Impotent

A certain man of our acquaintance has an ingenious mind. He has so manipulated the machinery of a cuckoo clock that the wooden bird will step out of its retreat and say "cuckoo" 200 times without stopping. It took considerable time and thought to accomplish this feat. We are worldly enough to ask if the result justifies the effort. We have another friend of a theological turn of mind. He has worked out a theological system with maps of all the past, present and future. His system is quite as ingenious as our friend's cuckoo clock. To us it has little practical bearing on the matter of living a genuine Christian life. It reminds us of the clock with its wooden bird saying "cuckoo, cuckoo." We must confess that we have little interest in either the clock or the system. We have our own hobby. "THE BAPTIST and Missions, etc., etc."

Rev. A. L. N. Sorenson, pastor at Cedar Falls, Iowa, has accepted a call to the Baptist Temple, Racine, Wis., and will begin his work on May 1.

"The Hope of the World" is the title of the beautiful picture by Harold Copping included among the free picture charts issued by the Department of Missionary Education in connection with the graded foreign mission stories now being used. This picture, wonderfully expressive of the general theme, "The Kingdom and the Nations," is made available by the courtesy of the Missionary Education Movement which owns the rights. Only one free copy of the picture is allowed for each school ordering the foreign mission stories and charts. Lithographed copies of this picture of Christ in the midst of a group of little children of other lands, may be secured for 35 cents through the Literature Department of the General Board of Promotion.

Rev. T. W. Young, pastor of the First Church, Columbia, Mo., began his new pastorate with the First Church, Corinth, Miss., on April 1. With a splendid membership and a fine plant, he is expecting a great work. During the nine years in Columbia, despite the heavy losses inevitable in a college town, the church grew from 550 to 890 members and the annual income of the church increased from about $6000 to more than $16,000.

The Department of Missionary Education, after a careful study of order cards for the graded missionary stories, finds that nearly 800 schools had never used the stories prior to 1921. Estimating that at least 200 new schools were reached by states filling their own orders, this means that approximately 1000 new Bible schools used the stories during the year.

Rev. C. R. Osborn, pastor of the First Church, Coldwater, Mich., has accepted the call of the Morgan Park Church, Chicago, and will enter upon his new duties on June 1.

Of seven young people baptized in the First Church, of Madison, Wis., on March 19, six were students in the University of Wisconsin.

The new Beulah Church, West Elizabeth, Pa., dedicated last June free from debt by Rev. Eugene Neubauer, of Elizabeth, bids fair to treble its membership this year. In recent evangelistic services its original membership was doubled.

A recent statement to the effect that the American Bible Society was to discontinue its manufacturing plant at the Bible House, New York, has been interpreted by some as meaning that the society was to give up its publishing business. This is not true. It will continue as a publishing house, with headquarters at the same place. It will continue also to control its own plates. The change merely means that the society has become convinced that it can do its printing more economically than in its own plant. There will be an actual increase in the output of the Scriptures.

The fiftieth anniversary of the ordination of Rev. A. J. Bonsall was celebrated by the Sandusky Street Church, Pittsburgh, on March 19, where he has been associate pastor, 1904-06, and pastor from March 1, 1906. Previous pastorates were in Apollo, Pa.; 37th Street Church, Pittsburgh, Erie, and Rochester. On June 7, 1897, Dr. Bonsall was admitted to the Beaver Bar, with the privilege of practicing law.

Attention: Delegates to Indianapolis

The corresponding secretary has visited Indianapolis to confer with the local committee of arrangements concerning its work for the next meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention, June 14-20. This committee consists of the chairmen of eighteen sub-committees. Their work is far advanced. Every member is enthusiastic and, under the expert guidance of Mr. W. A. Caperton, is doing fine work. The building in which the meetings will be held seats 10,000 persons, and is convenient of access. The acoustics are perfect, and an ordinary conversational tone of voice can be heard throughout the auditorium. One thousand rooms have been reserved at hotels. Other thousands of rooms will be reserved in homes and apartments. It would be well for delegates to write immediately to the Indianapolis hotels directly for reservations, or else to Mr. F. A. Hayward, 729 Occidental Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind. Secretary of the local committee, for information. There will be another large convention of representatives of Junior Chambers of Commerce of the United States which will overlap our convention for a day or two at the beginning. Promptness is exceedingly desirable on the part of those who wish to attend. Also, where it can be done, it is advised that two should share a room.

Just as soon as arrangements are completed the manager of transportation of the Northern Baptist Convention will announce through our denominational papers, and also through the state convention secretaries what arrangements have been made with the railroad companies. The Indianapolis local committee will also have its information in shape very soon, and will have folders announcing arrangements, names of hotels, and other matters, which can be had upon application to this local committee. This statement is not at all intended to supplant or interfere with the work of the local committee, but to tell the denomination of the splendid work of this body of men and women.

The corresponding secretary will have printed blank forms of credentials. These may be had from the secretaries of the different state conventions to whom application should be made by the pastors and clerks of churches. It is desirable that these printed forms should be obtained in every case and used, although proper credentials may be typewritten or written with pen and ink. The by-laws of the convention provide as follows:

A CHALLENGE FROM NEBRASKA

The following telegram, signed by Walter I. Fowle, was received at the New York headquarters on March 30: "Over 250 Nebraska Baptists in convention assembled send greetings and assure you of their prayers and hearty support. Absolute harmony, new inspiration and deep devotional spirit. Larger program outlined. Nebraska challenges other states to unite in making week closing April 30 Self-Denial Week with supplemental sacrificial gifts to save denominational calamity. Freeman tower of strength."

Article I: Membership

Section 1. The convention shall be composed of accredited delegates as follows:

(a) Any Baptist church in the United States may appoint one delegate, and one additional delegate for every 100 members.

(b) Accredited officers and members of boards of managers of cooperating organizations shall be delegates ex officio.

(c) Officers and members of committees of the convention during their terms of service shall be delegates ex officio.

No other classes of delegates will be allowed to register. The credentials from churches in every case should be signed by the clerk of the church or its pastor. Each church may appoint one delegate and an additional delegate for every 100 members. A church with fifty members is entitled to a delegate. A church with 100 members is entitled to two delegates. No provision is made for representatives for fractions of 100. A church with 599 members is entitled to one delegate and also an additional delegate for the 500 members which will make six delegates. All credentials will be carefully inspected, and as we must depend upon conformity to our by-laws, it is hoped the churches will be careful not to exceed the number of delegates to which they are entitled. These written credentials in proper form must be presented with enrolment cards to be filled out at the place of registration in Indianapolis together with $2 registration fee.

Inquiries are often made as to why this registration fee of $2 is demanded. This fee is not at all adequate to cover the expenses of the privileges which the delegates to the convention enjoy. Printed reports are given to the delegates during the convention sessions. The Baptist every day will issue an edition containing convention news and the programs for the next day's meetings. For the general convention inspirational sessions speakers are invited to address us, and their railroad expenses and hotel bills for one day (or if they speak on Sunday, for two days) are paid. The brilliant work of the recording secretary and his three able assistants is exacting day and night, and their expenses and the cost of typewriters who copy documents for the press and prepare the minutes and do other valuable work are also paid. In addition to all this each registered delegate is furnished with a copy of the annual of the convention containing its proceedings and reports and information that every intelligent Baptist should possess. Two dollars from each delegate will not begin to cover the cost of his share in all these things which the convention provides for the delegates.

It should be borne in mind that there is no salaried officer of the convention, except the manager of transportation who annually saves by his work to the treasuries of our great organizations many times more than the cost of his department; that no officer of the convention has ever received a penny of salary, and that very frequently committees and individuals have served our denomination at their own expense, often very large; that not a member of the executive committee has his expenses paid to any meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention, all of them going at their own charges and glad to render any service they can to the denomination.

Ex officio credentials will be furnished by the Corresponding Secretary.

W. C. BITTING, Corres. Secy.

The Gospel of the Resurrection

THE gospel of the New Testament disciples is the gospel of the resurrection. They went everywhere preaching a Christ who had been proved to be the son of God with power by the resurrection from the dead. And even to the uttermost bounds of the west the news of a risen Christ brought joy to men's hearts. With such a Christ they could live; for such a Christ they could die; in his name they could defy all the powers of hell.

The night had been long; men could not help being glad when the day-spring appeared. Sin and death have been from the beginning of time twin shadows—the heaviest and deepest of all the shadows which have settled upon the earth. Even today millions of men beat helplessly upon the door of the tomb. Their pitiful prayers and offerings are a vivid witness to the despair which it brings to them. Even people who have long had faith stumble sometimes in the presence of the grim reaper. Death is so cold and hard and cruel a fact, it has such a way of blotting out the whole landscape besides, that they falter before it. Only when there is in them the living spirit of an undying Christ can they say surely that nothing, either of things present or things to come, can affright them.

In these days when the warm winds come again from the South, when the song of the birds is heard across the fields and in the city parks, when the frozen ground yields to the penetrating rains, our thought comes again to the fact that Christ arose. It was not possible for him to be holden of death. He is master of all the powers of darkness. He lives, and all those who are his live in him. It is fitting that our churches are decked with flowers, that our children wear their brightest dresses, that our choirs sing their happiest anthems, that our ministers preach their most cheery sermons. For life is triumphant and the whole air is vibrant with hope.

The world seems always to follow its appointed round. The things that have been are now and shall be again. First the night, then the day. First the struggle, then the peace. First the overwhelming onslaught of the adversary and confusions everywhere, and then the quiet and the fruit of victory. God is not a god of inertia; through all the restlessness of the world he is bringing to pass his good and holy will. We feel like saying a word of cheer even to our harried and perplexed Baptist churches of the North. We have been traveling for many months a weary and trying, but not an unusual road.

If we will take a look backwards in Christian history, we shall find that we have once and again followed a fixed cycle. First, there has been a period of interest in material things and of growing doctrinal laxity; then a period of agitation in which men who have felt that they were moved by the spirit of God have arisen to stir the multitude and not always wisely; then a time when the agitation has crystallized into movements, not altogether dissimilar to the Fundamentalist movement of our day; then a period of discussion and explosion, with general unrest; and then at last a time of reconstruction and readaptation accompanied by a new and strong impulse to move forward in the work of the Lord. The Lord makes even the ferment of men's minds to praise him. We are well through the process now, having come about to the period of the explosions. The night is far spent; the day is at hand. Let us not be weary or discouraged. Indianapolis may bring controversy; things may be said and done there which will hurt men's hearts; but beyond Indianapolis lies the new day for the Baptist hosts. The Lord still lives and men and women who trust in him and spend themselves for him will not be put to shame.

The fundamental of all fundamentals for the Baptist is Jesus Christ. Our gospel comes from him and our hope centers in him. We fall before him as Thomas did with words of adoration: "My Lord and my God!" We take his command as the law of our life: "Follow me," "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." We stand by him at the cross, but even more do we greet him at the door of the empty tomb. He is not dead but living, and evermore goes before us. So long as we are really one in him, we shall be one with each other, no matter how often our theological minds disagree. So long as we are sincerely devoted to the doing of his will, we cannot be permanently estranged from each other.

Here, then, is the gladdest of all good messages: Christ is risen. It comes to the sinful and the sorrowful—Christ is risen. It comes to the perplexed and the doubting—Christ is risen. It comes to the weary and the struggling—Christ is risen. It comes to the strong and the hopeful, to give firmer hope—Christ is risen. It comes to individuals and to churches and to the denomination—Christ is risen. And all our difficulties and antagonisms shall disappear in him. The way out for every one of us is in a new and vital experience of the risen and conquering and comforting and interceding Christ.

Editorial Comment

SAY IT WITH FLOWERS

In the street car and on the bill-board one faces the slogan adopted by the florists of the country in promoting their industry: "Say it with flowers." Thousands of men and women to whom a gracious message has been sent through such a medium will bear witness to the effectiveness of the word. As one sits and thinks of the slogan, and then lets his mind wander to his home, to his church and to his denominational affairs, as he meditates on what he has said and on the telling things he would like to say, no harm will be done if he allows this thought to come into his mind, "Say it with flowers." Multitudes are efficient in the art of stinging; Christian people ought at least to become proficient in the art of using speech as a means of blessing to others.

MINISTERS AS JURORS

Some Detroit ministers recently served as jurors in the Recorder's Court in that city, having waived their exemption. Their conduct was watched with interest by opposing sides, some of whom suspected that they would be guilty of undue severity and others of whom thought that for sentimental reasons or softness of heart they would lean the other way. Both views have proved incorrect, according to the Detroit News, which says:

"Juries with ministers as members, and sometimes with ministers as foremen, have returned verdicts of conviction and acquittal quite regardless of the nature of the cases or the reputation of the accused, but in quite faithful accordance with the evidence. A least one alleged bootlegger was adjudged innocent by a jury on which there sat a Jewish rabbi and a Christian pastor. Thus, the ministers have shown themselves to be very much as other men who cherish high ideals, and are at the same time intensely human."

This most interesting discovery that ministers are human is worthy of being passed on as is also the conclusion of the News, which might profitably be heeded by many ministers: "It is to be hoped that the clergy of other cities will follow the example. It is an excellent thing both for the people and for the churches to have the ministry serve in this capacity. The distance between the average man and the average minister has sometimes seemed 'as far as the East is from the West,' and without any good reason therefor. A preacher should know men as well as books. It might be mutually profitable if the man in the street had more than a nodding acquaintance with a clergyman. The average man is not naturally irreligious; the average minister of the Gospel is not a molycoddle, nor does he carry an atmosphere about him of supercilious piety."

GOLDEN RULE NECESSARY IN BUSINESS

A letter from John D. Rockefeller, Jr., written to the students at Brown University in connection with meetings held there by Sherwood Eddy, expresses the conviction that the Golden Rule is the best principle upon which to conduct a permanently successful business. In urging this he says:

"I am convinced that the progress of civilization, not only in this country but throughout the world, is dependent on the general adoption and practice of the principles of the religion of Jesus Christ. I believe that the Golden Rule is the best principle upon which to conduct a permanently successful business, and that its application offers the only real solution of the problem of capital and labor. I believe that the principles of justice, truth, clean living, service, sacrifice and love for God and one's fellow men, enunciated by Christ, have vitality and power only as they are applied to life in all of its aspects—not one day a week, but seven. Beset with temptations and difficulties, like every other man, what I want is a workday religion, and not a religion that is put on with one's Sunday clothes and laid off at the close of the Sabbath Day. No college man is strong enough or big enough or self-reliant enough, whatever he may think or say, to live a really worth-while life without that kind of a religion."

Others besides college men may profit by advice as clear and sane as this.

NOT A TIME TO REST

An occasional church is acting as if the prohibition question were settled and for all time. That is a pipe dream. Let the Anti-Saloon League and the W. C. T. U. cease work and prohibition would not last more than a decade. Now is the time for all good men and churches to stand firm for the defense of their country. There is no occasion for discouragement.

It has required seventy years of vigilant effort to secure a fairly good enforcement of the compulsory school law; yet in spite of an acknowledged 75 per cent enforcement of the prohibition law in two years, some people say prohibition is a failure. An inquiry from Australia brought out the fact that 115 chambers of commerce in the United States and Canada reported favorably on the success of prohibition, twenty-seven unfavorably, and thirteen were non-committal. Seeborn Rowntree, the English manufacturer, said, "On the whole the thing is working with extraordinary success." A German professor from Wiesbaden reported to his fellow countrymen, "The American people have broken the poison fangs of alcoholism. The liquor trade, if not dead, is dying."

AMERICAN PROHIBITION AS VIEWED IN EUROPE

Whatever information may be given out in the United States by men interested in the liquor business, brewers and others in Europe appear to have first-hand evidence that prohibition in this country is something like the real thing. The wine growers of France have recently been discussing means by which they can make up the loss occasioned by "the collapse of the wine market in America." German and Swiss brewers have been discussing means of preventing prohibition from sweeping Europe. The president of the new Republic of Austria avows himself a prohibitionist and congratulates America on what it has done. Everywhere there is restlessness abroad among brewers and distillers for fear that more of their markets are to be cut off. Recent ratification of the amendment by New Jersey has hardly been reassuring to them. So perhaps America itself need not swallow whole all that is being said by its "wet" press. Prohibition is working as well as any law and better than a great many, as its foreign enemies are compelled to admit.

THIS MIGHT HAVE BEEN IN YOUR TOWN

A recent letter to Mrs. Montgomery from Mrs. Milton Fish, of Huntington Park, Cal., has this interesting paragraph:

"The week after we came here Los Angeles had a religious census and I had two blocks near our church. There was one noticeably large house in the district. When I called there the woman that answered said that her mother lived there alone and that she was a Scientist. That was usually enough information, but I said, 'All alone in this large house?' 'Well,' she said, 'I told you I and my family are visiting my mother.' Then I said what I had not before, 'You must excuse my asking so many questions but I am a stranger myself. I am the wife of the new pastor of the Baptist Church.' Then I received a most cordial invitation to come in. She told me her husband's business called them all over the world and she had last lived in Burma and had brought home with her to help with the children a Karen girl, a Baptist. Monie We's father is pastor of one of our Karen churches. I invited the girl to the next W. W. G. meeting. The girls were lovely to her. She joined that and their S. S. class. At the W. W. G. meeting this week I asked her how she was getting on with her English and music lessons and she said, 'O, all right. When I came all I wanted was to be a musician but now I want to go back as a missionary to my people. They need the gospel so.' We'll do all we can to keep the flame burning."

This might have happened in your town. The United States is full of people, gathered from every nation under heaven. Has your church ever made a real attempt to establish actual human and Christian contacts with any of them?

SOCIALIST SUNDAY SCHOOLS

"There are now," we read, "120 Socialist Sunday schools in England and many in America. Attendance runs into thousands. These schools have 'Ten Commandments' in the form of short phrases which the children repeat, but there is nothing of God in them. They have lessons with such titles as 'Bloody Sunday,' 'Capitalist Murders,' 'French Revolution,' and 'Red Flag.' Many of the teachers are agnostics. They have hymns which include 'Arise, ye starvelings,' 'The Red Flag,' etc, while the Christian hymn, 'Jesus, Lover of My Soul,' is condemned as an 'unwholesome wail.' They have a doxology beginning, 'No Saviours from on high deliver.' They have a 'Red Catechism' and a 'Children's Magazine' in which they print biographies of 'Socialist saints,' among whom are murderers. In their meetings young 'converts,' as they are called, testify that 'Religion is superstition.' Thus God is blasphemed, the Bible denied, and the Gospel parodied.' The churches of America justly boast of the splendid work they have done in religious education.

But the day has not yet come when a rest can be taken. There is much land to be possessed. Out of these Socialist Sunday schools are coming boys and girls who are infecting their companions with ideas which are directly opposed to Christian faith. The best defense is an attack. Wherever there are gathered groups in which such ideas may find fertile soil a double opportunity is presented to Christian churches to present both by words and by example the Christ as we know him.

THE CUSTOMER IS ALWAYS RIGHT

One of the business rules assiduously taught and acted upon in various large establishments is this: "The customer is always right." That is to say, if there is dispute and no direct proof as to where the right lies, the point of view of the customer is to be taken.

The reason is obvious. One particular sale is not of a great deal of moment but the goodwill of a customer is of importance. Offend a man or woman and there will be lost perhaps, not only his own trade but also that of some of his friends. But there will be lost also that intangible something which makes people like to trade in a particular store and which leads them to speak favorably of it.

Here is a new homiletic rule for pastors, deacons and church workers generally. The application is perhaps not always quite so obvious as in the case of a store dealing in merchandise but it can generally be found. In dealing with men and women, in winning men and women, not much progress will be made unless due consideration is given to their point of view and to their feelings. One has to become all things to all men if many are to be won. Deference and not contradiction suggests the method by which there will come the goodwill essential to a successful Christian ministry or church enterprise.

JARO MADE THE GAVEL

President Montgomery of the Northern Baptist Convention has recently received a gavel made from native wood by students of the Jaro Industrial School, in the Philippines. The letter from Mr. Bigelow which accompanied it states that the gavel was made on the machines which the students have built for themselves to help them climb out of the old industrial rut of their fathers. "We hope," the letter says, "that when you use it to strike the desk of the 1922 convention, it will serve to remind you that we are here and that the school is rapidly growing both in numbers and in influence and that it is acquiring growing pains which are caused by its clothes being too tight. Not only that, but they are very ragged. The whole staff is loyally patching and the student body and alumni are rooting for the old school which all love. Naturally all desire it to have new clothes, large enough and of the proper style. Everybody here will pitch in and the alumni will help too as soon as the Northern Baptists make good on the amounts designated here in the survey."

The more frequently therefore that the president is compelled at Indianapolis to use the gavel, the oftener we shall be reminded that the Orient is waiting for us to carry through to a magnificent finish our as yet uncompleted task.

Evidence for the Resurrection

The witness of the facts, of contemporaries and of history. Personal belief in the life beyond bases itself increasingly on belief in God. Fellowship with him not destroyed by death.

By W. N. DONOVAN

AT least three lines of evidence may be adduced regarding any important historical event. In the first place the exact details of the event may be established. Complete agreement of human witnesses cannot be expected. In the second place, the attitude of contemporaries affords valuable testimony. Here again some conflict is certain. In the third place, if considerable time has elapsed since the occurrence, its effects on later history will afford most valuable evidence of its reality and character. Here, again, human judgments are bound to vary. The last two lines are broader and more convincing. The greatness of any event consists, not in its observable details, but in spiritual forces of which these details are but outward signs.

The Empty Tomb

In regard to the first line of evidence, the knowledge of the immediate facts of the resurrection of Jesus, the testimony is as clear as can be expected for a historical event. It is a matter of human observation whether the body of Jesus could not be found in the tomb where it had been laid. It is a matter of human knowledge whether men and women familiar with his form saw that form and conversed with him for days after his death and burial. On these points the word of men may be taken, and it is clearly given. But no man is competent to say what happened to that body which had been upon the cross. Two main theories have been held in the church. Each has its difficulties. Neither is strict evidence, except as it shows the existence of astonishing facts to be explained. As to these facts the evidence is minute and specific. Jesus was crucified at Jerusalem when Pontius Pilate was procurator and Caiaphas was high priest. On the next morning but one women set out to perform last offices for the body which they thought was soon to decompose. They found no body. They heard a message, "He is risen." They reported to the apprehensive disciples, who gave no credence to their story. Later, indeed, two disciples did investigate and confirmed the story of the empty tomb. During the day the disciples were surprised at the appearances of their risen Lord.

It is popular just now in certain circles to say that the argument from the empty tomb has lost its force. It may be that the argument from minute detail and personal observation has been over-emphasized; but the broader import, the significance of the relation of contemporaries, remains unimpaired. It was not a time when a story like that of the resurrection could circulate unopposed. A fanatical hierarchy had set itself to destroy the influence and memory of Jesus. If his body could have been produced from any tomb, it would not merely have discredited the resurrection narratives; it would have supplied just the touch of bitter humiliation which the excited Jews would have loved to inflict upon the disciples. Identification of that form would have been easy; but this touch was never given. The failure of the Jews of that day to break the force of the stories told by the disciples is very striking. These stories do not come from a time remote from the event. They were told by the very people whose testimony would naturally have greatest weight. Those who knew Jesus most intimately, hence those best qualified to recognize him, were all convinced of the reality of the resurrection appearances. Their evidence has survived tests of sharpest hostility when excitement over the event was at its height. Take one illustration of contemporary hostility. Saul of Tarsus had access to all information available for Jews or Christians. He was a mature man at the time of the resurrection, fanatically prejudiced against the Christians. Had there been a possibility of disproving their claims, Saul would not have neglected it. Saul is a notable fact to be considered when one hears the assertion that positive written accounts of the resurrection come from long after its date. Actually the records are not far removed from their subject matter in point of time. They were published in the lifetime of eye-witnesses. They could have been challenged with first-hand information. The facts of the case had been presented to the very men among whom they occurred. There had been every opportunity for refutation if that were possible. Only about thirty years after Jesus rose, Paul flung at Jewish opponents his assertion that there were still alive apostles and more than 250 others who actually saw the risen Jesus. Had it been possible to controvert this statement, imagine the glee of the Jews seeking to discredit Paul or of the mocking Greek philosophers!

The Perspective of History

Passing now to consider what evidence appears in the perspective of history, Paul himself is a monument to the resurrection. One cannot explain him or the early church without it. Then come the Gospels derived from eye-witnesses. Their text and history is better attested than that of any of the so-called "classics" of human literature. Next, secular history tells of the early persecutions of the followers of the risen Christ. Following closely come the early Christian inscriptions and the thrilling stories of the still-existing catacombs. All subsequent history links on to these Christian accounts. The dates of our business transactions are stated in the "year of our Lord." Every recurring Sunday reminds us that the first day of the week was designated "the Lord's Day" in memory of his leaving the tomb on that day. Through the centuries human thought has steadily adjusted itself to the great fact at the core of the Christian conception of life. Belief in this fact has cre-

Easter Morning

HARK! 'tis the west wind blowing free,
Hark! Swift herald of the dawn;
Faint murmurs answer from the wood;
The night will soon be gone.
Sad soul, shall day from darkness rise
And the rose unfold from the sod,
And the bare, brown hills grow beautiful
When May their slopes has trod—
While they for whom the sun shone fair,
And rose and bird rejoiced the air,
Sleep on, forgot of God?

Depart, drear visions of the night!
We are the dead, not they!
High in God's mansion of delight
They greet immortal day.
Look out! The sky is flushed with gold
In glad, celestial warning;
The cloudy bars are backward rolled
And, gloom and shadows scorning,
O'er grief and death victorious,
Above all glories glorious,
Comes up the Easter morning!

ated what all historians recognize as the greatest altruistic movements in the progress of our race. Because of Jesus hospitals have been founded, orphans have been cared for, slaves have been freed, the weak and helpless have been befriended, new hope and courage have come to human life, men and women have consecrated themselves to human betterment. Historians tell us that the movements which we call "humanitarian" and "philanthropic" come, not from man's enthusiasm for man, but from human devotion to Jesus the Christ. One who ponders the conditions in which he lives must think back to these words, "He is risen." He may not understand them, but he cannot ignore them. If all mention of the resurrection could today be deleted from all the books in existence, thoughtful students would ask what did happen back there in the first century so to change the currents of human thought.

Finally I add a reflection which is not what is ordinarily classed as evidence, yet carries its weight with the Christian, belongs to him peculiarly, the argument of life experience. As more and more of those dear to us pass through the great adventure, as we face it once and again for ourselves, we care less for logical and historical demonstrations of the other life, more for our heart convictions. So my personal belief in the life beyond bases itself increasingly in my belief in God. Death itself cannot destroy my fellowship with the infinite God. Much more was this true of Jesus, partaker with God as none of us men. Does that prove his bodily resurrection? No, it is not offered as proof. It does make keener my sense of its fitness, does make it easier for me to feel the fact. With the passing of the years I find more comfort in the warmth of the last verses of the eighth chapter of Romans than in the accumulation of argument and analogy in the fifteenth chapter of first Corinthians. In the Romans passage glows the certainty that death itself cannot separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. The Christian religion is primarily devotion to a personality, secondarily acceptance of a system of thought. Beyond all abstract argument is the personal touch in the words, "He is risen." Using them, Christians confess their belief in well-attested historical fact, but still more their personal conviction that through this fact life has for them a new sweetness, glory, and reality.

The Resurrection a Vocation

"If by any means I may attain unto the resurrection from the dead"—Phil. 3:11

By CARL C. CASE

OUR own future resurrection is no arbitrary act of an omnipotent God. It will not be an event for which there is no adequate cause. God does not establish an external condition on the basis of which he promises us eternal life. Our resurrection will be a moral affair. In fact our resurrection is an achievement. It is a goal attained. It is a task accomplished.

So was Jesus' resurrection an achievement, for though God raised him from the dead, yet Jesus declared that he himself had power to take up his life again since this commandment had been given him by the Father. No more striking statement of this fact can be found in the New Testament than Paul's affirmation that Jesus "was declared to be the son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead." This demonstration of Christ's sonship was made by Christ's resurrection even as it was to Paul later to whom the resurrection of Jesus was the final proof of the truth of his claims. Only this resurrection of Jesus was "according to the spirit of holiness," in which holiness of life was the condition of the resurrection. So Christ's resurrection was a moral achievement.

In equally striking terms, Paul on another occasion rehearses the eternal history of the Christ who emptied himself of his heavenly glory, took the form of a servant, humbled himself and became obedient unto death. "Therefore," says Paul, "God has highly exalted him and given him a name that is above every name." The resurrection is not here specifically mentioned, but its significance is apparent.

The transfiguration scene reveals the same truth. The theme of conversation between Jesus, Moses and Elijah was the "decease which he was to accomplish at Jerusalem." Death was not to be a martyrdom, nor a suffering to be borne, but a task to be achieved. Beyond this was the resurrection. And while the three were talking, the earthly and material were shot through and irradiated with heavenly glory. It was a prelude to the resurrection and the cause of the transfiguration was the cause of the resurrection.

Christ's Resurrection and Ours

There is a very definite connection between Christ's resurrection and ours. Our resurrection body is to be like his. Christ is to "fashion anew the body of our humiliation that it may be conformed to the body of his glory." "For if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwelleth in you, he that raised up Christ Jesus from the dead shall give life also to your mortal bodies through his spirit that dwelleth in you." "As we have borne the image of the earthy we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

But there can be no similar resurrection for Christ and ourselves except there be a similar moral cause. Christ himself is the cause both of his own resurrection and ours. He promised his constant fellowship to the disciples. "Lo, I am with you all the days," the days of joy and sorrow, of health and sickness, of activity and rest. "I will come unto you," said the Savior, as he promised to his disciples that other friend, the Comforter, who would abide forever. This coming of Jesus forms for us a vital union that on our part springs out of a personal faith. "I have been crucified with Christ; and it is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me; and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the son of God, who loved me and gave himself to die for me."

Paul, indeed, gives a touch of realism to this union between Christ and himself when he says, "For me to live is Christ." More suggestive is the statement to the Galatian Christians, "I am again in travail until Christ be formed in you." Had there been a Bethlehem in each Galatian life where Christ was born again? Was there a reincarnation here through Christ? Was there to be also a Nazareth of growth, a Capernaum of service, a Calvary of death, and beyond a resurrection to a new life? The history of the Christ is to be repeated in each believer, but it will be so because Christ himself is present to furnish both the ideal and the power for the transformation.

Christ on earth was at the same time in heaven. He was living the heavenly life and therefore the resurrection to him was not the possible only, but the necessary, outcome of his life. So our life now should be an ethicizing process. There are two deaths and two kinds of life. We can be near death and yet be tremendously alive. Those that are dead may be more alive than some who are living.

"There is no death! What seems so is transition;

This life of mortal breath
Is but the suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call Death."

We often quote the passage, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things which the Lord hath prepared for them that love him." And there we stop. But the rest of the passage reads, "but the Lord hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." This passage finds its greatest fulfillment in heaven, but it refers immediately and directly to the present life. There is a heaven on earth. There is a resurrection before the resurrection. And the second resurrection is only worth while and possible as the first is lived now.

Spiritual Eyesight Needed

The power that enables us to live the resurrection life now, is the same that produced Christ's resurrection. The one is not moral and the other material. Therefore it needs a spiritual eyesight to see the similarity of the two transactions. In this sense Paul prays for the Ephesians that "the eyes of your heart may be enlightened that ye may know what the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to that working of the strength of his might which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and made him to sit at his right hand in the heavenly places." Paul on another occasion expresses it as the desire of his heart to "know him and the power of his resurrection."

Christ then is the source of our present resurrection life which eventually is to produce our bodily resurrection. "And you did he make alive with him." The baptism by which we proclaimed our faith in Christ is a symbol of this resurrection life. "We were buried therefore with him through baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life." Our present resurrection life is a parallel of Christ's present resurrection life. In fact we have already attained to a resurrection status in Christ. God "has made us alive together with Christ and hath raised us up with him, and made us to sit with him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Both the resurrection and the exaltation of Christ are reproduced in our present life where Christ is repeating our own earthly experiences.

A Present Resurrection

The resurrection of Lazarus was a physical fact. And yet even here Christ emphasizes not the material miracle but the spiritual condition. To Martha who could express her faith in a resurrection at the last day, Jesus declared in favor of a present resurrection as a more vital fact. "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth on me, though he die yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die." The grave is obliterated for the believer. He lives now in Christ; he will continue to live after his body dies. "He that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me, hath eternal life." There is a stone at the door of our heart. A Christ is needed to speak the word that the stone be removed and a Christ is needed who can say and have his command obeyed, "Come forth." Only when heavenly men and women—heavenly in the right sense—walk among men, shall the future resurrection be an established belief. The present heavenly life is the best evidence of the life beyond.

This present resurrection life is not a mere gift of God. Spirituality is more than a contribution of God. It is an attainment that requires action and perseverance. It is made in Christ but it cannot be made without our cooperation. It is a partnership undertaking. The status of the believer must be actualized by endeavor. An old English legal distinction will help us here. A prince may be a king de jure, that is by right, by virtue of succession; but not be king de facto, that is in fact. Or a person may be a king de facto, but not a king de jure. Or one may be both. Naturally the one who is king de jure will seek to make his kingship de facto. So we who have been raised up with Christ must make our resurrection a reality.

Here let us turn to the classical passage on the subject, Colossians, the third chapter: "If ye then were raised together with Christ,"—and we have been—"seek the things that are above, where Christ is, seated on the right hand of God. Set your mind on the things that are above, not on the things that are on the earth. For ye died," de jure, dead, "and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall be manifested, then shall ye also with him be manifested in glory." Then for the next thirteen verses Paul gives two great admonitions, one, "put to death therefore," and the second, "put on therefore." Both of these commands presuppose two states, death and resurrection. Inasmuch, says Paul, as you are dead, put to death the members upon earth. Inasmuch as you have been raised from the dead, assume all the qualities of the heavenly life. Make real the ideal. Actualize your status. Lay claim to your privileges. Really die and really live as you have officially died and live again.

The resurrection life is manifested not only in habits that are heavenly but in a heavenly perception and appreciation of divine things. The development of spiritual judgment does not depend upon the knowledge of facts, but upon spiritual response. "He who wills to do God's will, shall know." "The pure in heart shall see God." We are to be transformed by the renewing of our mind in order that we may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God. Parallel to the development of the resurrection life is the apprehension of the things of the resurrection. Only he who is like Christ can fully appreciate Christ. At last "we shall be like him for we shall see him even as he is." We know we shall be like him for we shall see him as he is, and spiritual insight presupposes spiritual likeness.

Easter is here. It is more than a commemoration of an ancient occurrence. It is more than a prophecy of a future event. It is a pledge of a successful life experiment. It is an appeal to enter a supreme vocation. It has a tangible present reference. It tells us to live now as we expect to live by and by and assures us that nothing can hinder us as we have at our command the Spirit of God that dwelt in Christ on earth, by whom he offered himself on the cross and through whom he was raised from the dead. The message of Easter is victory not defeat, life not death, assurance not despair. "Seek those things that are above." "Know him and the power of his resurrection." "Attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

Arise, My Heart, and Sing

Our Easter Day

WHEN is our Easter, nay, nor book, nor creed
Can tell for you or me;
Though over all the land with joyous speed
The bells ring merrily.

For we may kneel by altars hung with flowers—
Flowers with no thorn's alloy—
And still the Lenten sorrow may be ours,
But not the Easter joy.

It is that day that soul casts off its chain—
For souls know bond and prison—
It is that day when doubt and hate are slain,
And faith and love are risen.

When to the soul's neglected garden-plot
Comes joy's awakening ray;
When, from the graves that human eyes see not,
The stone is rolled away.

When with clear eyes we see the mountain height,
Above the mist that bars;
When through the clouds we see the constant light
Of truth's eternal stars.

And though, because of this no glad bells ring,
Though neither song nor prayer
Is heard of men; though no sweet censers swing
Their odors on the air;

Though on no altar builded by men's hands
Blooms violet or rose;
Though all the pulses of the teeming land
Beat softly 'neath the snows;

Still we do know, unhelped of book or creed,
Though other lips gainsay,
That we have won our life's supremest need,
Our own true Easter day.

Hope's Song

I HEAR it singing, singing sweetly,
Softly in an undertone,
Singing as if God had taught it,
"It is better farther on."

Night and day it sings the sonnet,
Sings it while I sit alone;
Sings it so my heart will hear it,
"It is better farther on!"

Sits upon the grave and sings it,
Sings it when the heart would groan;
Sings it when the shadows darken,
"It is better farther on!"

Farther on! How much farther?
Count the milestones one by one.
No; no counting—only trusting
"It is better farther on!"

"Beyond the Sunset"

I WATCH the sunset as I look out over the rim of the blue Pacific, and there is no mystery beyond the horizon line, because I know what there is over there. I have been there. I have journeyed in those lands. Over there where the sun is just sinking is Japan. That star is rising over China. In that direction lie the Philippines. I know all that.
Well, there is another land that I look toward as I watch the sunset.
I have never seen it. I have never seen anyone who has been there, but it has a more abiding reality than any of these lands which I do know. This land beyond the sunset —this land of immortality, this fair and blessed country of the soul—why, this heaven of ours is the one thing in the world which I know with absolute, unshaken, unchangeable certainty. This I know with a knowledge that is never shadowed by a passing cloud of doubt. I may not always be certain about this world; my geographical locations may sometimes become confused, but the other—that I know. And as the afternoon sun sinks lower, faith shines more clearly and hope, lifting her voice in a higher key, sings the songs of fruition. My work is about ended, I think. The best of it I have done poorly; any of it I might have done better, but I have done it. And in a fairer land, with finer material and a better working light, I shall do a better work.—
Robert Burdette.
(In a personal letter shortly before his death.)

The Eternal Recompense

STILL in my breast, despite its load of sorrow,
Despite the pressure of o'erwhelming care,
I sense the thrilling joy of a tomorrow
Whose dawn shall lighten up the darkness there.

I sense a moment nigh when woe abating,
I'll tread the path that leads on to release,
And find a cure for troubles dire awaiting,
Safe in the everlasting arms of peace.

For life and love so close are interweaving
That none can live and yet be portion-less,
And days must come with hours all retrieving
The dreary years of unfound happiness;

And he whose share of love is not yet ready,
Whose measure of its joy is yet unknown,
Need only keep his faith both sure and steady
To come some time, somewhere, into his own!

An Easter Song

ARISE, my heart, and sing thy Easter song!
To the great anthem of returning bird,
And sweetening bud, and green, ascending blade,
Add thou thy word.
Long was the winter and the waiting long;
Heart, there were hours, indeed, thou wert afraid—
So long the spring delayed.

Shut in the winter's alabaster tomb,
So white and still and sleeping summer lay,

That dead she seemed;
And none might know how in her magic side, Slept the young spring, and moved, and smiled,

And dreamed.
Behold, she wakes again, and open-eyed,
Gazes in wonder round the leafy room,
At the young flowers. Upon this Easter Day

Awaken, too, my heart, open thine eyes,
And from thy seeming death thou, too, arise.

Arise, my heart; yea, go thou forth and sing!

Join thou my voice to all this music
sweet,
Of crowding leaf, and busy, building wing,
And falling showers;
The murmur soft of little lives new-born,
The armies of the grass, the million feet
Of marching flowers.

How sweetly blows the Resurrection horn
Across the meadows, over the far hills!
In the soul's garden a new sweetness stirs,

And the heart fills.
And in and out the mind flow the soft airs.

Arise, my heart, and sing, this Easter morn;
In the year's resurrection do thy part—
Arise my heart!

—Richard Le Gallienne.

Spring Song

WITH my ear pressed to the earth.
Long I held my breath and listened,
Till the last snow flurry fled,
And the last frost-blossom glistened;
And I heard it, yes, I heard it,
Heard her voice of mirth and laughter;
And I saw her tripping toward me
With her rose-girls coming after—
Spring, the queen of love and longing,
With her nymphs of beauty thronging.

As she sped along the path,
Sunbeams hastened to caress her;
And the gentle winds, long prisoned,
Vied, impassioned, to possess her;
Violets, for-get-me-nots,
Larkspurs and anemones,
Sprang from every spot she touched,
And the waking apple trees
Burst again in tinted glory
Freed from winter's scepter hoary.

—Thomas Curtis Clark.

Foregleams of Immortality

The greatest evidence of immortality is within—the glimpse of beauty, the unanswered prayer

By MARY DENNY

AFTER the Home-Going of one who has reached a little farther through the shadows toward the portal of the unseen, and spoken in the terms of life's deep experience the faint foreshadowings of heavenly realities to the world, we realize more and more the bounds of the earthly, the infinite pain of finite hearts, the significance of life fore-shadowed with immortality, touched with the yearning clouds of glory that lie beyond, and yet unable fully to voice the prototype of the heavenly reality in the language of life.

A certain tragedy seems sometimes to shadow the lives of the messengers of truth who have sought to speak the voice of God to their world. They have stood through long silences in raptured vision at the portal of the unseen, and when from their height of realization they strive to express the vision, the outer voice of expression seems weak and impotent. The shadows of incompleteness and of the limitations of earthly life rest upon the Christian pilgrim.

The Evidence Within

Each poet-painter sings his measure, each prophet declares that part of the whole truth revealed to him. But the whole envelops the parts and reaches outward into the infinitude. And we who listen to these partial truths begin at last to hear, as the sound of distant bells, the disclosures of the whole truth. The greatest evidence of immortality is within, the glimpse of beauty, the half-expressed longing, the vision that broods and hovers over life for years, and the unanswered prayer. All these are foregleams of the fulfillment of the great realities of God.

"And yet, dear heart! remembering thee,
Am I not richer than of old?
Safe in thy immortality,
I cannot feel that thou art far,
Since near at need the angels are;
And when the sunset gates unbar,
Shall I not see thee waiting stand,
And white against the evening star,
The welcome of thy beckoning hand?"

The aftermath, the refrain of a life lived out in attune with the Infinite, in the moment of its spiritual translation comes back to the world haloed and glorified. Bayard Taylor once drew a beautiful analogy of this great truth of experience from the baptistry of Pisa: "Our cicerone stationed himself at the side of the font and sang a few notes. After a moment's pause they were repeated aloft in the dome, but with a sound of divine sweetness, as clear and as pure as the clanging of a crystal bell. Another pause and we heard them again, higher, fainter and sweeter, followed by a dying note as if they were fading away into heaven. It seemed as if an angel lingered in the temple, echoing with his melodious lips the common harmonies of earth. Even thus does the music of a good deed hardly noted in our grosser atmosphere, awake a divine echo in the far world of the spirit." Thus the refrain of the life that has entered the unseen is wafted back to us—its true meaning luminous with light, shining out a blessed reality of heaven, and revealed in its unity with the divine.

No one who has stood just at the portal of the shining way when a loved one has entered the gates of life ever stands again in doubting castle. The fact of immortality becomes ever more a living experience of the soul. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." We are created for immortality. There are divine impulses, qualities, faculties of higher life that we do not fully understand. In deep moments of abstraction our own true life seems to hover in the background, a thing apart from the vision of the moment. There the highest, the true life shall be undimmed. All the expectancy, the shadowy vision shall shine forth in the light of His glory. All of life shall be fulfilled as we enter toward the full realities—the eternity with God: "While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen, for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." "Earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven." "That mortality might be swallowed up of life."

Lucy Larcom breathed forth the thought of the upward flight of the soul, the revealing path of divine love, in her lines:

"In Christ I touch the hand of God
From his pure heights reached down,
By blessed ways, before untrod,
To lift us to our crown;
Victory that only perfect is,
Through loving sacrifice like his.

Holding his hand, my steadfast feet
May walk the air, the seas;
On life and death his smile falls sweet,
Lights up all mysteries;
Stranger nor exile can I be
In new worlds where he leadeth me."

Glorious Morn, I Greet Thee

Glories of Easter Morn

EASTER Day was new Christmas Day; it was the second birth of Christ. His second birth was grander than his first. His first birth was under disadvantages. The disadvantage lay not in the manger, but in the royal lineage. The swaddling bands that circumscribed him were not the facts of his poverty, but the glories of his ancestors; the royal line of David separated him from the main line of humanity. But when he came from the dead he changed his lineage. He broke with the line of David—with all lines but the lowliest. His second life was not from Bethlehem; it was from the common dust of all cities—from the city of the dead. We think of him as nearer to us when a child. That is a great mistake. As a child he was always the Jewish Messiah—nearer to the tribes of Israel than to the tribes of man. But with Easter morn he came up from the depths—from the dust of death. He came from the place where all join hands; and that is the secret of his resurrection power. We all meet in the lowest valley. We do not all meet on the highest mountain, on any mountain. We are not made one by joy; the privilege of the Jew divides him from the Gentile. But calamity makes us one; sin and death make us one. Christmas morning was beautiful, but it came from the fields of gold; Easter morning is more precious, for it comes from the miry clay.

Therefore, O morn, I greet thee! Thou hast a message of hope for my lowliest hour, a promise of rising for my most prostrate moment. I could not greet Elijah's chariot; I could not greet Enoch's disappearance. These were not the conquest of my lowliness; they were the flight from it. They did not master the forces of decay; they escaped them; they passed death by. But thou, mine Easter Day, hast risen from the great sea. Thou hast come from out the wave that has engulfed all the world. Thou hast raised thy head from the night and from the cold. Thou hast shone out from the unshining place—the place of my despair.—G. Matheson.

Words of Hope and Promise

UPON the tomb's dark walls bereavement reads: "I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and come forth." "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept." How beautiful these words make graves appear! Mother, father could all the floral charms of nature add such glory to the little mound? Mourning children, could garlands of lilies and roses so beautify the resting-place of sainted mothers as these heavenly words of hope and promise? Today why should we seek the living among the dead? Our vanished loved ones are not in the dust of our cemeteries. They walk with God in white. As shone the angel faces and the angel robes, so shine their faces and their white-robed forms in light. We walk alone for a while. There are empty places in home and church; there are empty chairs and empty arms; but there is light still burning where they were! a light in the mourning mother's arms; a strange, sweet light in the home; something like a glory in the very air, as though angels had swept past on gleaming wings, and left a train of white from earth to heaven. O seek ye the living among the living! Lift up your sad faces toward the light, toward the smiles which are falling from heaven, and let this Easter-time be full of faith and hope and praise. "Why seek ye the living among the dead?" Jesus and his own are "alive for evermore."—Bishop Frank M. Bristol.

From the Other Side of the World

The missionaries say: "We cannot believe that our God will allow his work to be broken after things have been brought to such success." Ready for any sacrifice provided the work goes on. Shall Baptists at home be as heroic as the workers abroad?

THE financial crisis confronting the denomination at the present time is causing anxiety everywhere. The local pastor, who is trying hard to make his people recognize their share of responsibility, is not alone in his anxiety. Boards of managers of the missionary organizations are spending many hours together in earnest, prayerful consideration of all that may be involved in the financial results at the close of the fiscal year on April 30. Recently letters have been coming from the mission fields which indicate that on the other side of the world missionaries are also recognizing the present grave emergency.

A missionary who has been seventeen years in Burma, wrote to the board:

"We sincerely hope that the churches during the next six months may so increase their contributions that the board may end the year out of debt. The situation seems to be very grave and we feel that we must fall back upon God, in whose hands are the resources of all the world. At such a time as this we feel our dependence more than ever upon him. The work is his and we are but his servants. You can count upon us for the fullest cooperation in whatever measures you may feel compelled to take in order to meet this crisis. It would be almost a calamity to have to retrench at this time when the opportunity for work is so good and the call for workers is so strong. Just now, as never before, the people of this land need the gospel of Jesus Christ. However, if circumstances compel the boards to retrench, at such a time, we want them to know that we shall cooperate loyally."

In response to a letter which the board sent to every missionary, urging the most rigid economy and the most careful scrutiny of every appropriation, a missionary from Belgian Congo wrote:

"Physical Sacrifice Is Good"

"We have read carefully the letters concerning the financial situation and the urgent need of economy. We will bear these instructions in mind but do not see how we can cut much at our station. I for one would rather see the advance in salary which was recently given be reduced or removed than see any reduction appropriated in work. It seems to us that real physical sacrifice is good for us. Certainly we should be the first to be willing. It costs much more to live here now than it did before the war, and yet I would not wish to be a party to having appropriations cut."

Another missionary writes:

"We have and are following carefully and anxiously the reports concerning the financial situation at home. If a cut comes to our mission we will believe that God leads, though we cannot see how the elimination of any of our work can do anything else but curtail our efficiency as a mission. But we are prepared to face whatever comes, for this work is his work, not ours, and we must believe that his hand is leading us, perhaps not always in pleasant paths but still leading and leading us in a surer path than our own to the goal which we all face. Our thought and prayers are with you at home during these trying months. What the Lord sends we shall gladly use and what does not come we shall get along without, using what we have in the very best way we know how in order that your work and ours may bear fruit."

A new missionary who sailed for his field for the first time last fall, one of the large number whose sailing was made possible by the New World Movement, describes the generosity of Karen Baptists:

"There would be no such thing as financial stringency if the Northern Baptists would give as the Karen Baptists do. Several poor men pledged and paid 1,000 rupees or more and one poor man, a pastor, 600 rupees in debt, after pledging his 1,000 rupees, went home and prayed. His yearly income was rarely 1,000 rupees, but he felt that God intended to reward his labor in his paddy fields with an exceptional yield. He worked his fields more thoroughly than usual and God gave the promised increase. He paid 600 rupees debt, his 1,000 pledge and had 600 rupees left, a larger balance than in any previous year. This man's experience does not seem to be exceptional among the Karens. They believe in prayer and use it constantly. We are praying that the New World Movement may close the year successfully."

The most tragic aspect of this financial emergency is of course the possibility of shattering the hopes of the missionaries as they have looked forward to larger undertakings and greater victories. The man who wrote the following, doubtless reflected the sentiment of the entire missionary body:

"We are much distressed over the financial outlook in America, and are filled with dismay over the prospect of curtailment and retrenchment of our work. We are daily praying and are believing that the churches will surely come forward with the needed money before the end of the year. We cannot believe that our God will allow his work to be broken and shattered in any field after things have been brought to such a state of success in planning and execution as they have been in the past few years. Yet, I must say the board is right in refusing to assume further debt, and that unless more money is given, that retrenchment is the proper procedure—but oh, how heart-rending after the years of effort, and the gleam of hope from added resources promised so recently, and then to have to go back to a still narrower life and outlook than ever before!"

The last day of April will determine whether this man's gleam of hope will really be taken away.

Some Easter Facts and Observations

By J. P. TREAT

THIS year Easter occurs April 16, which is rather late. Easter is a movable feast and it moves with so much freedom that it really wobbles. According to the rule, growing out of the old Jewish or paschal month, it can never occur earlier than March 22 and never later than April 25. Between those dates it may occur at any time. The date on which it comes this year will not occur again for many years.

It may be surprising to many to know that in reckoning the paschal moon, European longitudes are used. If it were otherwise, Easter would sometimes come on a different date in America than in Europe. If it were generally known that we in America are dependent upon European longitude for our Easter, probably Senator Borah would promptly introduce a bill to have the un-American thing forever abolished. This would be approved by many Baptists, who do not favor the day for two reasons: (1.) Because it is of pagan origin. (2.) Because Baptists quite generally believe that every Sunday should be a memorial of the risen Lord and to observe only one Sunday out of fifty-two is not giving the resurrection the importance it deserves. A "mother in Israel" was discussing this matter the other day, in our hearing. She was unsparring in her criticisms and finally we asked her whether the word "Easter" occurs in the Bible. She was certain that it does not, but was greatly shocked when informed to the contrary. (See Acts 12:4.)

It seems quite absurd to have the birth of Christ celebrated on a fixed date and then celebrate his resurrection on so many different dates. There have been efforts made to have Easter occur on a fixed date, the same as Christmas, but the traditional reasons for the movable date are numerous. If it could be accomplished it would please many manufacturers and wholesale dealers in Easter novelties. It would also be pleasing to colleges and students to have the time of the Easter vacation come at a fixed date; but convention is powerful and so probably the moon will continue to exercise her prerogatives. We can see some advantage, however, in having Easter come early. It is the time when spring trade begins and an early Easter gives the business world a good start. It is also thought to be a harbinger of an early spring and is regarded by many as being more reliable than the shockingly unreliable groundhog.

Of course, if Easter moves forward or backward a month, the other church feasts that accompany it are compelled to be equally as erratic and that only adds to the confusion, thus throwing out of gear all of our date schedules; but personally we are glad to have Easter and other church days, no matter if they do come but once a year and that with great irregularity. To have the whole Christian world center its thoughts, during the Easter season, upon the greatest event in history, means much for Christianity. We sympathize with the idea, however, that every Sunday should be an Easter, and we are glad that so many Baptists feel that way about it.

Copy of the reply to a letter received from a stranger in Pennsylvania who saw the writer's name on some denominational literature.

By EDWARD L. BALLARD

IN reply to yours of the 28th ultimo, let me say that, so far as the quotations you sent me are concerned, I do not know whether they are correct transcripts or not and I would not take the responsibility of passing upon them even if I were competent and had the time to do so unless I had the complete book or other writing before me and could thus make myself thoroughly familiar with the context as well as the spirit of the article taken as a whole. Again I would want to know personally something about the writer in each case. His character and influence on those around him is the ultimate test of the sincerity and soundness of a man's religion and I regard the test as applying to the works and his influence rather than what he says as the latter must be interpreted by the former—

"By their fruits shall ye know them."

I do not know how we could make any progress whatever unless we had frank expressions of opinion, particularly by men who are recognized to be deep students, with unusual capacity for thought, ability of expressing that thought, and frankness of character in saying what they think.

In my judgment the chief factor in our present religious, and particularly our denominational situation is the time spent in attack, criticism, and frequent exchange of personalities on what are nothing more or less than questions of theology, or, in other words, opinions on interpretations of the Bible, Christianity, etc. I do not think one layman out of a thousand understands or can understand the questions at issue, and I do not believe that the average layman is seriously interested. Down in the bottom of his heart he realizes that the actual questions before us today are those of simple honesty of word and deed and a genuine attempt on the part of each one of us to live up to the golden rule. All the theology and creed any of us need is set out in Matthew 22:37:

"Thou shalt Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul and with all thy mind.

This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it. Thou shalt Love thy neighbor as thyself.

On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

I think you will agree with me that very few of us as church members come anywhere near doing even a fraction of the practical things that as professing Christians we could and should give our time and thought to in our every-day life. How much credit we take to ourselves for attending a Sunday and week-day service without realizing that that is a small part of our obligation, and is in fact almost entirely of inspirational use. Our duty as laymen is to put into practice the inspiration we should get from these services and this should be shown, among other things, by our faithfully contributing something of our time and thought—and not money only—towards perfecting the organization and efficiency of our own church or being constructively helpful whenever we are called upon to serve in any capacity in furthering the operation of our great denominational organizations which everybody must concede are organized for purposes and are accomplishing results that are thoroughly consistent with Christian principles.

It seems to me that if we are to make any progress we should get together on the things that we can agree upon and when we have done all the work possible upon these things then it will be time enough to split hairs on theological questions. Professing Christians have been wasting time fighting with and persecuting one another ever since the Spanish Inquisition, if not before, and if the amount of time, thought, and energy that have been put into theological disputes had been put into helping in every way we could the development of the simple rules we are told should regulate our relations one with another this would have been a much better world long ago.

This Church Conquered the Crisis

By JAY D. WARNER

PRAYERFULLY and joyously the members of the City Park Church, Denver, looked forward to March 26 as a day of privilege when they should start on the "second mile" of progress in the New World Movement.

With a membership of less than 300 an allotment of $51,000 was accepted two years ago and the pledges given amounted to nearly $59,000. Last year the annual apportionment was fully paid. A falling off of one-third at this time was anticipated by some, but at the Sunday-morning service settlements on old pledges reached the sum of $4324. New pledges of nearly $500 were added and a free-will offering of $1800 cash in new gifts, totaling $6624. It is expected that additional sums from absent members will bring the total amount to $9000, closing the year ending April 30 with pledges more than 100 per cent paid up.

A sacrificial gift of $100 was made by one who had paid up former pledges and had made two "over and above" gifts, thus going the "fourth mile" and with a longing desire to add more.

The widow whom Christ commended for giving two mites, gave all she had. Two years ago a widow in this church gave more than she had—pledging future payments—trusted God, paid the amounts when due and has just added another generous gift. She is by far the largest giver, though some have contributed greater amounts by several thousands of dollars.

Rev. W. F. Ripley, state promotion director for Colorado is a member of this church as is also Judge F. W. Freeman, who is national president of the Laymen's Council and who is giving many weeks of his valuable time in arousing the laymen in our churches, East and West, to get under the burdensome load of debt that rests with such a crushing weight upon our missionary societies and lift like men who realize they are stewards of God's bounty. Intercessory prayer is daily offered that he may have the physical strength needed for his strenuous task and that he may have power to persuade men of abundant means to contribute the larger sums which will be required to reach the goal of success, namely $15,000,000. We must not suffer defeat. April must be a month of prayer and sacrifice. This church does not feel that it has done its full duty, as indeed very few have. While none of its members can give in large amounts those with moderate incomes feel that still greater sacrifices must be made, even to the giving of a double tithe. Sincerest sympathy is felt for those members (usually conscientious givers) who by reason of unemployment or prolonged sickness were prevented from sharing in this grand opportunity for service.

Society Appoints New Missionaries

TEN young women have been made happy this week through the knowledge that they are to serve as missionaries in foreign lands under the auspices of the Woman's American Foreign Mission Society. The announcement came to them through Miss Mabelle Rae McVeigh, candidate secretary of the society.

The young women will serve as evangelists, educational and medical missionaries and it is expected that they will sail some time during the coming summer or fall. Five more appointments will be made by fall.

The new appointees were chosen out of a large number of candidates for appointment, because of their qualifications for the task. Last year the Woman's American Foreign Mission Society appointed twenty-eight missionaries to its foreign fields. The limited number this year is due to the decreased budget of the society.

At present eight of the newly appointed missionaries are receiving their training for their tasks in Hasseltine House in Boston. The names of the ten are as follows:

Miss Clara Barrows of Providence, R. I., who has served as pastor's assistant at the Broadway Baptist Church in Cambridge, Mass., this year. Miss Barrows is a graduate of the Rhode Island Normal School in Providence and of Gordon College of Theology and Missions of Boston, Mass. She was a primary teacher for some time in Providence and in Cranston, R. I. She will go to Burma.

Miss Edith Lillian Dulin, formerly of Wayne, Neb., who has been a pastor's assistant in the Ruggels Street Baptist Church in Boston, Mass. Miss Dulin is a graduate of Osceola High School in Iowa and Gordon College of Theology and Missions. She will go to South China.

Miss Helen Bailey of Reading, Mass., expects to receive her M. A. degree in Boston University this year. Miss Bailey is a graduate of Wellesley College. She will go to South India where she will engage in educational work for the society.

Miss Florence Webster of Fargo, N. D., is the first woman to be appointed as a Baptist missionary from that state. Miss Webster is a graduate of the Fargo Conservatory of Music. She will go to East China.

Miss Naomi Knapp of Shingle House, Pa., is a graduate of Mansfield State Normal school, Mansfield, Pa., and served for some time as a teacher in schools of that state. She will go to Bengal Orissa, where she will engage in educational work.

Miss Hilda Lund of Minneapolis, Minn. Miss Lund is a graduate of Bethel Academy, Minneapolis, and received her training as a registered nurse in the Swedish Hospital of that city. She will go to Belgian Congo as a nurse.

Miss Victoria Christenson of Chicago, Ill., is a graduate of the Metropolitan Business College and of Moody Bible College, in Chicago. She will go to Assam as an evangelical missionary.

Miss Eteleka Schaffer of Newark, N. J., is a graduate of New Jersey State Normal School of Newark and has been a teacher for some years in that city. She will be stationed either in West China or Africa as an educational missionary.

Miss Winifred Acock of Terre Haute, Ind., who is a graduate of Indiana Normal and of Franklin College. She is at present in the University of Southern California where she expects to take her M. A. degree this year. She has taught for a number of years in Indiana schools. She will go to Japan.

Miss Helen Bjornstad, formerly of Norway, who has already served for some time among the Telugus, under the Norwegian Board of Missions. She will return to India.

The Surprised Doubter

By R. MILTON CARLSON

TO me the great state universities have always been the last place to expect real Christian atmosphere and activity among the young people. So when I noticed in the Wisconsin State Journal that the house purchased by the N.B.C. at Madison was opened as a Baptist headquarters I called to see just what sort of work was being conducted among the students.

And that work was one of the surprises of a lifetime. If every one who has pledged to the $100,000,000 fund could see what has been accomplished there would be no need for appeals in the denominational press for prompt payments of pledges.

To give a comprehensive idea of the work in words would be impossible. Imagine a young man who admitted he had been a "hard nut to crack" and about as hopeless a case from a religious standpoint as there ever was, getting one of his fellow-students aside in a room and telling him his experience, asking his consideration of Christ's claim on his life for nearly five hours. Or a young man who, on talking to a young man from China, learned that he had been waiting for two years for some one to tell him about Christianity. Or the young man who talked religion with one of his fellows until 3:30 in the morning.

Believe me, the influence of the work carried on by Mr. Gleason is going to count in the lives of those who have come in contact with it.

There seems to be alive a spirit of earnestness and willingness to serve among the young people that would astonish those who have thought as I have, that the youth in college and universities were spiritually dead. If you had had the privilege that I had of sitting in at a committee meeting of the Student Volunteers and had heard the prayers offered for the success of their efforts to reach souls for the Master and for individuals in whom they were interested, you would not allow such an impression to remain for one instant.

If all the work supported by the N. B. C. $100,000,000 fund is spent for activity that counts for as much as this, I for one, regret that it is not $200,000,000 instead of the present figure.

Swords and Ploughshares

By MORNAY WILLIAMS

SWORDS and ploughshares! They have been contrasted implements for many centuries, and in these days, when men's thoughts are turned so constantly to the world war and its aftermath, the contrast and the association of them in the words of the old Hebrew prophets, Isaiah and Micah, have been constantly in men's mouths, but perhaps it may be doubted

Springtime Greetings

By G. CLIFFORD CRESS

ONCE more the tide of a new life is setting in; I can hear its low rhythmic beating on many shores; the lengthening days are followed by soft brooding nights; a vast creative energy makes all things new; Nature awakens with wondrous expectancy; it is Springtime and the lilies are blooming.

God is sharing His life with mankind; the sower follows the ploughman; the fragrant earth gives promise of harvest; little children play in the meadows, the mystery of all ages, Life out of Death, unfolds before us; the air is vocal with the joy of life; mind and body share in the resurrection glory.

My spirit, too, is waking under the warm breath of this Infinite Life; many voices are calling to me; I feel a fellowship with friends long gone; I hear their happy greetings as in the olden days; they mingle with the living friends about the altar of my heart; they will be my guests forever in the Springtime of the Soul.

Yours in the Christ whose endless life alone gives meaning and purpose to ours.

whether we have exhausted the parable.

It is one of the marvels and the glories of the Bible that it is a garden, "And at our gates are all manner of pleasant fruits, new and old, which," says the Divine Husbandman, "I have laid up for thee, O my beloved." And does not the Master himself tell us—"Every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old?"

Now, in pondering on these two famous passages, Isaiah 2:4, and Micah 3:3, upon which our pacifist friends, in their high zeal for the ending of war, are so fond of dwelling, and the curiously inverted passage in Joel (3:10) "Beat your ploughshares into swords and your pruning hooks into spears," the writer has been led to reflect anew, and takes this method of sharing his reflections with his friends.

The world war came, a fearful fact; and the combatants in it added another chapter to the long story of man's struggles, man's sins and man's victories. In the opening years it was Joel's message that sent men out to fight and die for what they thought the right; now, in bewildered fashion, they are groping after the mountain of the Lord and the law that shall go forth of Zion. Hath God forgotten to be gracious? Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right? Nay, nay; as thousands can from their hearts attest, "He hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary, from heaven did the Lord behold the earth."

"We saw—all of us saw—how he Drew sword and struck the blow, And up and free through their Red Sea He bade the captives go.

The veil of time a moment falls From off the Eternal's face Recede the old horizon walls To give fresh breathing space, And all who lift their eyes may learn It is our Father's will This world to him shall freely turn A world of freedom still."

Men's swords are, not infrequently, God's ploughshares, as sometimes, men's ploughshares are God's swords.

Deep Plowing Means Rich Harvests

As students tell us the ploughshares of the ancient Jews as of the modern Syrian peasants, are almost flat and merely break up the surface of the soil to a depth of three or four inches, and in this lightly upturned soil the seed is sown. Seed may grow where there has been no plowing but it is "as grass upon the housetops which withereth afore it groweth up, wherewith the mower filleth not his hand, nor he that bindeth, sheaves his bosom." But the deeper the ploughing, the richer the harvest. Today, from many broken homes, and many broken lives, in many lands goes up the sorrowing cry, "The ploughers ploughed upon my back, they made long their furrows," but it is still true that the Lord is righteous, he hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked. The world field has indeed been ploughed but it is for us, the laborers in this field, to see that the seed is being sown. It is while men sleep that the enemy sows tares in the field. The disturbed state of the world, the distress, strife and dismay, that are everywhere evident—and not least in our own churches—are not reasons for ceasing to press missionary giving and missionary activity, but most important challenges to greater zeal; they are calls to earnest prayer for more work and more workers.

Thus Says the Lord

Two scenes in the life of our Lord come vividly to mind. In the first his disciples had left him seated, weary and alone, on the well of Sychar while they went to buy food, they returned to find him refreshed and asking the startling question "Say not ye, There are yet four months and then cometh harvest? Behold I say unto you, Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest." The second scene was on the night of his betrayal with the shadow of the cross already upon him, when the lips, that spake as never man spake, said, "Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in me," and said again, "Remember the word that I said unto you, the servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; if they have kept my saying they will keep yours also."

A Seafarer's Sketchbook

By WILLIAM B. LIPPHARD

No. 9. CHRISTMAS IN NO MAN'S LAND

IT is still No Man's Land for nobody lives there. The shattered tree stumps, innocent victims of heavy artillery, have made it impossible even for the birds to return. Vast sections of the region are areas of desolation, ruins and mud. During the summer months nature with its exuberant growth of weeds and new grass tried to hide some of the scars of war, but now that winter had again come the covering of green had vanished and the hideous scars stood revealed in their former nakedness. On Christmas morning in company with our relief director, Rev. O. Brouillette, I walked many miles through this vast area of devastation. Although that along which we walked was courteously called a road it was rather a long winding streak of slimy mud, its depth ranging from a few inches to over the tops of our shoes. Trenches in which men had fought and died followed their zigzag course as during the war; gaping shell holes leered at us from the fields through which we passed; and masses of twisted barbed wire were piled here and there, ending their existence in rusty oblivion in the mud. All along the way were shell fragments, pieces of shrapnel, shell noses, abandoned shoes, belts, straps, dugouts, artillery and machine gun emplacements, and other relics of the great conflict. It was difficult to realize that this was Christmas morning, the birthday of the Prince of Peace. To our left could be seen the plateau known as Vimy Ridge, where hundreds of thousands of Canadian soldiers had departed from the sight of men by the path of duty and self-sacrifice.

This Once Was Lens

Nevertheless it was Christmas morning and Mr. Brouillette and I were on our way to attend the Christmas celebration in one of the half-dozen relief foyers that are being maintained by the Foreign Mission Society in this devastated area of Northern France. Our immediate objective was Lens, once a prosperous city of 40,000 people and now but a region of ruins, yawning cellars, shacks and mud. The destruction is indescribable. Practically no building of a permanent character has yet been erected and great sections of the city are still heaps of debris, tottering walls, and temporary huts. Many people have returned to this ruined city and having no means to erect new homes are today living in damp filthy cellars, the only light entering through the single opening serving as entrance. In one abandoned cellar I counted as many as twelve empty or exploded shell cases, while in front of the site where the Lens Baptist Church once housed its worshippers, could be seen scores of shell fragments, piles of barbed wire and other evidences of the horrible experience through which this one time peaceful city had to pass. With heaviness of heart I pitied the hundreds of children with thin legs, pinched, unwashed faces, and unkempt hair, now living in these miserable huts, their only playground that slimy mud.

Nearly 500 of those children assembled at the foyer for the Christmas celebration. The majority of them had been born since the Christmas of 1913 and this was for many the first real Christmas they had ever known. Many had never seen a Christmas tree and when the candles were lighted and the tree stood before them in all its glory, the look of surprise, of wonderment, of awe on their faces was one that a thousand kodaks would fail to register. The service was in charge of Rev. Robert Farely, a recent graduate of Rochester Theological Seminary. He was assisted in the program by Miss Long, a capable, consecrated young French woman under whose direction the foyer work is conducted. Every one of the children was known to her by name, and through these children Miss Long and Pastor Farely are in touch with the homes.

The first number on the program was the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner" and a Chautauqua salute in honor of the American guest. It is difficult to describe my feelings as I stood at attention and listened to the singing in French of two stanzas of our national anthem and received the salute which was not given to me personally but through me to the thousands of American Baptists at home whose contributions to the Foreign Mission Society for relief work had made this Christmas celebration possible. After other numbers on the program, very similar to American celebrations, and after a brief address of greeting and a Christmas story by the writer, the service closed with a tableau about Joan of Arc. What French program would be complete without Joan? And then came the climax. The door behind the Christmas tree was opened and there piled high on the tables were the gifts of American Baptists. Each package bore the name of the child for whom it was intended. One by one the names were called and the children marched to the front of the platform and received their gifts. As I stood beside Mr. Brouillette shaking hands with these French children and hearing each of them say so sweetly "Merci, Monsieur," I was wishing with all my soul that the Baptists of America who had made these gifts possible might have seen the joy on those 500 faces.

"Merci, Monsieur"

Space does not permit my describing the several other celebrations which I attended in this devastated region and the many experiences which Mr. Brouillette and I had in Bruay, Avion, Douai, Denain, Valenciennes and other places in this vast area of desolation and war reminiscences. One other service needs to be mentioned. On a later afternoon we were at Denain, one of the many towns that were occupied by the Germans almost during the entire war. Here the Christmas celebration was for the war orphans supported by the Foreign Mission Society. Nearly 200 were present and all of them had come with their mothers. A year ago Mr. Brouillette had taught them to say in English "Merry Christmas" and this year they had been taught to say "Thank you," which they did with extraordinary pleasure as they passed to shake hands with me after having received their gifts. In the rear room of the church the mothers signed receipts for the small monthly allowance granted to those who had more than one child, another form of relief made possible by the generosity of American Baptists.

These war orphans were only a small portion of the nearly 1,000 now being aided by the relief appropriations of the Foreign Mission Society. Similar Christmas celebrations were held for all the others in the various towns where these orphans are found. Many of them are the children of men who died in battle and whose bodies were so badly mutilated as to be unrecognizable. The fathers of many of these children are, therefore, buried in nameless graves, unknown resting places of the heroic dead of France. On one of the days that I spent in Paris I visited the tomb of the Unknown French Soldier beneath the great Arch of Triumph. Wreaths of flowers were placed around the tomb and men and women were kneeling down in silent reverence before this sepulchre that contained the embodiment of supreme impersonal disinterested self-sacrifice. As I stood on the platform and told a Christmas story to these war orphans the thought came to me that possibly I was speaking to the child of the man who lay in the tomb beneath the Arch of Triumph. Who knows but that through the eyes of a child the heroic unknown dead of France was looking at me and voicing through me his gratitude to the thousands of American Baptists for their ministry of relief to a people whose war sufferings are beyond the comprehension of any one who has not with his own eyes seen the effects of the war tragedy?

A Message of Certainty

THE message of Easter is the certainty of the resurrection. The hope of immortality has burned brightly in noble souls in all the ages. Twilight intuitions of a future life have tempered the darkness for many a century. The anxious "If a man die shall he live again?" has brought the comfortless answer of a philosophic perhaps. The world steadied itself against the analogies of nature and tried to be strong. It looked into its constitution and tried to argue immortality for the hopes that were crushed here, for the powers that came not to maturity, for the work that was left incomplete, for the recompense of the victim of injustice and oppression; but the argument was uncertain and the demonstration out of sight, and philosophy won no victory.

A new light came at last. The question was settled in a way unexpected by the world. The priceless thing the world found through the early seekers at Joseph's empty tomb was not costly spices nor cast-off garments: It was immortality. That is the blessed discovery of Christianity. Life and immortality are brought to light in the gospel. The gate of death is unbarred, and the key hangs at the girdle of the Conqueror of the grave, the Hero of Easter morning.

The Christian's horizon is not bound by a single historical fact unsupported by other evidence. His faith in immortality depends upon an experience, not an argument. He is certain of immortality who feels it within himself. Christ in you the hope of glory is the promise which transcends all argument and gives the joy of Easter personal, prophetic and perpetual scope.—Charles L. Goodell.

The Open Forum

A PLEA FOR WESTERN HEADQUARTERS

Your article "Move Denominational Headquarters Westward" recalls those which I wrote in the "Open Forum" some time before the woman's societies' headquarters were removed to New York. Presuming that your location of the center of our Baptist constituency is correct, "somewhere west of Buffalo," it would indicate that we are following "the course of empire," and in order to provide a logical abiding place for our headquarters for the next century at least, much thought should be given and the best and wisest action taken.

The center of the population of the United States has been established by the census bureau west of Chicago, and steadily each decade finds it located still farther west.

A few years ago I stood on the east bank of the Missouri River at St. Joseph, Mo., with the president of a great railroad system, and as we looked westward towards the tangle of smokestacks, and vast number of factories and residences on the other side of the river, the gentleman said to me: "Mr. Brimson, I stood right on this spot sixty years or more ago and an elderly gentleman said, 'Young man, if you have any money, go over there across the river and buy some land, anywhere you please, and you will be a millionaire long before you are as old as I am.'" I said to my friend: "Well, did you buy any?" He replied, with a laugh, "No, I had $600 saved up, and when I got back to Chicago I bought a diamond pin." Now at the time indicated there was practically nothing between the Missouri River and the Rockies, and this narrative illustrates graphically the rapid growth of our country in manufactures and population during the past three quarters of a century, and that growth is still going on with possibly a slight diminution.

When our societies were first organized early in the last century the headquarters could not have been located other than where they were. They derived their support from that section of the country. Buffalo was the far west, Chicago the "Ultima Thule," beyond which were the trackless prairies, the dense forest, the "Great American Desert." Now large and still growing cities occupy that field, and are aiding in the support of our institutions more and more. It was eminently necessary that the personnel of the boards should be drawn from New England and the Eastern States, but is it not time to change that situation and bring to the aid of the denomination the thought of a larger number of its communicants, such as would be available if the headquarters were moved westward?

Look over the list of the boards of managers, and see that only occasionally is there a representative of the Central West, and they are only for ornament, since their distant place of residence makes it impracticable, on account of the cost in time as well as money, for them to attend sessions of the boards and to give voice to their opinions on any question whatever.

Your article suggests Chicago as a logical location for the headquarters. Let me give you a few reasons in support of that suggestion.

Chicago is the easiest of access of any city in the United States. It is the greatest railroad center in the world; none other even approaches it. One can enter a sleeping car at Portland, Maine, or Portland, Ore., that is bound for Chicago. From Los Angeles, New Orleans, or the Southeast Atlantic cities one can always find a "Chicago Sleeper." To no other city in the country is there such facility; to every other city some change of cars must be made.

Referring again to the limitation of localities from which to draw members of boards of managers which now prevails, it is a forced situation and unworthy of our great denomination which prides itself on its democracy. As previously indicated the cost of time and money limits the territory from which to draw such members; but if Chicago were made the societies' headquarters a large territory would be at once opened up from which might come men and women well fitted for the task, who would bring to it a consensus of the ideas of an enlarged scope of Baptist constituency. Take a pair of dividers and describe a circle which would embrace cities just one night's ride from Chicago; it will include Duluth, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Omaha, Lincoln, the two Kansas Cities, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Toledo, Detroit, Cincinnati, Columbus, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Buffalo, Erie and hundreds of large centers of population. From these could come representatives to enrich the deliberations of our boards, spend one day thereat, and return to their homes the following night, thus losing but one day from their own business.

I believe your suggestion is well-timed, and certainly well worthy the best thought of the denomination.

W. G. BRIMSON.

COOPERATION NOW—CORRECTION LATER

As a Fundamentalist because I am a Baptist, I see that it is the duty of all good members of the household of faith to meet our financial obligations. It would be disloyal to Christ to permit the tragedy of retrenchment in our mission work. Those who now prayerfully and sacrificially give to our missionary treasuries will have a right to speak in the councils at Indianapolis.

It is poor strategy and worse Christianity to hurl charges at the non-cooperating churches. My sympathy is with those brethren who have conscientiously refused to entrust their benefices to the whole program of the New World Movement. They cannot consistently support men or policies that express disloyalty to Jesus Christ in departing from historic Baptist positions. Unless it were a virtue to let the burglar depart with the swag in the interests of peace, the Fundamentalists are not to blame for the lack of peace or for the threatened break in the denominational morale.

On the other hand, contenders for the faith must see that the denominational officers are eager to heed our protest. The action of the board in Indianapolis is not only an evidence of this but it is an arrangement whereby our designated offerings will no longer be neutralized by those which are undesignated. Every dollar given to the loyal stations and orthodox schools reaches the gospel workers without indirectly encouraging those who are tearing down the faith that we hold so dear. By designations we can make a protest in a way most constructive and effective.

Were it possible the Board of Promotion would disassociate itself from the objectionable schools. Until this is effected, or until the schools themselves change the situation, many will cooperate only by designation of gifts. Chicago did a creditable thing in waiving claim to the funds that may be raised this spring through the New World Movement. If some other groups whose doctrinal position has compromised the denominational program would take similar action many of us could cooperate to the fullest extent.

Until then we should make the contributions as large as our love for the Saviour impels us to sacrifice. We should rejoice that a democracy of Christian brothers have, through council and prayer, the spirit's enablings to correct our organizational ills, in spite of what the lawyers may say. We should rejoice that our Baptist family is evidently filled with a larger proportion of orthodox Christians than is any other denomination. We should rejoice that we have been blessed so abundantly with this world's goods (collectively speaking), that with wholehearted devotion we can easily raise the proposed $15,000,000 and more.

This is no time for overhauling the machinery. It is a time in which every conscientious loyal Baptist can and should make such splendid offerings that the crisis may be passed with hallelujahs. May the love of Christ constrain us in the hour of testing.

Making Sunday a "Day of Delight"

TABITHA Abigail Postlethwaite and Shadrack Phineas Postlethwaite had to spend their Sabbath afternoon sitting primly on the very straightest of straight-backed chairs reading the very dullest of pious books—and they resented it. They resented it so much that they practiced every ungodly subterfuge, which their Puritanical mammas invariably discovered, and which brought down on their offending heads the penalty of Bible verses to be memorized by tea-time, or—! Small wonder that they sang with lack-luster enthusiasm about a heaven "Where congregations ne'er break up And Sabbaths have no end."

The Postlethwaites and the Sobersides of yesterday became laxer parents when it came their turn to rear a family; but from that too-strict strictness of long ago see where the laxness has now landed us! Sunday to a Christian's neighbors has become the day when He-Doesn't-go-to-the-Office and They-Don't-go-to-School; so it is tacked on to Saturday to form a week end. And however much the worldling pretends to scoff at old-fashioned piety, he notes with a sage eye that fewer Christian parents are "nurturing their children in the fear and admonition of the Lord."

Too formidable sounding? "I'm sure I don't know what we can do about it!" is the wail. Ah, but there are such delightful opportunities on every hand, it seems like a day God-given for the rare special purpose of Christianizing playthings and pastimes and creating warmer wider hearts towards everybody everywhere. For example—

Sunday Dolls

We have all been a little narrow-minded in providing little Christian girls with only white dolls to mother, when the world is peopled with yellow, brown, black and red races! Loving bonds of sympathy may be developed by a world family of dolls in our playrooms, and Sunday is an ideal day to introduce both the dolls and a mission story book which will create the proper local background for the new "child."

The following dolls are ready-to-buy:

Two African dolls, complete Kraal outfit	$1.50
Two Japanese dolls, model house, etc.	$1.50
Two American Indian dolls, tepee, etc.	$1.50
Seven Chinese rag dolls.75

These may be ordered from Presbyterian Department of Missionary Education, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Our own Women's Foreign Board (276 Fifth Ave., New York) recently had some clever

Chinese dolls, hand-made by converts in Shaohsing, China. For details and prices write to Miss Helen Hudson, Ravishing Japanese dolls of larger proportions than those in the outfit mentioned above may be bought more cheaply in your local Japanese specialty shops, and you can surely afford a wee five-cent Japanese doll to tie on big sister's back in true Oriental style! Alaskan dolls, for playing in the snow, may be dressed in furry canton-flannel hoods and garments. Immigrant dolls in small plaid shawls and checked aprons; and always—with every other doll—introduce one of your daughter's own dolls equipped to be either a nurse or a missionary or a globe-trotter, so that "let's play hospital," etc., may be instantly suggested.

To insure a warm welcome for these little strangers, try having an envelope on the small daughter's dessert plate Sunday noon. Completely mystified, she will open it to read: "Sweet honorable Miss: If you will deign to step on your glorious feet to the bookcase beside the fireplace you will find a book called 'Mook.' It will pay you to read chapter I through to the end."

You may be sure that she will get that book! And at the end of Chapter I will be a lightly-penciled note:

"O Little Mother of Other Dolls:

Couldn't you please adopt me too? I'm waiting hopefully for you behind the honorable sofa! Your devoted,

MOON FAIRY.

P. S.: You can read about me afterwards in Chapter II of 'Mook'."

Charming story books for similar use are "Mr. Friend O' Man" (American and immigrant stories); "Red, Yellow and Black" (By Fahs, on Indians, Chinese and Africans); "African Adventurers" (by Jean MacKenzie); "Stay-At-Home Journeys" (Alaska, Cuba, Etc.); and this spring will appear a lovely story on India as the junior mission study book. At this writing the name has not been decided. All these books and the ones next mentioned may be ordered through our Baptist Literature Department, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Sunday Clothes

For Juniors beyond the doll age, but still possessing the passion for dressing up, a similar procedure may be followed: Note—Costume to be donned, story book to be read while pretending to be this other child, a two-cent leaflet on "Oriental Costumes and How to Make Them" will give hints about the less familiar apparel.

Boys' Sunday Books

Boys and older girls will not care for dolls and furbelows, but we have known many a case where a boy who steers clear of "mission books," as such, has been captivated by earning one through the ordeal of stunts; for instance, the simple device of secreted letters, each new letter giving deeds to be done before the next letter may be sought and its directions followed—ordeals like naming three cities in Japan, naming three Japanese articles in our house, bowing as the Japanese bow, sitting on the floor for two minutes as the Japanese sit (on their heels), seeking the atlas and locating Formosa, acting in pantomime what you would do if you met a head-hunter! Last letter: "On third shelf of bookcase you will find 'The Black-Bearded Barbarian,' who met head-hunters galore in Formosa!"

This thread of continuity through the ordeals should create a germ of interest in the wonderful George Mackay of Formosa.

Other matchless books for intermediates are: "Uganda's White Man of Work" (Fahs); "John G. Paton" (Paton); "Livingstone the Pathfinder," "Under Many Flags" (Cronk); "Ann of Ava," "The Moffats" and "A Noble Army," all by Ethel Hubbard; and that splendid "White Queen of Okoyong," by W. P. Livingstone. At first keep all these books for Sunday only, unless you can afford all of them.

Sunday Scrap Books

Everybody loves to make a scrap book; and, still with the thought of creating world friendship, it will be a valuable experience to make a book on "God's Family," using pictures from back numbers of "Missions," "World Outlook," also from the splendid free folders of oriental steamship lines procurable at any steamship agency. Devote a Sunday to pictures of people in each country. A splendid plan is to send for our joint catalogue of Baptist missionary literature (276 Fifth Ave., New York) and encourage the boys and girls to order a leaflet that sounds appealing about each country. Most of these are in story form for 2 or 3 cents, so it will be an inexpensive but valuable experience to buy them for pasting in the scrap books.

These should always be named. Others may be called "The Go Book" (with pictures of peculiar vehicles used around the world, sedan chair, jinrikishas, etc.), "All Aboard!" (curious boats), "The Hungry Scrap Book" (showing pictures of food and of those to whom we are indebted for our coffee, tea, dates, rice, sugar, etc. Encyclopedia will be suggestive.)

woven into hymns often sung too perfunctorily by a scrap book of "Illustrated Hymns," with the verses written out except that every pictorial phrase should be illustrated by an appropriate picture, either pasted or hand drawn. Hymns that lend themselves to this treatment are: "The Son of God Goes Forth to War" (Crusaders, crown, blood-red banner, cup, cross-bearer, etc.); "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," (map, icy mountains, sunny strands, Nile with pyramids, palmy plains, heathen before idols, lamps, ocean); "Oh Beautiful for Spacious Skies;" "Jesus Shall Reign Where'er the Sun;" "Oh, Word of God Incarnate," "Angel Voices Ever Singing," "When Morning Gilds the Sky," "The Spacious Firmament on High," "Now the Day is Over," "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear." Advertisements and old Sunday school quarterlies will furnish many reverently beautiful pictures to make these hymns vividly full of meaning.

The child will soon lose the notion that the Bible is a black book—that the minister gets sermons—from if he creates in sections (a la Globe-Wernicke) a

Big Little Library

Shoe boxes may form the sections of the bookcase, and little penny match boxes (sixty-six altogether) should be ready to form the "books," a tiny white label across the back of each box reading "Genesis," or "Exodus," and so on. Only one box should be marked at a time, and into it should be put slips of paper bearing the names of the famous characters about whom each book tells. As this big-little library grows and the child becomes increasingly familiar with the books where certain stories are located, all these slips may be removed from their boxes, shuffled, and—as in a real library—filed anew in their correct places.

Books of Bible stories will become newly interesting here, and while most of us have been brought up on Foster's fine "Story of the Bible," two newer books by Dean George Hodges are the choicest for junior ages: "The Garden of Eden," on the Old Testament, "When the King Came," on the life of Christ. (Told with exquisite sympathy, this latter one. Published by Scribners.)

Sunday Walks

These are all house suggestions, and there is still God's Great Outdoors brimful of Sunday possibilities if space permitted to enlarge on them. Public schools may not teach the tireless provision of the Creator in creating our world, but a Sunday walk should open wide the eyes of the child's soul to the mystery of the infinite pains concentrated on "nothing but leaves" (collect them and study the delicate veining, the marvel of differentiation); on seeds and how things grow and spread; on birds; on insects; on clouds. Just as in the cool of that first evening the Lord God walked in his garden and said "It is good," let us walk in our gardens and say, "It is good," explaining the why, how, and when of the divine plan for man. And these are only a very few of the possibilities for making Sunday a day of delight.

The Young Reserves

Tiger Stone Valley and The Orange Father

THE other day we were all having oranges for dessert when Bill began puffing up in a curious fashion as he said: "What do you think of these oranges, everybody?"

"About as usual," Peggy said, not seeing anything at all special about them. But there was! At least in Bill's eyes: "You see, I picked them out," he bragged, "Uncle Tim knows a thing or two, so quicker than a flash he said:

"What do you mean—you picked them out? Out of what?"

"Out of a box," said Bill.

"And who picked them off the trees before they were put in the box?"

"Don't know, I'm sure! Is he a story?"

"He is," said Uncle Tim, "Everybody who gets us anything is a story; let me tell you about the 'Orange' father who does nothing but tend orange groves from morning 'till night in 'sunny California'."

I may as well tell you at once that "Tiger Stone Valley" is the name of a Japanese boy, and because he is exceedingly nice there isn't a tiger or a stone or a valley anywhere about him. He is just boy, like any other boy, except his eyes are the least little bit on the bias, and he can't speak English very well yet.

Perhaps you would like to know the Japanese way of saying Tiger Stone Valley, so I will write it here for you to look at: "Tora Ishatni"—it really seems to fit him better than our fiercer American translation of it, for tiger has such a wild, queer sound, and a valley seems ever so big. Yet he himself is small and polite, always bowing way over whenever Miss Missionary goes to call.

Now the parents of Tiger Stone Valley had once lived in Japan. I am sure you must have heard what a beautiful country it is, with pink cherry blossoms showering down like colored snow flakes, and with darling little backyards with toy lakes about as big as a minute, and toy bridges about as big as two minutes! The walls of the Japanese houses are made of paper, and the floors are made of matting on which you sit and sleep with never a chair nor a bed in sight; moreover, shoes must be left outside the door, since it would never do to track mud over the place where you must sit and sleep.

It sounds like some quaint fairy story, with something a little wrong somewhere, however! For there is a little idol on the shelf indoors. Just a tiny piece of wood, carved to look like a person; indeed you might almost think it was only a doll; yet that whole family from grandpa to babies would kneel on the matting floor before this idol and bump their dear foreheads in reverent worship. For to them the idol was God. God—yet only a bit of wood.

So when they crossed over the blue Pacific Ocean to America they brought the little idol along, and set him up on a tiny shelf, and offered him rice whenever there was rice, and tea whenever there was tea. But nobody loved that idol; they couldn't for he simply sat on his little shelf and stared at the family with wooden eyes.

Then one day Tiger Stone Valley went for a walk all by himself to see the sights of his new home town. And the sight of sights was a house with a steeple. Up and up that steeple towered, pointing straight into the sky. Tiger Stone Valley stood with his hands clasped behind him, and with his head tilted back, staring and staring—until a lady passing by looked up, too.

"What are you looking at, my dear?" she asked.

"I do got a wonder in my head," he said, bowing politely, "Why do that house stick himself up and up into the sky so high?"

"Oh!" said the lady thoughtfully, "I think it's pointing you to God."

Tiger Stone Valley shook his head: "Possibly not so, Miss Honorable Lady, for we do got God on little shelf at my house."

The lady reached out her hand: "Take me and show me!"

So he clutched her hand and lead her; and it was exactly as if he had led that brick church right up the front steps into his little home. For when the lady saw his idol sitting on the shelf, she sighed. Then she met his mother and tried to ask her if she liked living in the Land-Where-Oranges-are-Picked-Off-the-Trees-by-Japanese-Men; but it was a very round-about visit, for whatever she said in English, Tiger Stone Valley had to say all over again in Japanese for his mother; and when she said in Japanese that "picking oranges was all right, thank you, honorably," the little boy had to say this over again in English. But everybody smiled and bowed politely to make up for mistakes, and the lady suggested that possibly his mother would like to learn English. Oh, yes, she would! Very well, there was a class of other Japanese mothers meeting tomorrow in the house with the steeple, would she come? Tiger Stone Valley bowed more than ever and said quaintly that it made smiling in the heart of his mother to think about that beautiful tomorrow.

So his mother learned English; she read the Bible and learned about the One True God who made the world and everybody in it. After which a little wooden idol on a shelf seemed very useless indeed, so she threw it in the stove one day and burned it, while the "Orange" father rubbed his hands, saying: "Now I think we be real Americans forever!"

HOW TO OVERCOME DIFFICULTIES
Numbers 13:25-31

By FRANCIS C. STIFLER

Difficulties are overcome by three sorts of knowledge. If any one of the three is lacking failure may be expected.

1. Know all about the difficulty. Joshua and Caleb could give a complete description of the Promised Land. They knew who lived on the highlands and who lived in the valleys. They knew the type of fortification used to protect the cities. They knew the food products. Many people fail before difficulties because they do not study them. When we come up close to a cliff that from a distance looks utterly unscalable, we find that there are ledges and footholds aplenty and the seemingly impossible is quite within the range of our power. Study every difficulty. Emerson once said "When nature adds difficulties, she adds brains." Use them.

2. Know all about yourself. Caleb came back saying "Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are able to overcome it." In most cases of failure a good self-examination could have prevented it. Marshall Field made a failure in his first position as a clerk in Deacon Davis' general store in Pittsfield, Mass. If he had stayed there all his life he would probably have amounted to little. But once in Chicago he saw so many examples of poor boys that had won success he began to say to himself, "If others can do such wonderful things, why cannot I?" and then he began to examine himself. He was weak at this point. He was strong at another. He applied himself accordingly.

3. Know your great Ally, God. Joshua and Caleb were faithful men. They remembered God's promises. They knew that failure could never attend what God was striving for. Most of the great advances in the religion of Jehovah and in Christian conquest have been made by the seemingly small weak state against the apparently mighty obstacle or enemy. Remember what Elisha said to his servant when the host of the Syrian king surrounded them in the city of Dothan, "They that are for us be more than they that are against us." God is always fighting for the right. You can count on him. All things are possible with God. No difficulty can baffle him. Know him by prayer, by the exercise of the Christian virtues and by self-denying service.

Roger Babson once received a note from a young man saying, "I am out of work. Can you help me get a job?" In answer he wrote "Replying to your request for help, will state that what you lack is faith, courage, initiative and imagination. . . . As a starter I suggest you make this prayer three times a day for the next ten days: "Oh God, may I remember that when you say that 'with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured unto you' you mean it. May I remember that I am just as sure to get rewarded if I make myself useful as I am sure of being punished for my sins. May I no longer refuse to work because I am not paid. Until I get a job may I spend my time doing something for somebody without pay. May I start this very day to make myself useful to somebody, somewhere, somehow. The pay doesn't bother me. I know that will come, O God, if I do something to deserve it."

NEW YORK

The Buffalo Baptist Young People's Association is a live organization and its activities are many and varied. The association is composed of twenty societies, representing as many different churches. There is an earnest effort being made to follow out the program mapped out by the B. Y. P. U. of America. As a part of that program a campaign in the interest of stewardship and tithing was put on in the month of February of this year. Teams of tithers were sent into every society with the result that many of our young people signed up as tithers. It is not possible to report upon all the results as a number of societies have not sent in their report. It is expected that considerably more than 200 will have signed the tithers pledge cards.

BROOKLYN AND LONG ISLAND

Mr. Fred B. Ashplant writes: "Very recently we conducted a Union Concern in the opera house of the Brooklyn Academy of Music for the benefit of our Fresh Air Home, which has netted us $2,500 to $3,000, besides providing one of the finest concerts at a very nominal admission of $1. I am enclosing under separate cover copy of our program and year book.

"As a union we are conducting an evangelistic campaign of three weeks' duration, dividing the city in three big districts, holding one week of meetings in each district. The organization so far is in excellent shape and we pray and fully expect great gatherings and showers of blessing.

"At your kind suggestion of last October, we have used about 2,500 of Dr. Taylor's booklet on soul-winning, which we have found a great benefit to our societies.

"We have in our plans a campaign for stewardship and tithing in accordance with the B. Y. P. U. of A. program, which we hope to promote immediately following our evangelistic campaign. The exact nature has not yet been defined, as we will cooperate with the denominational plan through the Board of Promotion, with whom we have already conferred."

OREGON

An efficiency contest, "Journeys to all Parts of the World," was started on January 29, by the senior B. P. Y. U. of the First Baptist Church of Corvallis, Ore. The contest covers such points as attendance, participation in meetings, new members for the society, life service, quiet half-hour and tithers' leagues, finances and socials. George F. Payne, a senior in the Oregon Agricultural College, has been appointed captain of the contest.

The society is divided according to the group plan, there being six groups and the group obtaining enough degrees to go around the world first wins the contest while the three lowest groups will entertain the three highest.

A sixteen-page bulletin giving all the rules for the contest together with other interesting material such as names of Baptist students attending the Oregon Agricultural College, topics for Sunday services, membership roll, budget, groups, active pledge, and the officers and com-

(Tune: "When the Roll Is Called Up Yonder.")

From our broad and fertile prairies,
From our forests of the north,
From the cities where the tides of sin are strong,
From each village and each hamlet
A new cry is going forth—
Will you help us as we roll the song along?

Chorus:

Minnesota won for Jesus,
Minnesota won for Jesus,
Minnesota won for Jesus,
Let the watchword ever ring out true and strong.

There is joy among the angels,
So the Book of Truth declares,
When a sinner turns away from every wrong,
And the gospel in its sweetness
Shall dispel all gloom and cares,
While the hearts of Christian workers sing this song.

So we'll sing the song together,
We will work and we will pray.
And we'll give to help the Master's cause along;
Then our hearts shall throb with pleasure
As the sin-clouds roll away,
And we'll listen as the angels sing

mittees, has just been printed by the society for the use of the young people of the church.

The society is giving a social every Friday night at the church for young people of the city and college. Last week a "Kids Party" was given under the direction of the intermediate society with more than eighty present. The next party will be a "hard-times social."

Dr. W. A. Waldo, pastor, has been conducting a course on Baptist principles, using five minutes each week for this purpose.

MICHIGAN

May 12-14. The annual meeting of our state B. Y. P. U. conferences is planned for Saturday morning May 13, and will be of especial value to Sunday-school teachers and Young People's Society leaders. Great inspirational addresses will be given each day, closing the young people's program on Sunday evening. The Ministers' Conference will be held on Monday, May 15, and the official sessions of the Michigan Baptist Convention, Tuesday, May 16.

July 20-28. The time of our Baptist Summer Assembly at Kalamazoo College. A fine program is being planned. Watch for further announcements, and begin now to plan eight days' delightful fellowship with the Baptist young people of our state. Those who attended the assembly last year will be organizing "Summer Assembly Boosters" clubs in our churches.

OHIO

Lincoln Park: A Serious Operation.
Hello, Miami folks. How are you all getting along? We have not been so well in the past year, 1921, and so our president represented the Union as the patient who has been failing in health. All things were taken into consideration, and it was decided to call in Dr. Fixit, Dr. Pain, Dr. Sew-Sew for consultation as to the ailments of the patient (Union). After a brief discussion they thought it best to send for Dr. Cut-It-Out, who diagnosed the case as chronic anemia due to the lack of proper nourishment (cooperation). Then the noted surgeon made a thorough analysis of the patient (Union) in general. By using a delicate instrument called a headometer he discovered ramollesment or softening and shrinking of the brain caused by failing to study God's divine word and B. Y. P. U. topics. Eyes suffering conjunctivitis or astigmatism resulting from looking upon worldly things rather than fastening the eyes on heavenly things. "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help." (Psalms 121:1.) Ears, suffering antitragus caused by having failed to take heed how they hear. To get relief ears must be inclined to wisdom. "He that turneth away his ears from hearing the law, even his prayers shall be abomination." Tongue heavily coated due to lack of exercising during the singing of songs, speaking on the topic of God's word. Stomach badly corroded attributed to undigested words, "Words like food must be masticated to get the proper digestment." Dr. Cut-It-Out found little ailments or ulcers scattered over the whole anatomy but of little value. Dr. Sew-Sew, with the help of nurse, Sylvia Snyder, sewed up the patient (Union) and pronounced the patient well.

NEBRASKA

The probable date of the Nebraska Baptist Young People's Assembly is July 20-Aug. 6. This date may be changed slightly to accommodate the program talent coming from other assemblies.

There is another date the young people of the state must also keep in mind. It is June 28-July 2. The event is the national convention of the B. Y. P. U. of A. at St. Paul. Nebraska ought to send 100 young people to this convention. For particulars write to Mr. Joe G. Anderson, 2514 Marcy St., Omaha. Mr. Anderson is the transportation leader for the state.

One of the best Young People's rallies held in recent years was held Feb. 11-12 with the First Church of Mead. The young people of Wahoo, Immanuel Mead and Valley joined in the rally. Pastor Osbeck and his young people worked out a fine program and entertained the visitors with true Swedish hospitality. Both dinner and supper were served in the fine dining room of the church. In this way the visitors could spend the entire day in the church. Rev. A. C. Hull, of Grand Island who is now engaged in the Continuation Campaign happened to be working in that part of his district so joined heartily in the rally. One of the pleasing features of the program was the excellent music furnished by the Wahoo Orchestra.

6,000 Delegates

St. Paul, June 28-July 2

A Convention with a Purpose

The Minnesota Baptists are getting ready to entertain an International Baptist Young People's Convention. This Convention, the thirty-first of its kind conducted by the Baptist Young People's Union of America, will convene in St. Paul for a five-day session, beginning June 28. A score of committees are right now being organized to take charge of the necessary arrangements. Some of these committees have already been intensively active for several weeks. The churches of Minneapolis and St. Paul are carrying on an extensive campaign at the present time to enrol a large attendance in order to make possible the greatest convention of its kind ever held. Some of these churches already have responded by registering attendance at the convention larger than their total church membership. One St. Paul church has turned in registrations amounting to 200 per cent of their church membership. Another church, a working men's church in the missionary field has reported registration of 105 per cent. Why should these two churches go to all that trouble? Is it worth it?

This coming convention is a convention with a purpose. Its central object is to relate the lives of all Baptist young people to definite tasks in the program of the kingdom of God. The records of the past five annual conventions tell us that an average of 13 per cent of the young people in attendance have decided to give their lives to the ministry and missionary callings. The committees in charge of securing registrations have announced that they will not assign any quotas to local churches. It is up to each church to decide what its quota of attendance at the convention will be. In other words, each church must decide for itself how many of its own young people shall be a part of the 13 per cent group.

Present indications suggest that 6,000 delegates will be in attendance upon the convention.

Minneapolis, St. Paul's Twin

Within a short distance from Minneapolis and easily reached by automobile or street car is Lake Minnetonka, the delight of tourists and fisherman and innumerable residents of Minneapolis who own summer homes on its irregular shore line of more than 200 miles.

Artistic development has resulted from the influence of an unusual natural environment, and is exemplified and emphasized by the Minneapolis Institute of Arts. The Walker private gallery of rare collections also is available to the public. The Symphony Orchestra which Minneapolis has developed, is one of the greatest organizations of its kind in the world. The Institute of Arts is a public museum with a magnificent collection of paintings and the decorative arts including household furnishings of the thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.

Minneapolis is the center of education in the Northwest. In addition to a number of excellent music, business and art schools in the city, is the University of Minnesota, one of the principal institutes of higher education in the United States. It occupies an area of 150 acres and has thirty large buildings devoted to various purposes. Its total enrollment is 8,000.

Along with its beauty, Minneapolis is noted for health, its death rate being only 12.2 which is largely attributable to its climate and pure water. The average temperature of summer is 70 degrees and for winter 17 degrees above zero. These temperatures coupled with the dry atmosphere make for invigorating weather in all seasons of the year.

A $10,000,000 water system with 595 miles of mains and a filtration plant "that works" having a daily capacity of 70,000,000 gallons is a decisive factor in the good health record of the city.

Religious Education

Religious Education and Money

By E. M. STEPHENSON

Every life in its journey from infancy to maturity takes on a sort of education. In the home, in the shop, in the school, in the church, in play or the leisure hour one acquires something which is to be his stock in trade for all after life.

This is why all civilized people provide their children and youth the proper assistance, and seek by rational means to aid them in fixing their attitudes, in making their decisions and establishing their principles.

Parents especially are obligated to their children by the full measure of their responsibility. Paul says that if a man will not provide for his own he is worse than an infidel, having denied the faith. The Scriptures tell us that a "child left to himself brings his mother to shame." And we know that this is true of churches, and of communities, of states, and nations. The measure of the shame is the measure of the neglect.

We are learning that what we want in the man we must put into the child. And we are learning the technique. Intellectual education brings the sense of truth; moral education the sense of goodness; aesthetic education the sense of beauty; spiritual education the sense of the ideal; while religious education brings the sense of God.

Sir Henry Taylor once said that money is one of the most important things in life. We all can see that in our day and in this country money is one of the chief concerns of life in all of its activities. With it we furnish our tables, dress our bodies, fill our book cases, buy our magazines, promote education, win wars, and establish religion.

Religion and money are closely associated in the Bible. One hundred and fifty-three times our word money or its equivalent is used in the Scriptures, and in every instance it is associated with one or all of the following ideas, namely, the acquisition of money, the appropriation of money, the application of money.

As one studies this matter as presented in the Bible he can see that the aim of it all was the development of the sense of justice, the restraint of greed, the inciting of the spirit of benevolence and the encouragement of the practice of liberality. The Old Testament teaching was intended to lead up to Christ.

Jesus had very definite ideas to impart, and these are given for our enlightenment. We have no excuse for the condition in which we find our churches of all denominations in this money crisis. It caught us without literature, or at least without any modern presentation in tract or leaflets, and what is more embarrassing, the generality of Christians seem to be unfamiliar with the teachings of Jesus and so have not been gripped by them.

It was Jesus who said: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on the earth * * Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven."

"Give to him that asketh thee."

"He that hath two coats let him impart to him that hath none."

"It is more blessed to give than to receive."

"Freely ye have received, freely give."

It was Jesus who warned against covetousness and classified that sin with the worst known, even idolatry and worse. And along with these he names extortion. Paul follows closely in the track of Jesus in his teachings on giving. The chief example is in his letter to the church at Corinth in which he relates the story of the grace of God working in the Macedonian church, 2 Cor. 8:1-5.

Our duty is clearly indicated and a definite line of teaching ought to be outlined and courses of training in the grace of beneficence adapted to the ages and state of development of the pupils, and so produce giving as well as teaching and preaching Christians. We need to remind ourselves that our task is never finished. Each new child is the beginning of a new course. "Generations come; generations go;" our tasks remain forever. This educational task is with the great commission an everlasting obligation. We must have money as well as men to "carry on." If men and women give themselves to the work in every land we who stay must give the money. But giving is all of grace and grace is all of God.

Testimony of a Bible Worker

I want to add mine to the many testimonies that have already gone forth, telling of the blessings that have come to individual Christian men and women through systematic and proportionate giving. Sixteen years ago when my salary was only $700 a year, my wife and I decided to give a tenth of our income to the Lord. Up to this time we found it almost always a hard thing to give to missions, and other special appeals that were made from time to time, for coal, repairs of Church and interest on mortgage. We disliked very much in those days to see the secretary of any of our mission societies take the pulpit on a Sunday morning, but now it is different; we love to "honor the Lord with our substance, and the first fruits of all our increase." The battle has been fought and the surrender has been made, now it is a pleasure to give to the Lord's cause.

International Uniform Lesson for April 23

UZZIAH'S PRIDE AND PUNISHMENT
2 Chronicles 26:1-21. Golden Text Proverbs 16:18-25.

Background

Joash, who walked righteously only so long as the high priest Jehoiada lived to advise him, was put to death by his own servants after a reign of forty years. His son Amaziah succeeded him, a conquering and for the most part a good king. Following him came his son, Uzziah, who reigned for fifty-two years.

Lesson

The sixteen-year-old Uzziah coming to the throne of the Southern Kingdom "did that which was right in the eyes of Jehovah, according to all that his father Amaziah had done. And he set himself to seek God . . . and as long as he sought Jehovah God made him to prosper."

Uzziah was a progressive, aggressive man and king. He was a conqueror of the Philistines, he subdued the Arabians and forced the Ammonites across the Jordan to pay tribute. He strengthened the fortifications and the outlook, building great towers, and erecting engines for hurling stones of as great as three hundred pounds weight. He had cisterns hewed for the flocks of the field. He was the sort of man who becomes a popular idol, and his head was turned just as the heads of men have been turned through all of the ages when success and acclaim comes to them. He was so strong now that he no longer felt the need of calling upon God as in his younger, less sure days. He was so strong, indeed, that he trespassed against Jehovah and usurped the rights of the priests by going into the Holy Place, which it was lawful only for the priests to enter, and there burning incense. The high priest Azariah, and eighty other priests followed the king and ordered him out of the sanctuary.

Uzziah proceeded forth with the censer containing the incense as though the priests had not spoken. Was not he king? Then his forehead broke out into leprosy before the priests and he was thrust out of the temple as an unclean thing. As long as he lived the leper Uzziah, according to the law, dwelt in a separate house while his son Jotham lived in the palace and ruled the nation.

Our Own Folks

An Announcement

In view of the financial crisis, the board of managers of the Foreign Mission Society has appointed two special committees: one on expenditures on the foreign field, and the other on expenses of home administration. The committee on field expenditures has been studying its difficult problem for some time, and it has been thought wise to send its chairman, who is also the chairman of the board's standing committee on work in Japan, China and the Philippine Islands, Rev. Carey W. Chamberlin of Beverly, Mass., to the Far East, to confer with our missionaries in various conferences in China and Japan, and to visit stations. In both countries he will consider with the missionaries what readjustments and possible reductions would affect the work least vitally.

Missionaries in China especially are anxious that Foreign Secretary Franklin, who has not visited that country for seven years, should come to the Far East. It does not appear practicable, under present conditions, for him to make an extended tour in the Orient, but he has been authorized by the board to attend the National Christian Conference to be held at Shanghai, China, May 2-11, which is to be composed of about 500 missionaries and an equal number of Chinese leaders from every section of the country. The Morrison Centenary Conference in China in 1907 was composed entirely of foreign missionaries. The rise of national consciousness and the development of Chinese leadership now make possible a conference with large and influential Chinese representation. Such joint representation is highly desirable in view of the acute problems which are emerging.

Besides attending the National Christian Conference in China and a similar gathering in Japan, Mr. Chamberlin and Secretary Franklin will participate in important Baptist Conferences in both countries, where urgent questions of policy are to be discussed, which must be considered by the board of managers as they plan expenditures for the future. If reductions in appropriations must be made, the savings must be effected as intelligently as possible, after discussion with representatives of the missions.

Mr. Chamberlin and Secretary Franklin are to confer with the missionaries, especially on questions such as these: If reductions in expenditures become necessary, where can they be made with least injury to the work? Are there comparatively unfruitful stations, or unfruitful forms of work, which should be discontinued, with a view to investment of life and available funds in fields of peculiar promise? Is emphasis being placed unduly on one form of work at the expense of another? What steps can be taken to increase further the evangelistic usefulness of every form of work? How can the Chinese and Japanese churches be made more largely self-supporting and more zealous for the evangelization of their own lands? What can be done to develop more rapidly a native leadership properly qualified to accept a larger measure of responsibility in the oversight of the various forms of missionary effort? How can our Baptist missions, while co-operating in all practicable ways with other evangelical bodies, make their own contribution of our distinctive doctrines most widely and helpfully to the country at large?

Mr. Chamberlin and Secretary Franklin sailed respectively March 18 and March 23. Mrs. Chamberlin accompanied her husband at no expense to the society. They are reluctant to undertake a journey which involves laborious and somewhat ungrateful tasks. The board believes, however, that this commission to the Far East, like all similar visitations in the past, will pay for itself many times over and at the same time will result in better understanding and encouragement—Frederick L. Anderson, chairman of the board of managers.

A New Chapter In Religious Liberty

By BENJAMIN OTTO

Have Baptists more than an ordinary opportunity for mission work among the Polish people today?

Let us see. Recently I was waited upon by a representative of the Polish Educational Alliance of Chicago. He came bearing a request that I address a public meeting of that body on the subject, "Religious Liberty and the Separation of Church and State."

I was sick in bed at the time, but, of course, I could not decline an invitation like that under any circumstances. Imagine my delight, when on the appointed evening, in Schoenhofen Hall, I looked from the platform into the faces of 1,500 of the finest Polish manhood in Chicago and about 100 women.

It is to be remembered that probably 95 per cent of these people were Roman Catholics by connection and association. However, never have I spoken to an audience more sympathetic with my utterances and where applause could have proved more heartily their approval of the sentiments expressed. (I spoke, of course, in English.) It was manifest that Rome had lost her hold on these "new Americans" and that Baptist principles found a responsive chord in their hearts.

The other speakers were Rev. John Frydryk of the Polish Baptist Church; Mr. A. Dudzik, Baptist Bible worker; Mr. T. Kozak, editor and proprietor of the "People's Daily," the leading Polish newspaper in this country; and Mr. A. Izyski, Polish ex-vice-consul, about to return to Poland on the urgent solicitation of the "Agrarian party" to stand as a candidate for election to the Polish congress. (One prominent plank of that party is "religious freedom.") Every utterance of these speakers was in harmony with my address and emphasized the points I had made.

The presiding officer, Professor Ostrowski, a graduate of the University of Cracow, and a high-school instructor, not only performed the duties of his office with rare grace, but paid a glowing tribute to the contribution which the Baptists have made to the world by standing so strenuously and consistently for their principles. He also referred feelingly to their sympathy with the Polish people, expressed in the sending of the "Ship in Fellowship."

The far-reaching significance of the meeting in Schoenhofen Hall can hardly be over-estimated. It is well known that Pope Pius XI is a "political pope," and that the "tiara" virtually came to Cardinal Ratti as a reward for his work as Papal Nuncio to Poland in the days of the drafting of the constitution of the young republic. He looked well after the interests of Rome, indeed so well that he made his departure more agreeable than his arrival.

Suffice it to say that, though the meeting was not explicitly called as a protest against the election of Cardinal Ratti to the papacy, that gentleman would hardly have felt flattered by the compliments paid him and the applause by which they were greeted; neither would he have been reassured of the loyalty of the Polish people to the Holy See.

The Poles of America have learned the justice of religious liberty and the blessings which flow from it. And they are demanding these benefits for their friends across the sea, and urging them to demand them for themselves.

Easter 1922 and the Y. M. C. A.

By JOHN F. MOORE
Associate General Secretary, International Committee

From its inception the Young Men's Christian Association has been in the truest sense of the term a Christian movement. By keeping the Christian ideal ever before it the association has been enabled to hold steady in the face of temptations now and again to turn to the right or to the left.

When one remembers the remarkable growth of this agency of the Christian church within recent years it is easy to realize how frequently temptations to forgetfulness of vital principles may have threatened or cajoled. From 200,000 members in 1890 to 1,000,000 members in 1922; from $10,000,000 worth of property then to nearly $150,000,000 now; from a work limited to but a few countries to a movement now world-wide and established on all continents; from an agency reaching a few classes of men to one that now reaches with its help all men—this is the story of the progress of this Christian movement. Does it, therefore, seem strange if now and then in the rush and strain of this marvelous progress occasional leaders pressed by innumerable material problems seemingly neglected for a little the supreme purpose for which the association was born? Their forgetfulness was inexcusable but not beyond understanding.

It is the crowning achievement of this organization that despite occasional lapses of individuals here and there the heart of the Young Men's Christian Association has been true in Christian faith and service through these many years. Never more than today was the Association possessed by a conviction that the highest form of ministry it can offer is not its well-equipped gymnasiums, its ever-growing educational classes or its manifold social privileges, but rather the Christ who can help men in the struggle of life and enable them to round out their characters in symmetry and beauty. Associations throughout the country are making a special effort this year to bring men and boys into the kingdom during the Easter season. A special campaign to this end has been carefully prepared and prayerfully inaugurated. The entire staffs of associations center upon this great end. Men in the association dormitories, students in the educational classes, men in the gymnasiums and the hosts of boys who through these buildings, will alike be invited and be sought in frank and brotherly way to relate themselves definitely to the Christian life and to join and share in the duties of the Christian church. A start in the plan of an annual pre-Easter ingathering was made a year ago. At that time a number of associations undertook a definite and highly successful work along this line. So fruitful was their endeavor that the larger program planned for 1922 follows naturally that of last year.

Cuba

By E. P. BRAND

We had the privilege of spending Feb. 10-15 in the island of Cuba. The first thing that claimed our attention after arriving in the city of Havana was the Baptist church and schools and missions. Missionary Diaz secured a large theater property before the Spanish-Cuban war, and while the Southern Baptist Convention had much trouble with him over this and the cemetery property, the convention finally got complete possession of the theater corner and one-half of the cemetery ground. The convention has within recent years put $150,000 in repairs upon the theater property. It is one of the best, if not the best, corners in Havana, a city of about 400,000. This building affords room for the work of the Cuban American College, the theological seminary, the English and Spanish churches, Sunday school and social work, provides a home for the pastor and all the teachers but one, and they rent out enough space to bring in $7,000 annually.

February 12 I was invited to preach for the English-speaking church at the morning service. Rev. W. B. Miller, principal of the college, is pastor of the English-speaking church. There were about seventy-five present. Rev. M. A. McCall, pastor of the Spanish church and teacher of the theological students, invited me to preach for the Spanish speaking church Sunday night. He interpreted the sermon into Spanish. There were about 250 present.

Dr. McCall has a general oversight of the Baptist work in eastern Cuba for the Southern Baptist Convention. On Tuesday, February 14, he took his automobile and with his wife and little son, drove us sixty-five miles to Matanzas, a city of 50,000 people. The Baptists have a good meetinghouse, well located, and a prosperous mission in that city. We had the privilege of going through one of the large sugar factories. The price of sugar is so low in Cuba that the planters are having very hard times.

Cuba would be one of the garden spots of the world if the people were capable of self-government and could have honest and efficient officers. The general government seems to be about bankrupt at this time. We do not want Cuba as a state but it seems to me that ultimately our government will have to take a general oversight of the island and manage its financial affairs so far as the general government is concerned. This could be done in some such way as we are governing the Philippines at this time. We cannot afford to have so rich a country and people with such great possibilities as Cuba and the Cubans, within ninety miles of the states, so badly misgoverned. We were well treated by the Cubans and some of them expressed a longing desire to be governed by the United States government.

Keokuk Celebrates Seventy-Fifth Anniversary

During the week Jan. 29-Feb. 5, inclusive, First Church of Keokuk, Iowa, celebrated its seventy-fifth anniversary.

Feb. 5, 1847, eleven Baptist people met in the old schoolhouse which stood at Third and High Streets, and decided to establish a church, with Rev. J. N. Seely as pastor, at a salary of $300 per year. During its history the church has occupied successively four buildings, the present one having been erected in 1908, and it is now inadequate to properly take care of the Sunday school.

Former pastors who are living are Dr. Hugh A. Heath, Rev. R. S. Walker, Rev. J. F. Sanders and Rev. F. B. McAllister. The present pastor, Rev. Harvey J. Moore, began his work with this church on Dec. 1, 1918.

The church was fortunate in having Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery present for the first day of the anniversary program, Sunday, Jan. 29. Mrs. Montgomery spoke at all of the services of the day and was an inspiration to the large number who heard her. On the Saturday afternoon preceding, the ladies held an informal reception for Mrs. Montgomery.

A very helpful sacred concert was given Monday evening by the choir and other friends who kindly assisted, under the direction of Mrs. Meta Kummer-Kiedaisch, choir director. Tuesday evening was the occasion of a banquet, at which a number of the older members gave reminiscences of the former days; and the address of the evening was given by Rev. G. P. Mitchell, state director of missions, of Des Moines. Rev. G. W. Cassidy, executive secretary of the Iowa State convention, was the speaker on Wednesday evening. His subject, "The Church Attractive," was presented in a way to inspire all present. On Thursday evening the work of the B. Y. P. U. was given consideration. Rev. James Asa White, executive secretary of the B. Y. P. U. of America, Chicago, was present and gave an exceptionally helpful message. The local young people had prepared some original songs with which they greeted Mr. White when he stepped to the platform.

An interesting feature of the celebration was the pageant on Friday evening, which depicted the history of the church from the first meeting, Feb. 5, 1847, to the present time. The interiors of the former church buildings were reproduced with great accuracy; candles were used for lighting the earlier buildings. Those taking part wore the costumes of the period represented, and as Keokuk homes are rich with antiques one will readily understand that the costumes aroused a great deal of interest. The final scene was a beautiful one enacted by the B. Y. P. U., picturing the work of God's missionaries in bringing the gospel to the nations of the world. Between the scenes pictures of many of the former pastors and members were thrown on the screen, and brought back vividly to the older members interesting experiences of the former days. At the close of the pageant, Father Time, the pastor in disguise, called to the platform Mrs. Virginia Linebaugh, who is eighty-four years of age, and who has been a member of the church for sixty-three years, and has worshipped successively in each of the four buildings.

The final services of the anniversary week were held on Sunday. In the morning former pastor, Rev. J. F. Sanders, occupied the pulpit, and in the evening the pastor, Rev. Harvey J. Moore. The celebration will always be remembered as a milestone in the history of the church.

FIRST CHURCH, KEOKUK, IOWA

CONNECTICUT

The Woman's Mission Conference of the New Haven Association was held in the First Church, New Haven, March 2, with a good attendance, despite weather and the prevailing epidemic. The usual routine business was transacted, after which an excellent report of the White Cross Work done in the association was given by the director, Mrs. George Brown. Mrs. J. H. Morsehead of Waterbury, clearly defined the methods for reading contests. The First Church, of which Mrs. Morsehead is a member, won both the state and district cups in the reading contest. An inspiring devotional period has been arranged for the close of the morning session and was carried through by Miss Ruby Weed, Calvary Church, New Haven. After a luncheon served by the ladies, Miss Helen Hudson of New York General Board of Promotion, presented the Continuation Campaign for Mrs. J. D. Rough, state director, who was confined to her home by illness. Miss Mildred Mosier of Burma, made a very strong presentation of the needs of the Burmans, spoke interestingly of the Morton Lane School, and plead that she might be privileged to return to the work in Burma. Miss Marion Lathrop, the Americanization secretary for the New England District, presented vivid word pictures of opportunities for Christian Americanization work throughout the district. Resolutions and the spirit of the entire meeting indicated a willingness for stewardship and service on the part of the women to meet the present crisis. The women of the Ashford Association, the Stonington Union Association, and the Fairfield Association, have also held their conferences, which were well attended, with a splendid spirit and determination to do their best to help meet the emergency of the present hour.

Dr. Hugh A. Heath, New York, and Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, Buffalo, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, spent several days in Connecticut during the week beginning March 12, in the interests of the campaign for completing the promotion program of the present year. Interviews, conferences, and public meetings, were held in Hartford, New Britain, Putnam, Norwich, New London, Meriden, Middletown and Bridgeport. The programs for the woman's continuation campaign, and the laymen's campaign, were presented, discussed, and definite steps suggested for the completion of each. Others assisting in this special campaign, Mrs. J. D. Rough, director of woman's work; Miss Mary L. Howard, president of the state woman's society; Rev. Donald B. MacQueen, Bridgeport; Dr. A. B. Coats and Rev. E. E. Gates, of the state office; Rev. Chester H. Howe, New London; Rev. David A. Pitt, Norwich; Rev. E. R. Hyde, Middletown; Rev. J. C. Stoddard, Putnam; Rev. B. N. Timbie and the director of promotion.

On Monday, March 20, the Stonington Union Association held a special meeting in the Mystic Union Church, to select their laymen representatives on the Laymen's State Council, and for the purpose of discussing ways and means of doing their share in the campaign to raise Connecticut's quota for the year. At the present writing, the State Laymen's Council stands: Hobart G. Truesdell, Hartford Association; W. J. Grippin, Fairfield Association; J. E. Sheppard, New Haven Association; E. E. Rogers, New London Association; E. F. Wilcox, Stonington Union Association; W. E. Moss, Ashford Association. A meeting of the state council was called for Thursday, March 23.

Rev. William T. Thayer, director of religious education for the Connecticut Convention, has taken over the educational work of the Connecticut Sunday-school association on half time. This arrangement gives Mr. Thayer a much wider field of operation, reducing expenses of both organizations on services, and makes for greater efficiency in the work.

Philadelphia Letter

BY ARTHUR C. BALDWIN

Among general items of news, the Sesqui-Centennial of 1926, is assuming larger proportions. Already congress has received a message from the president asking for an appropriation for it. The site will be Fairmount Park, the choice of six locations, all admirable. Already the Parkway that will lead to the Fair grounds from City Hall is witnessing the erection of two great buildings, a magnificent library and an art museum on a hill, a real Philadelphia acropolis. There will be much to see. We advise our friends to plan for Philadelphia in 1926.

Dr. Conwell is perennial. He is always on the front page. That is because he does things; he is news. Lately he passed his seventy-ninth birthday. He is celebrating his youth by doing five men's work day after day. He is preaching to literally capacity audiences on Sunday evenings in the great Temple. He lately broke ground for a new building to cost $800,000, which sum has been secured largely through his initiative. The new building on the corner of Broad and Montgomery is to be a Temple Annex. They say that more than 100,000 students have passed through the portals of the Temple since Dr. Conwell established it.

In Baptist circles we note several important churches that are pastorless or soon to be so. Oak Lane has lost Pastor Tomkinson owing to his ill health. This is a most promising field in the suburbs with a fine parsonage, a big building enterprise on hand and a loyal, aggressive people. Gethsemane Church is doing fine work with Acting Pastor Bennett but still waits for the right man to be found for pastor. Lansdown mourns because S. Arthur Devan has decided to accept the call to Plainfield, N. J. He was a Rhodes scholar at Oxford, served as chaplain with the A. E. F., has been a regular lecturer at Crozer while pastor at Lansdown. He is recognized as a man of unusual gifts of scholarship and personality. His going is a real loss here but will carry good to Plainfield.

Many friends have been concerned with the continued ill health of Dr. Carter Helm Jones. They will be glad to know that the seat of the difficulty has probably been located and a slight tonsil operation been performed. We expect to see Dr. Jones in his full vigor before long. The First Church has flourished this year as usual under his ministry and will report a most successful year. The important social service department continues to enlarge and demonstrate its usefulness. There is something on all the time in the old church.

Second Church, Germantown, reports a school of missions with an average attendance of 117. It has attained 900 points in the reading contest. Thirty-six are enrolled in this reading contest of which ten are men.

The life-work committee of the Baptist Union conducted a party of forty young people on a tour to Baptist points of interest, March 14. They went to the Italians and Roumanian missions and at 9 o'clock met at the Italian Church. There the inevitable addresses were made and welcome refreshments served. April 30, Mr. Slawter, chairman of the four committee, plans to present this city mission work to every young people's society in our churches. The desire is that all our B. P. Y. U. societies observe April 30 as Baptist city mission night.

The following item may be news to some and is certainly of kingdom interest. Some years ago an agency was organized which is now known as the Pennsylvania Medical Missionary Society. It is maintained by a group of women of various denominations, living for the most part in the suburbs of Philadelphia. They have taken as their task the assistance of young men and women who wish to do medical work on the foreign field. During thirty-one years seventy men and women have received aid in securing a medical education. Among its earliest students were Dr. Charles Henderson of Burma and Dr. P. H. J. Lerrigo, formerly of the Philippines and now Home Secretary. At present there are seventeen students, each of who is receiving $300 a year for a four-year course in a medical school, if that amount is required.

Another item of this society is the open hospitality for four cottages near Atlantic City on the Jersey shore. Missionaries and their families can have a cottage, rent free, for a month. Thirty-three of our Baptist missionary families have enjoyed such a rest. One cottage is the Doane Memorial, given by Mrs. George Doane in memory of her father, and Baptist applicants have the preference. Mrs. Doane is planning to build three other two-family cottages close by for the same purpose.

I am glad to commend this society to the prayers and interest of all. The work is a growing one. More applications for help are being received now than ever before. Those who can help financially should address the president, Mrs. Thomas F. Branson, Rosemont, Pa.

St. Louis News and Notes

By W. E. DARROW

Fifty years of history were celebrated by the Woman's Missionary and Benevolent Union of our St. Louis Association March 7-8, the first evening being given to a missionary pageant, entitled "The Cup of Salvation," in Third Church, and the morning and afternoon of the second to a program of worship and addresses in Second Church. All the meetings were largely attended.

The pageant, written for the occasion by Mrs. Clyde McNay of Immanuel Church, this city, with Virginia Ricketts as artist, was impressively presented, Mrs. W. H. Geistweit playing the leading role of "Christianity" and Mrs. R. S. Hughes directing the presentation. The four charter members seated on the platform during the pageant and the later celebration were Mrs. Charles Gerhard, Mrs. Carrie M. McCormick, Mrs. Priscilla Teasdale and Mrs. W. B. Harris. Mrs. Wm. Kreiter, Chicago, the other living charter member, could not attend.

The program in the Second Baptist Church began at 10:30 A. M. with an organ prelude by Miss Avis Blewett. Mrs. John T. Long conducted a devotional service. Then followed the election of officers. The new officers include: Mrs. W. L. Johnson, president; Mrs. W. F. Cole, vice-president;

Mrs. E. A. Partney, recording secretary; Mrs. John Edwards, treasurer; Mrs. Clyde McNay, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Chester A. Ross, associational secretary.

An organ prelude by Miss Avis Blewett followed a luncheon, attended by about 500. Mrs. J. G. Reynolds, state cor. sec. Missouri W. M. U., conducted the devotional service. Then came a processional and presentation of jubilee offering, more than $8,000 being donated by the thirty-seven churches of the St. Louis Baptist Association to a permanent fund, the interest from which is to be used by the Union to maintain a mission worker among the foreign population of St. Louis. Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, delivered the address of the afternoon. She spoke of the New World Movement of the Northern Baptist Convention, showing its basis in Christian education, home missions, the Sunday school and foreign missions, with fundamental problems and possibilities alike to Baptists of the entire continent, including the Northern and Southern Baptist Conventions. She said that the new policy of the Northern Baptist Convention was to carry on Christian education on a national basis. "Out of the 20,000 names in 'Who's who?' 78 per cent of them are college graduates, and less than 7 per cent of the whole country are college graduates. This is just an example of the tremendous significance of the value of education, and the responsibility that rests on our shoulders in making education possible for our children. There are lots of smug Baptists who care more for their good times, their cars and their money than they do for the educational opportunities of their children. Some of us are misrepresenting education, some of us are not urging it strongly enough on the younger generation, and some of us are not giving enough. There are twenty-two colleges, twenty academies and seven theological seminaries in the denomination. The new program provides for national support of these institutions instead of placing the burden upon the small locality in which the college is located. Too many small country churches are drying up because of a lack of problems big enough to keep them busy and awake."

A souvenir program, containing a brief chronicle of the rise and progress of Baptist development in St. Louis Association from 1800-1922, was prepared by the Union. In the books is the history of the union which Miss Eleanor Mare prepared for the jubilee celebration. Also a sketch of Baptist beginnings and brief history of the churches in the Association. There are names of men and women closely identified with Baptist development in and beyond our city, some of whom have passed on to their eternal reward. Reference is made to Dr. Manly J. Breaker and "The Missouri Plan," of which he was the originator and in the active inauguration of which he did more than any other man. The missionary from this Union is Miss Selma Maxville, of the Ellen Mitchell Memorial Hospital, Moulmein, Burma.

It meant much for Baptist women fifty years ago to organize such a society. Many of our Baptist churches did not believe in its necessity, and a few Baptist women had the vision of its possibility. There is much in store for the next fifty years.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN

Rev. Benjamin Otto, superintendent of the Executive Council of Chicago, has been secured to give the chief address at the coming annual meeting of the Detroit Union. Dr. Otto's father was a former honored pastor in Detroit and the return of the son will be a real event in Baptist circles in Detroit.

The church in St. Clair Heights has been greatly handicapped since Rev. C. F. Hamilton came as pastor, because of inadequate housing. This is to be remedied very soon. The church and the Detroit Union are working in hearty co-operation to this end and the new building should be ready for occupancy in the fall. The new edifice will be located near one of the large east side school buildings where there is already a Sunday school of nearly 200 members.

The new edifice for the Royal Oak church is already under roof. It will be ready for occupancy before the summer is past.

Redford is a rapidly growing residential suburb of Detroit. The Baptist church has been having growing pains ever since Rev. H. H. Davis came. Plans are ready for a new house of worship, so greatly needed, and building operations will begin in a few days. Here again only the auditorium will be built at first, at a cost of about $50,000, to be followed soon with a fine Sunday school and chapel building as soon as financial ability will permit. The present building will be moved off to one side to serve as a chapel until the new building is ready and complete. This too, promises to be one of our outstanding churches as soon as the plant will permit of the growth that will surely come.

Plans have been approved and bids received for the new edifice for the Hudson Avenue church to be built on the strategic site corner Grand River and Clarendon Avenues. This is a choice residential neighborhood on the growing west side, four and one half miles off from the city hall. Since Rev. Robert White came to the Hudson Avenue church there has been a growing solidarity of the congregation. He is a witty Scotch preacher, strongly evangelistic and is most effectively supported by his good wife who has had experience on the foreign field. The present building has been outgrown and every effort will be made to get into the new building before snow flies. It will be the auditorium unit, to be followed by a Bible-school building which will make it one of the finest plants the Detroit Baptists have. The first unit will cost $75,000.

Monday, March 27, the Detroit Baptist Ministers Conference gave a farewell reception to their fellow member, Rev. Peter MacKay, who concluded his ministry with the Birmingham church to begin the pastorate of the Trinity church of Cleveland, Ohio. Dr. H. F. Stillwell, who was with the Temple church Sunday, was present. He addressed the pastors and cordially welcomed Mr. MacKay to the larger field that Cleveland affords.

Miss Brinson has been with us in Detroit for several weeks where she is always welcome. She is helpfully inspiring with a real vision and a real message. Christian Americanization is gaining in Detroit in many ways. We have a complicated problem here—the Angel School, Highland Park, almost within a stone-throw of the great Ford Motor Company factory, has thirty-five nationalities represented. The Conley Memorial Church has a mission Bible school in that same public school building.

Under the inspiring leadership of Rev. W. A. Steinkraus, the mission Bible school, at the Monier school house on Grand River Ave., about seven and one half miles off, is being organized into a church. A splendid site was purchased two or three years ago upon which it is proposed to erect at once a temporary building for the new interest. This whole district is developing in a most remarkable manner and it will not be long before a permanent building will be required.

The pre-Easter period is being occupied with aggressive evangelistic programs in nearly all our churches. Our faithful women are back of the Continuation Campaign with their accustomed vigor and consecration. The woman's dormitory at Kalamazoo College must come this year. Dr. F. B. Bachelor, of the college, is in and out of the city every few days. He spoke Sunday, March 26, at First Church. He is a wonderful organizer and the whole state is feeling the influence of his dynamic presence.

DR. H. J. WHALEN, of Greensburg, is helping Second Church of Toledo, Ohio, in evangelistic services.

REV. A. M. GREGG, of Monongahela City, has accepted a call to the Milton Church.

CONNECTICUT

THE MEMBERS OF CONNECTICUT'S State Laymen's Council are:

Ashford Assoc.—Wm. E. Moss, 49 Mechanic St., Putnam; Fairfield Assoc.—T. T. Phillips, 110 Warner St., Bridgeport; Hartford Assoc.—H. G. Truesdell, Chairman, Suffield; New Haven Assoc.—J. F. Shepard, 72 Fairmount Ave., New Haven;

New London Assoc.—E. E. Rogers, 24 Granite St., New London; Frank L. Arnold, 90 Cliff St., Norwich; Stonington Union Assoc.—Elias F. Wilcox, Mystic, W. A. Fraser, Noank.

Mrs. HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY, visited Connecticut for the second time during March, and spoke at the First Church Waterbury, Rev. D. P. Gaines, pastor, and the First Church, Bridgeport, Rev. D. B. MacQueen, pastor.

Rev. D. B. MacQUEEN, of the First Church Bridgeport, has just closed a highly successful stewardship institute and reading contest. Ninety-eight people in the church read Cushman's "The New Christian"; eighty-four read "The Victory of Mary Christopher"; and 147 read "Thanksgiving Ann"; in addition, a number of tracts and leaflets were read by the members of the congregation. The result of the institute and reading contest is a Stewardship League of forty-three members.

Mr. MacQUEEN was the speaker recently at the community service in the Town Hall in the city of Meriden. A large and attentive audience, drawn from the several churches of the city, greeted the speaker.

THE ITALIAN WORK, connected with the Second Church, Bridgeport, under the leadership of Rev. Biagio Isgro, is being singularly blessed. Last Sunday afternoon, a large congregation met in the Second Church and listened to Mr. MacQueen and Mr. Richardson, who brought the greetings of American Baptists. The Hungarian choir, under the leadership of the Hungarian pastor, furnished the music. The ordinance of baptism was administered to several candidates.

Dr. J. HAVERGAL SHEPPARD, is speaking to large and interested audiences at the Deep River Church. The following topics through March, and part of April, are attracting wide attention: March 5—"A Harlot's Hope"; March 12—"A Daughter-in-law's Devotion"; March 19—"A Wise Wife"; March 26—"A Queen's Quest"; April 2—"A Maiden's Ministry"; April 9—"A Hebrew Heroine."

MAINE

CENTRAL SQUARE, PORTLAND: Dr. Addison B. Lorimer, pastor, is completing five years of signal success in this progressive and efficient church. A two weeks' campaign on soul winning in which the pastor and Rev. J. Harrison Thompson of First Church, Portland, have been the preachers has led to deeper interest and many decisions for Christ. A campaign on stewardship and tithing, with Mr. George W. Cash chairman, is in full swing and will mean much to the future of the church. The woman's continuation campaign is being pushed. On a recent evening the church debated the following question. "Resolved, that the Old Testament has more of a missionary message than the New." The church went over the top in its contributions last year and will do the same in the special campaigns of the present year.

DAMARISCOTTA QUARTERLY MEETING: The spring meeting was held with Pastor Emerson and the Alna church. Conditions of roads and weather were unfavorable and attendance small. Pastors Hughes, Everett and Sampson were the only pastors who came. The morning service was notable for the presence of the Holy Spirit, this the more clearly apparent in the afternoon when several persons rose for prayer. The evening service was full of promise.

LISBON FEDERATED CHURCH: Last December Rev. T. E. Ham of Auburn, formerly pastor at Cambridge and afterward at Monson, became pastor of this church. There has been a great advance in interest and a true service is being rendered to the community at large. The Sunday school and the Christian Endeavor Society are especially effective.

LIVERMORE FALLS: The steady work of Pastor F. P. Freeman and his people is securing a correspondingly steady increase in efficiency. The Sunday school and young people's society are prosperous. A "Faithful Fifty League" has signed cards pledging support to the prayer meeting. The question box at the prayer meeting proved a helpful feature. Feb. 26 a silk Christian flag was presented to the Sunday school by Hon. and Mr. F. A. Leavitt in memory of two boys, formerly members, one of whom died at the age of eleven the other in war service. Evangelistic services in union with the Methodist church are now in progress.

INTEREST IN THE VARIOUS activities connected with the United Baptist Church, Oakland, continues good. Sunday school attendance has shown a gratifying increase. The ladies have organized for the Continuation Campaign. Evangelist Harry Taylor and his daughter, Miss Ruth, are expected early in April, to hold special meetings. At the close of the Sunday evening service, March 19, six young ladies were baptised by the pastor, Rev. H. G. Kennedy.

FOR SEVERAL YEARS Misses Nash and Whittier have done constructive work as co-pastors of some of the Maine churches. They are at present at the town of Jay. A letter recently received at headquarters from them said: "Enclosed find check for $84. for the woman's continuation fund. Following the example of our missionaries in Burma, we gladly give one month's salary."

MILO: This church realizes its true relation to the New World Movement as shown by certain resolutions of sympathy, cooperation and obligations passed at a recent church meeting. A canvass of the church and parish members with a view to organizing a tithing league will be made. It is felt that the aggregate pledge of $10,803 made by members should ultimately be paid in full, and that within the period ending April 30, 1924, if possible.

Mississippi Valley

ILLINOIS

Rev. J. H. PIERCE has closed his pastorate at Toulon and will take a six months' vacation touring through the Northwest. He will resume pastoral work in fall.

Rev. Geo. A. SHEETS, of the First Church Rockford, recently presented his resignation, to accept the unanimous call of First Church, Rock Island. Doctor Sheets has accomplished a great work during his six years at Rockford. The membership greatly increased, a new site for the building was secured and a year ago a handsome new church structure and parsonage was dedicated, the building today being valued at $100,000. All of it is provided for in cash and pledges.

OHIO

RESULTS OF "SIMULTANEOUS" evangelistic meetings at Lorain First Church were far beyond expectation. Rev. Forrest L. Fraser of Newark, Ohio, gave ten days to the meetings in preaching and personal work. Forty-two were led to make decisions; some had professed Christ before; eighteen were new. The number of men in their twenties who came forward (having first consented in personal conversation) is interesting. There is little reaction. The value of pastoral evangelism is felt more and more.

FIRST CHURCH OF DELAWARE has concluded evangelistic meetings conducted by Rev. V. S. Phillips, pastor of Tenth Ave. Church, Columbus. There were two baptisms on the closing day, one awaits baptism. Two have been received on experience.

OBERLIN is having its community Sunday evening Lenten services in which the churches and college unite. Dr. Theodore G. Soares was the speaker March 26. Rev. J. F. Smith, formerly pastor of Immanuel Church, Toledo, preached morning and evening, March 19, at First Church.

PRE-EASTER SERVICES will be held at Spring Creek Church during Passion week. Rev. A. J. Croy pastor, will devote ten minutes at each service to object lessons for the children.

THE VIGO CHURCH has been without a pastor for some time. Beginning Jan. 10, Rev. A. J. Grady, of Columbia Station, held a series of meetings under the auspices of the simultaneous evangelistic campaign. Sixteen candidates were received for baptism.

FIRST CHURCH, SANDUSKY, has closed three weeks of special meetings under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. F. A. Twining, assisted by Mr. Meade and his wife of Grand Ledge, Mich. 120 took a stand for Christ and forty-five signified their desire to unite with the church and be baptized.

FIRST CHURCH, HAMILTON, has closed revival meetings with ninety-three additions to church membership. Rev. Arthur Fox, of Paris, Ky., preached.

FIFTY MEMBERS have been added to Tippecanoe City Church in the two years' pastorate of Rev. J. M. Cosby. The treasurer's report shows $5,000 collected and paid out, $1,000 of this to missions. Special meetings during February with thirteen new members received.

A PARSONAGE DEBT of $1,500 has been paid by Dresden Church during the year and there have been twenty additions to the church. Rev. Y. H. E. Reed, pastor, has conducted two successful revivals besides his own church.

IMMANUEL, CINCINNATI: Rev. S. A. Stulce begins his fourth year as pastor. The Sunday school has doubled its attendance in the last three months. A new pipe organ has been installed.

CEDAR AVENUE, CLEVELAND: Without a pastor for six months, since leaving of Dr. M. M. Bales. A pastor has been called.

A MEMBERSHIP JUMP from fifteen to seventy-five is the report of Struthers Church, Mr. Stansel, pastor.

MT. ZION CHURCH, CAMBRIDGE, has a Bible school, a B. Y. P. U. and Sunday services every two weeks with a supply to fill the pulpit.

PLEASANT VALLEY has a good Sunday school with Bible reading and prayer service every other Sunday. A few of the members pay to the New World Movement.

DURING THE YEAR First Church, Portsmouth, held three Bible conferences with such men as Doctors W. B. Riley, L. W. Lawrence, W. L. Munhall, Robert MacQuilken and Chas. T. Alexander. Dr. Alexander was with the church a week in February and rendered great service.

SPECIAL EVANGELISTIC SERVICES at the Mercer Church resulted in eleven additions. Another series of meetings at the Pleasant Grove Church resulted in ten conversions. At the close, however, fifteen candidates were received for baptism.

INDIANA

FULTON CHURCH reports a full "church night" with two mission courses, a worship period, two teacher training classes, story telling, F. W. Young's catechism, and directed play for the younger children. Attendance on Wednesday night recently was seventy-five.

MICHIGAN

THE PARR MEMORIAL CHURCH at Petoskey, E. J. Parsons, pastor, just closed a two weeks' revival campaign under Rev. C. Frank Vreeland, assisted by Rev. Lloyd Green, director of song. The meetings were well attended and profitable in results both from the point of view of conversions and reconsecration of members.

THE ABINGDON PRESS

NEW YORK

CINCINNATI

SINCE THE COMING OF REV. T. B. MARSH, in February, to First Church, Sault Ste. Marie, there has been a steady growth in all departments, especially the Sunday school. The "Brotherhood Class" has been formed, there being fifty present March 19. This class has held two monthly meetings and both times has had good and profitable meetings with a large attendance. Being crowded for room it became necessary for it to seek other quarters. One of the men who had been working with the electric wires about the church, suggested that there was room going to waste in the attic. The result was that the members of the class got busy and in one week's time the room was ready; it is large enough to accommodate a class three times its present size.

FOR NINE SUCCESSIVE Sunday mornings Rev. W. B. Hartzog, of Mason, has been delivering a course of discourses on "Great Themes." There was a growing attendance and the final sermon drew the largest audience of any Sunday morning for months. Sunday evening audiences have been larger than at any time during this pastorate, a course of addresses on "Great Public Questions" being the chief attraction. The church is engaged in special services, Rev. E. J. Cross of Inlay City assisting. Some are manifesting a desire to unite with the church.

MARCH 15, 1922, Rev. H. A. McConnell, of Leslie, passed away to his reward. Funeral services were conducted at the Baptist church by his pastor, Rev. S. J. Hall, assisted by Rev. H. Liddicott of the Methodist church, Rev. O. B. Thurston of the Congregational church, and Dr. W. B. Hartzog of the Baptist church of Mason. Mr. McConnell was born in Calton, Ontario, Dec. 29, 1843. His parents were both staunch Baptists as were his forefathers for generations. He married Sarah B. Bennett at Port Burwell, Ontario, April 18, 1867. Mrs. McConnell survives him. Their two children, Dr. W. C. McConnell and Mrs. Frank Waggoner, both residents of Lansing, Mich., are active members of First Church of that city. Brother McConnell was for many years an untiring worker in the vineyard of the Master. He delivered his last sermon January 29, 1922, in the Congregational church at Leslie.

MISSOURI

SUNDAY SCHOOL ATTENDANCE at Pattee Park Church, St. Joseph, was 280 on March 26, by far the largest this church has had for many years. The men's Bible class with the pastor as teacher has grown from an attendance of about six of a few weeks ago to seventy-two adult men in attendance on this day. The men's class has added a new interest to all the work.

KANSAS

BROTHER AND SISTER GEO. L. ROSE for three weeks held union revival services in Washington, in which five of the churches took active part. The town has been deeply stirred and many prominent business men took their stand for Christ in these meetings. Two hundred and twelve were converted, a large majority of them men. The churches have been awakened and are looking for great things during the coming days. The Baptist church received twenty additions, eighteen by baptism, and expects to receive more.

SOUTH DAKOTA

SIoux FALLS COLLEGE closed the state forensic season without a defeat, with two state championships and a tie for a third. Feb. 7 its women debaters took state honors in women's debate; three days later a freshman orator won first place over seven other schools and brought to the college permanent possession of the state cup, the school having won it twice previously. March 3, the men debaters won both contests in the state hexagonal, tying with Huron College which also won both contests. The Sioux Falls College orator is to represent South Dakota in the divisional contest April 14 at Northfield, Minn., and if successful there in the national contest May 5 at Chicago.

Pacific Coast

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

FIRST CHURCH, SAN DIEGO, F. O. Belden, pastor has been blessed by two weeks of meetings ending March 19, under the leadership of Miss Amy Lee Stockton, assisted by A. L. Miller, musician. Miss Stockton is a native of California, was baptized by Rev. W. F. Harper; graduated at the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, Chicago; for a year was state evangelist for California; then held meetings as far north as Maine and as far south as South Carolina; was in France and England for a time, and has often addressed returned soldiers and sailors. Miss Stockton held a campaign at Scott Memorial Church, San Diego, Rev. L. P. Valentine pastor, following which she went to Hollywood church, Los Angeles, for similar work. March 20, there was an important and well attended meeting at First Church of the pastors of the Baptist churches of San Diego County with lay delegates to hear Rev. Dr. W. F. Harper, Robert H. Scott and Miss Ruth Shipley, of Los Angeles and Pasadena, who presented the cause of our denomination's budget.

FIRST CHURCH, LOS ANGELES: The steady growth of the Sunday school will be found in the following figures: 1918, 239; 1919, 272; 1920, 358; 1921, 544. April 2-May 14, there is a contest between this Sunday school and that of First Church, Oakland, for the highest ratio of attendance. The school has given during the year $750 toward the New World Movement. This is a five-year pledge and is paid up to date. The attainment of a new church building is expected before long.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

THOUSAND OAKS CHURCH, BERKELEY, a new church born on Lincoln's birthday, 1922, is striving to be 100 per cent in every way.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

EVANGELIST FRANKLIN W. SWIFT, was with the First Church of Everett, Rev. W. E. Henry, pastor, March 5-19 in what proved to be probably the greatest evangelistic campaign in the history of the church. Nearly 100 cottage prayer meetings were held during the period. At least 120 responded to the various invitations, many of them being heads of families. The total number of accessions to the membership of the church will be large.

DR. GEO. M. LEHIGH, pastor of Olympia Church, surprised his people March 19 by presenting his resignation to take effect at once. He desired greater opportunity to give his attention to evangelistic work. He assisted Dr. C. O. Johnson in special meetings at First Church, Tacoma, March 13-24. He assists Rev. F. W. Carstens, of Queen Anne Church, Seattle, March 26-April 9, and at the chapel at Third and Cedar Streets, the former home of the Queen Anne Church, April 10-19.

Rev. EDGER BURTON, pastor of Centralia Church held meetings for two weeks, beginning March 19, with the Baptist Church at Dryad. The pulpit of this church is being supplied by Rev. Guy Hathaway, of Lebam.

Rev. W. H. BOWLER, field worker of the board of promotion, was in Western Washington, March 18-20. During that time, with Dr. Geo. F. Holt, director of promotion, five associational conferences regarding the New World Movement were held at Chehalis, Tacoma, Seattle, Bellingham and Mount Vernon. Twenty-eight churches were represented at these conferences.

BETHANY CHURCH, Seattle, Rev. A. H. Nickell, pastor, was assisted for two weeks in special meetings by Rev. Peter Klein, pastor of Dunlap Church.

Dr. JAMES H. FRANKLIN, foreign secretary of the American Foreign Mission Society, spent March 22 in Seattle on his way to Vancouver, from which point he sailed the next day on the "Empress of Russia" for a brief visit to missions in China and Japan. Through the courtesy of Mr. J. E. Franklin, of Seattle, a former parishioner of Dr. Franklin's in Colorado Springs, a few of the pastors and laymen met Dr. Franklin at a noonday luncheon. He spoke at a general meeting at the First Church in the evening, delivering a strong address on "The Open Door to the Orient."

MISS MARGARETTA STUART, a member of University Church of Seattle and a senior in the University of Washington, is temporarily in charge of the work at the Cosmopolitan Mission.

Rev. ANDREW JOHNSON, pastor of the Delta and Sunrise Swedish churches, has resigned and will close his pastorate Easter Sunday.

THE SWEDISH CHURCH AT MOUNT VERNON, Rev. A. H. Johnson, pastor, recently united in union meetings with the Swedish Methodists and Mission Friends under the leadership of Rev. Frank Lindblad. The meetings were held in the Baptist church building. The church was revived and a number won to Christ.

CENTRALIA CHURCH held Feb. 5-March 19, a school of missions. The session was from 6:30 to 7:30 each Sunday evening. Notwithstanding a large amount of sickness during that time and a good deal of stormy weather and an insufficiently heated auditorium which the church is occupying while putting up new building, the school was an unusual success. The last night, after the class work, the closing exercises, in charge of the superintendent, took the place of the evening service.

Springs, Tuesday, March 7, at which time schools were closed and business suspended. At the time of his death he was judge of the county and juvenile court, president of the Colorado Mining Exchange, secretary of the library board and a bulwark of the Baptist church. He leaves a wife, a daughter and a son.

or

She Hath Done What She Could, or Giving What You Have, or Sunday Eggs for Christ.

By ALICE W. S. BRIMSON

"I long to do my share for the denomination, but I have no money that I can give. I do have eggs and I should be glad to give my eggs one day a week for this campaign." This was the substance of a letter that an Iowa Baptist seer wrote from the farm to her state president. The news spread. Other women have followed her example and so in Iowa cases of eggs have been collected as the contribution of some Baptist women for the campaign.

But Iowa women are not alone in their interest. Chicago hands are stretched out to meet them. To help make their gift mean the largest possible amount toward the campaign some busy Baptist women there have offered to sell the eggs in their churches that the Iowa women may have the advantage of city prices.

The spirit thus manifested by the women on Iowa farms and the women in Chicago's busy churches—each willing to do that which she can do—the spirit of sacrifice and cooperation, backed as it is by the prayers of thousands of bands of women, kneeling in groups in communities all over this country, this spirit, the women believe, spells VICTORY in May.

Obituary

SYLVESTER W. KELLY

Mr. Sylvester W. Kelly, deacon of the United Baptist Church at Twin Mountain, N. H., entered into rest March 9, at the advanced age of 89 years. Funeral services were held at the church March 11. Miss L. B. Treadwell officiating. Mr. Kelly came to Twin Mountain when a young man, and has spent practically his whole life here, loved and respected by all as a neighbor and townsman.

He was deeply interested in things pertaining to the church, and one of the strongest desires of his life seemed to be a longing for the salvation of his friends. He firmly believed that life was the time to prepare for the great hereafter. He was faithful in the discharge of the duties intrusted to him. His quiet dignity of manner and underlying all a kindness of heart that was unfailing, he could but draw others to him, and many will feel in his death the loss of a true friend. He is survived by two brothers, one in the West and the other in southern New Hampshire. Both were unable to be present at the funeral. Burial was at Carroll Cemetery in the family lot.

"Another link in the golden chain
Another dear face gone,
But we shall clasp his hand again
On the resurrection morn."
Linnie B. Treadwell.

IN MEMORY OF REV. A. M. ELEY.

Whereas: in His wisdom God has removed from our midst, our brother and pastor who departed this life January 26, 1922, and who for forty-six years was an able exponent of the Baptist faith, filled with the spirit of God, a father as well as leader to his flock, and ever devoted to his family,

Since by his departure the community has lost an able minister, and Harmony Church its shepherd, Resolved, that we bow in humble submission to His will.

By Harmony Baptist Church,

Special services were held March 26, called "Family day" at First Church, Cambridge, at which time fifty families were present with 100 per cent membership, and the house was crowded with other family groups. In the afternoon the city was covered with an every-member visitation in preparation for special meetings being held April 2-16.

A man who believed he knew all about parrots undertook to teach what he thought to be a young mute bird to say "Hello!" in one lesson. Going up to its cage, he repeated that word in a clear voice for several minutes, the parrot paying not the slightest attention. At the final "Hello!" the bird opened one eye, gazed at the man, and snapped out, "Line's busy!"—Boston Transcript.

A Yorkshire M. P., noted for love of punctuality and lack of humor, is superintendent of a local Sabbath school. Let us hope that she is ill."—Christian Life.

Benjamin Moore, the second bishop of New York, was a man noted in his day for his ready wit—a quality that his wife apparently shared with him, says The Youth's Companion. A dinner was given by some one of Gouverneur Morris' friends when he was about to depart for Europe. Bishop Moore and his wife were of the party. In the course of the conversation Mr. Morris observed that since he was going abroad he had made his will, and turning to Bishop Moore said to him, "My reverend friend, I have bequeathed to you my complete stock of impudence." Bishop Moore replied, "Sir, you are not only very kind, but you are very generous; you have left me by far the largest portion of your estate." Mrs. Moore immediately added, "My dear, you have come into possession of your inheritance remarkably soon."

Our Book Shelf

Preaching in London, by Joseph Fort Newton. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.50 net.

During the war, Dr. Newton as pastor of the historic City Temple, London, did valiant service as an interpreter of England and America to each other. He has here given us, not a story of the war, but his impressions of people and events as these were from time to time recorded in his diary. The whole is like a glimpse into the British soul. There is not a dull page here—they are, on the contrary, lively, often surprising, always interesting. Portions appeared in the Atlantic Monthly for August, September and October, 1921.

The Gospel of Beauty, by Samuel Judson Porter, being the Holland Foundation Lectures delivered at the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.25.

Dr. Porter is one of the most eloquent and cultured of our Southern Baptist ministers, and has given us a book which is a delight to read. One realizes afresh as he peruses these glowing pages how close to each other religion and beauty—even beauty of expression—are. The chapter headings are suggestive: An Eye for the Beautiful, Christ the Norm of Beauty, Transfiguration, The Principles of Beauty, Beauty Released, Spiritual Beauty Triumphant. We could wish that every theological student and young minister might read this book, not once but several times.

The Spiritual Pilgrimage of Jesus, by J. A. Robertson. Boston: The Pilgrim Press. $2.25.

This book is an attempt to picture the inner experience of Jesus, to show how reverence, obedience, the strain of faith, and the realization of what is involved in the vision of God, were in his life as in ours. There are three sections, with two chapters under each, namely: The God Consciousness of Jesus, The Divine Vocation of Jesus, The Cross in the Experience of Jesus. To the reviewer this study of the inner development of Jesus has been fascinating, as is any sincere and reverent attempt to make more real to us the experiences through which our Lord passed. The fact that a book of this character has come to its fourth printing is not without significance. We quote the closing words: "All the Father's delight was in the flawless obedience of this human life....Even in the deepest hour of the dark eclipse of the Son's communion with the Father He and the Father were one. There in that life, in the center of human history, and supremely upon the Cross, God's heart looked out at last through human eyes into the wistful faces of seeking men."

Property, Its Rights and Duties, New York: The Macmillan Co. $2.00.

The authors are leading ministers of the Church of England; and Charles Gore, formerly Bishop of Oxford, writes an introduction. These papers go to the foundations of property, ethical, historical and legal; challenge the existing order of society based upon private ownership and control for private ends; and develop constructively the principle of community interest in which the true sanction of property is found. They emphasize the vital distinction of Hobhouse between property for use and property for power, and make the ethical difference clear. The evolution of property, the philosophical theory of property, the principle of private property, the biblical, the early Christian and the medieval ideas of wealth, the bourgeois character of the Reformation, and the relation of property to personality, are presented with scholarly care. This book sets forth the principles of wealth on which the Christian civilization of the future must rest. It ought to be read and discussed in adult classes in the churches.

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

SOME WORDS OF WISDOM

I am amazed once in a while by the difference of some promising vocal student to the church choir as a training ground. My amazement becomes tremendous when the indifference is accompanied by antagonism based on the advice of a teacher. Surely no person informed on the subject would advise against choirs as the medium first to attain experience in public singing, then to acquire style, for the improvement of sight-reading and music drill in general, as a means of learning much about tone-productions and, finally, as the only agency by which students may instruct themselves in the mysteries of poise, of acoustic values, and many other of the smaller essentials. To recite the list of great artists whose novitiates were spent in choirs would be a tedious task, because it would mean, practically, the naming of almost all we read about and spend neat sums to hear.

In New York, let me say, every worthwhile student whose acquaintance I have made has an eye on a good church position. Nor is the place sought merely as an evil necessity; which phase describes the attitude of very many students far away from the difficult and complicated metropolitan field. It is considered a wonderful stepping-stone to success; and I have witnessed a fine, spirited girl in tears—of joy—upon receiving word of her election to a modest position. This girl's choir connection is modest no longer, it may be interesting to add.

In my own faulty fashion I have tried to analyze the small-town student's aloofness to choirs. I think it is, probably, the worst phase of the "big fish in a small pond" conceit which is prevalent among young singers whose hats are tight. The old church is dead; and the familiar members of the congregation are "unable to appreciate a good voice" and "their criticism would be unbearable." How wrong are such conclusions. It is the frank attitude and remarks of their own townspeople that have made innumerable singers instead of discouraging them. The student able to win over his or her own town with its familiarity and lack of musical hypocrisy is positive of winning laurels elsewhere.

At all times we shall always recommend the church choirs as the best friends the embryo Carusos and Matzenauers can have.—From "The Word," issued by The Willis Music Co.

ON MUSIC FOR FUNERAL SERVICES

The selection of organ pieces that are to be used for funeral services requires more thought than is generally given, whether on the part of organists or on the part of those who are in affliction—whose wishes are often respected when they can hardly be commended on the ground of propriety. It has been contended by an eminent prelate of the church of Rome that funeral marches are meaningless. In a vast majority of cases this is true. The ordinary dirge is in a definite sense unchristian in its dismal mournfulness. Such a thing is supremely fitting for the burial of an atheist, or a notorious evil liver.

is to use music that is associated with words referring to the resurrection—for example "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

As an illustration of music used without sufficient thought we would mention "O rest in the Lord." This is often heard at funerals probably because the dead are supposed to be at rest. And for the same reason hymns that refer to "rest" and "peace" are (singular to say) selected more frequently than those which refer to the resurrection and life hereafter. In the case of the Mendelssohn aria we have mentioned, the words form in reality an address by the angel who charges Elijah to go on with his life work. It has no special bearing on a burial service. It is not too much to say that almost all of the instrumental music used at funerals is irrelevant, because generally it is selected without sound reason, and in numerous cases by mourners who allow their personal tastes to outweigh all other considerations.

OUR EXCHANGE DESK

The New Music Review for February.

As usual this fine monthly magazine is of great practical value to all organists, leaders of choirs and lovers of church and organ music. Besides the interesting regular features such as the clever editorials, official announcements of the American Guild of Organists, ecclesiastical music notes by Dr. Stubbs, reviews of valuable new music, programs of outstanding organ recitals, and the ever-handy suggested list of service music for the ensuing month, there is part one of a thought-provoking article on "The Musician and Music Education" by Arthur L. Manchester, in which the present status and methods of the teaching of music are dissected, their faults presented, and the newer modes of pedagogical achievement exhibited and advised. This is one of the musical magazines which is invaluable to the active church-musician, and to the pastor as well.

The Diapason, for March, Chicago.

This monthly journal is another indispensable aid to any one interested in the music of the church. The official organ of the National Association of Organists, also of the Organ Builders' Association of America, it also devotes much space to the more specialized activities of the American Guild of Organists. The monthly page devoted to selections and criticisms of choir and organ music by Harold W. Thompson, and the regular reviews of new music by Harold V. Milligan and the editor, Mr. Gruenstein, are perfect mines of information for the busy organist and choirmaster. For news of the recital and church music field, this journal stands on a plane of its own. This paper, and its confrere, The New Music Review, should be in the hands of every one interested in their particular fields; they are always to be read with interest and profit. Too many of us are prone to get tied up in the circle of our own particular routine and problems; the new ideas and the interchange of methods and materials shown in these magazines will broaden the mental horizon.

Tower Chimes are the Memorial Sublime

Their location becomes a landmark; the sublimity of their music is in harmony with man's feelings of reverence—an outpouring of musical solemnity and worship.

Just the mere touch of a finger upon the electric keyboard in the organist's console, or the minister's study, brings forth the full power of the magnificent, sweet yet sonorous tones of Deagan Chimes.

What more fitting memorial, what greater philanthropy could be bestowed upon any community than the installation of a set of Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes? May we send you more complete information?

A Missionary Prayer

GREAT God, our God and Father, we thank thee for thy patience with Peter when he was boastful; with James and John when they were selfish; with Capernaum and Bethsaida when they were unresponsive.

We thank thee, too, that thou art patient with our generation and with our denomination. We thank thee for thy patience with the liberals among us who fear the kingdom is not making progress unless the "Ark" shaketh gently; and for thy patience with the conservatives of our number who fear the "Ark" will be destroyed unless they reach forth a steadying hand.

Great God, help us to realize our need of progressive brethren to blaze untried trails, and when they return to camp from fruitless search, make us patient with them. Help us, also, to appreciate our conservative brethren, lest we move with haste that makes waste. But, our Father, we pray thy forgiveness for centering attention on men and leaders that should be centered only on our Master. Forgive us when we spend time and energy over a "shibboleth" that should be used in the great ongoing of thy kingdom.

And now, our Father, as we approach the annual gathering of our beloved denomination make us more concerned about the progress of our missionary work than we are about theological terms. Grant that thy spirit may control in the great work to which we are committed. We desire it only for Jesus' sake, Amen.

—M. E. Bollen.

Fresh from the Field

Rev. R. M. West, pastor of the Lewisburg Church, recently baptized one of the students of Bucknell University, a young man who was an atheist when he came to Bucknell, and has been led to discipleship through the Christian influences thrown around him at that college.

Evangelist John M. Linden has recently been assisting Pastor Blake, of the First Church, Stevens Point, Wis., in some good meetings. He is now booking his summer tent dates and can be reached at 1716 Hoyt St., Madison, Wis.

Access to Soviet Russia is very difficult at present, but Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, Baptist Commissioner for Europe, has apparently been granted permission to enter. It is expected that he will soon be in conference with groups of Baptists whose recent letters to the Foreign Mission Society indicate that Baptist churches have multiplied very rapidly in Russia during the last few years.

The British Government has awarded the coveted Kaisari-Hind Medal to missionary S. W. Rivenburg, M. D., who has been working for over thirty years among the Nagas of Assam. During the years Dr. Rivenburg has spent at Kohima, the seat of government for the Naga Hills District, he has rendered incalculable service to the people. When the British Government formally recognized the value of his work by awarding the Kaisari-Hind Medal, the governor commissioner, the divisional vice-governor and the deputy commissioner immediately sent their congratulations. Eight other Baptist foreign missionaries have in recent years been similarly honored by the British Government.

The larger denominations gave last year, per capita, to benevolences (not current expenses): Northern Baptists, $10.05; Congregational, $7.19; Northern Presbyterian, $6.12; Protestant Episcopal, $5.11; Methodist Episcopal (North), $5.04; Southern Baptist, $4.39. The smaller groups gave: United Presbyterian, $21.16; Southern Presbyterian, $14.97; Evangelical Association, $10.28; Reformed (in America), $7.49; Reformed in U. S., $6.13.

In a book review in the issue of April 1, the author of the volume, "Jesus an Economic Mediator," is given as James E. Danby. It should, of course, be James E. Darby, who is pastor of the First Church at New Brighton, Pa. We are glad to give this additional notice of an excellent book and also to note that some of our pastors are putting out significant volumes on religious and economic themes.

Physicians of J. Harvey Gunn, who was compelled to give up his pastorate at San Luis Obispo, Cal., last July, have found his condition worse than it was at first thought and promise him no relief under less than two years' absence from the pastorate. Friends of Mr. Gunn may address him at Pasadena, Cal., R. F. D. No. 2.

A Committee from the Social Service Commission of the Federal Council of Churches, composed of Dr. William W. Tippy, Dr. Rolvix Harlan and Dr. C. M. Lathrop, were in Washington, March 30 and 31, to appear before the Committee on Labor of the House of Representatives to urge the reporting out of a bill providing for a commission which would make a thorough-going study of the coal industry. The presentation of this committee emphasized the human side of the industry and was in the interest of the welfare of the men, women and children. This committee had a conference with President Harding and found him agreeable to such a commission for the study of the coal industry. The President is greatly concerned for the human values involved in this great strike.

Controversy

Some children were quarrelling one day, and calling one another names.

"You are stupid," said one, "if you were not, you would think as I do."

"If you were not wholly blind," said another, "you would see with my eyes."

"Your ignorance is what troubles me!" said a third.

"Ignorance is not so bad as ill-will!" said a fourth.

Just then came by the Angel-who-understands-things.

"What are you quarrelling about, children?" asked the Angel.

"About our God!" said the children.

"Oh!" said the Angel, "The God of Strife, I presume?"

"No!" cried one, "He is the God of Peace!"

"He is the God of Wisdom!" said another.

"He is the God of Love!" said a third.

"Indeed!" said the Angel, "I never should have thought it."

flood-tide with a straw as to attempt to throw back the American nation to its former state of crime and misery. We are going to meet all your organized efforts to nullify the law. We will not sleep a single moment at our posts. We will meet you at every point of your attack. We will show you that the government of the people, by the people and for the people is bigger and stronger than the corrupting traffic which it has outlawed. Like Hercules it will grapple with strangling hold the forces that dare confront it. The gauge of battle has been thrown down. We gladly take it up. We do not speak as a fanatic. God forbid! I am not afflicted with hysteria. My pulse beats steady and strong. I say for America, the law shall be enforced! The ablest, most enlightened men of the nation say it with me."

Of 192 degrees conferred at the spring convocation of the University of Chicago, six were given to Chinese, two to Japanese, one to a Porto Rican, one to a Filipino and one to an East Indian. Columbia University has students from 174 different schools in twenty-seven states and from eighty-three colleges in thirty-two states this semester. Of 4,590 students enrolled at the University of Washington last semester, 940, or 20 per cent, came from other institutions of higher education. And Harvard has among its 6,075 students, people from every state in the Union and from forty-two foreign countries. American university education is decidedly cosmopolitan.

Secretary J. C. Robbins of the Foreign Mission Society spent Christmas Sunday in Madras, South India, where he preached at three services. The most interesting service was in the morning at the Telugu Baptist Church. The little building was crowded with a congregation of 400 eager listeners. At the conclusion of the service twenty-seven candidates were baptized. The pastor of the church is a graduate of the Madras Christian College and a man of unusual ability and consecration.

We are in receipt of the first copy of "The Siberian Evangelist," a weekly mimeographed news sheet composed by Rev. Robert Fetler, pastor of the Baptist Church at Vladivostok, Siberia. Its purpose is to keep the friends of the work acquainted with Baptist progress in that section. Two short articles copied from the daily papers make it clear that our people are encountering the bitterest opposition from the Greek Orthodox Church but are nevertheless prospering.

We have before us a "Welcome Address" extended to Secy. Robbins on his visit to the Baptist Church of Bezvada, South India. This church is entirely independent and self-supporting, worshipping in a handsome stone building. There is no missionary in residence. The Foreign Society paid approximately one-half the cost of the building. There are now about 250 members. The address calls attention to the fact that as Bezvada grows as an industrial town, Baptist Christians from all parts of the Telugu field pour in there and that the church is too poor to care adequately for them. A mission station is therefore asked for to help care for these 1,000 and more adults, and also a Union Christian College and seminary. The address also remarks on the loyalty of the people to the British government.

Immanuel Church, Chicago, Dr. Johnston Myers, pastor, has issued a little booklet, "The Immanuel Plan" which gives in some detail the remarkable work which this institutional church with the evangelistic spirit is really accomplishing. People who would like to invest a little money in a worth-while enterprise should send for this booklet. The church has eighteen paid workers and carries on every form of Christian activity, one of the best known of which perhaps is the giving of free meals to the hungry. On the day the booklet was written, 598 hungry, unemployed men were fed. This is merely an indication of the scope and spirit of the work.

Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, Baptist Commissioner for Europe, has notified the Foreign Mission Society that on account of the prevailing exchange rate, and a very favorable offer by the publishers, he was able to secure 60,000 Bibles and 40,000 New Testaments in the Russian language at a cost of $14,000. The board of managers promptly joined the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention in the purchase of this large supply of Bibles and New Testaments for distribution in Russia. Perhaps some of the money you recently sent the Board of Promotion for foreign mission work is now distributing the Bible in the homes of Russia.

An Administrative Committee Action

The committee on April 5, recommended "a convention-wide campaign of education and subscription promotion in behalf of THE BAPTIST and Missions." The movement, which is backed by the Administrative Committee, calls for renewed efforts upon the part of the director of promotion in each state. It provides for the adequate presentation of these journals in the meetings of the associations and conventions in each state. We trust that in every association there may be provided ample time for the discussion of the plans used in the churches of the association for the building up of circulation of the promotional journals of the convention. If all of the directors were as active along this line as some of these directors our list would grow by rapid strides.

Killam's Kollum

We Share Responsibility

Years ago the editor was holding a series of special meetings in a small town. There were but few leaders and the load was heavy for them. One good woman was especially active and anxious. She so much desired success that she made the rest of us nervous. The pastor said, "Mrs. Z. is a good woman but she tries to carry too much of the Lord's responsibility." In these anxious days THE BAPTIST can render no greater service than to keep two considerations before the denomination. First, we must state the facts which clearly indicate our own responsibility; and, second, we must help our readers to remember that God has a stake in all this work about which we are so anxious. Let us stand fast as true men and women in the face of overwhelming odds but let us not attempt to carry that responsibility which is God's.

East Washington Over the Top

In the subscription campaign of the young people, in which they make their immediate goal 4,000 new annual subscriptions to THE BAPTIST, an allotment was made to the several states. East Washington's quota has already been sent by two Spokane churches. Hurrah for Spokane! Is Spokane the whole of East Washington? Wait and you will see. In one case the work is being carried on with the assistance of the W. W. G. girls.

Do We Always Mean What We Sing?

In a church in a neighboring state where the editor of this Kollum was once pastor an incident took place which in one case at least makes necessary a negative answer. The choir was singing, "Mine eyes, mine eyes are ever on the Lord." It was singing heartily when without announcement a tiny mouse ran from beneath the organ. What took place can better be imagined than told. A tiny mouse for the time being led that sedate group to forget the Lord. Is it not true that in just as real though not as dramatic a way by a thousand little things our eyes are constantly turned from him.

Pekin Men

Pekin—the one of which we speak—is not in China. It is in Illinois just north of Egypt. It has a great brotherhood. Its picture appeared in THE BAPTIST a few weeks ago. This brotherhood is not only composed of men of good looks but also of good sense. We can prove the statement. The brotherhood has subscribed for twenty-five copies of THE BAPTIST.

Fresh from the Field

Mr. Russell Morris Brougher, who recently accepted the call of the Tabernacle Church, Chicago, Ill., and who was to have begun his work on April 1, has reconsidered his decision and declined the call.

Since the return of Secy. Lippard, who accompanied the "Ship of Fellowship" to Europe, inquiries have been made as to whether the Foreign Mission Society was likely to arrange for a similar ministry of relief next fall. Correspondence is now being conducted with Europe in order to secure authentic information as to the extent to which supplies of clothing, shoes and blankets will be urgently required next winter, particularly in Russia. Whatever information may be available will be conveyed to the denomination as soon as possible.

A fine New World Movement pageant has been written by Rev. Charles Arthur Boyd, director of religious education for the Wisconsin State Convention. It has been used widely in that state with great acceptance and is now available in multi-graph form for general use elsewhere. A copy of the pageant can be secured for 15 cents from the Literature Department of The General Board of Promotion at any of the following addresses: 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City; 125 North Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.; 700 Ford Building, Boston, Mass.; 504 Columbia Building, Los Angeles, Cal.

Go Forward—Complete the Job

By EDWARD L. BAYLISS

BUT how? A story from an old Irish reader, which Dr. Barnes refers to, will give the answer: "As long as the farmer said to his sons, 'We must get so-and-so to cut this grain,' the ground-bird told her frightened nestlings in the wheatfield, 'Never fear, there is nothing to be alarmed about, don't tremble!' But the day the farmer said, 'Boys, we've got to swing into the job ourselves,' the mother bird said, 'Now fly for your lives!'"

The only way to put through this New World Movement program is to do it ourselves; meaning that each one of us must do his part in carrying through to completion the part of this program which belongs to him. If the reader be the pastor of a church let him determine that his church shall complete its canvass and go over the top in the New World Movement. If the one who peruses these words be a layman let him resolve that he will give and pray the movement through to success. Already the women are accomplishing the task, they need no further urging. We tremble to think what may be the penalty if we are remiss to the trust God has placed upon us in this crucial hour regarding this matter.

Ninety years ago there was a split in our denomination; a part of the denomination was antagonistic to missions, a part of it was favorable to missions. Through the years those churches have been sifted by God. What has been the outcome? Travel over the country and you can scarcely find anti-missionary churches enough to enumerate on your fingers, and those that still do exist are weak and of no importance to the Kingdom. Whereas the missionary part of our denomination has become a mighty host whom the Lord delights to honor. This we prophesy may be the fate of those who refuse to go into this New World Movement, into this adequate program of our denomination to evangelize, to Christianize the world. We must stand together and we must raise the full $100,000,000. "Unless we do so many a messenger who has heard the call of the Master will be unable to carry the glad tidings into the needy corners of our own land and to the uttermost parts of the earth."

The Master said, you recall, "If any man putteth his hand to the plow and looketh back he is not worthy of me." Likewise our Lord uttered these words, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," and may we not feel, O Northern Baptists, that this injunction to Moses in the long ago, spoken when seemingly unsurmountable difficulties encompassed the Israelitish host, applies to us:

"Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." Then the impossible with God's help was achieved. And so will it be in our crucial hour if we do our part in dependence on him.

Nebraska Points the Way

(The findings of the recent special session of the Nebraska State Convention are in accord with what has been done in a number of other states, and embody so well the spirit with which men and women are meeting the present denominational crisis that they are here printed in full.—Editors.)

Whereas the present status of the New World Movement presents the most critical situation in our beloved denomination in all its history, threatening the entire missionary and educational program of Baptists throughout the world, and,—

Whereas the failure of Baptists to meet their present financial obligations in this crucial hour in the Continuation Campaign now on, would mean retrenchment and disaster in Nebraska and in all denominational enterprises,

Be It Resolved

I. That we reaffirm our faith in the spirit and purpose of our present missionary program, and in our denominational leaders, especially our Nebraska leader, Dr. W. I. Fowle, and that we pledge to them our loyal support.

II. That we indorse the educational program of Northern Baptists, and pledge our special support to Grand Island College in this, the hour of its greatest challenge and greatest opportunity.

III. That we recommend a week of self denial and prayer during the month of April, preferably April 23 to 30, when all our people shall recognize the supreme necessity of spiritual vitality in all our work, and give expression to the sacrificial life in sacrificial giving. It shall be understood that the week of denial shall follow the financial canvass and that the gifts made shall not be a substitute for regular giving to our missionary cause.

IV. That we urgently request all our churches to put on a real financial canvass for our missionary enterprises on or before April 23, that shall stress:—

- a. 100 per cent payment of pledges that are due April 30.
- b. New pledges from those not pledged or inadequately pledged for one year only.
- c. Special effort to secure cash subscriptions in sufficient amount to raise $125,000 on emergency fund with minimum gifts of not less than $10 per member.

V. That we recommend to pastors and churches that action on adoption of statement of faith be deferred until the committee of our Northern and Southern Baptist Conventions reports at Indianapolis, and that we give our earnest attention to the most fundamental truth of all, the bringing in of Christ's Kingdom among men.

VI. That in concurrence with the laymen, we urge the appointment of a key layman in all our churches, who, together with the pastor, shall organize a team of laymen to cooperate in the Continuation Canvass, and that these teams be ready for service in our churches as occasion may arise.

VII. That we urge upon every pastor the importance of exercising the leadership given him by the great Head of the Church, and that he do all within his power to inform and inspire his people in all our Kingdom enterprises.

Christ Points the Way to Victory

By JOHN Y. AITCHISON

General Director of the General Board of Promotion

The world-wide interests of the Kingdom are before the denomination today. Christ points the way to victory. Let us meet this crisis as loyal servants of our Lord. Matt. 6, 31-33:

"Therefore, take no thought saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?

"For after all these things do the Gentiles seek: for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things.

"But seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you."

The Baptist

Will Baptists Battle at Indianapolis? Thank God, No!

IN THE issue of March 25 THE BAPTIST pointed out that there was impending a battle of words and wits at Indianapolis. This prediction was based entirely upon facts gleaned from the official correspondence of the Conference on Baptist Fundamentals. It should be remembered that at that time a series of informal conferences among denominational groups which began early in December seemed to indicate that there was no common denominator to be found.

Today we are glad that we can repeat the question, "Will Baptists Battle at Indianapolis?" and add the words, "Thank God, No!" The foundation for this statement is found in the results of still another informal conference held in New York April 5 which are embodied in a series of agreements appearing on page 331. The document deserves careful study.

This pivotal conference was a small one. There were present sixteen men. Proceedings were informal. These sixteen men spent the day together. With perfect frankness they reviewed the questions at issue among Northern Baptists. When the matters upon which they were agreed were tabulated it was found that there was a common understanding about some matters of faith, fidelity and fraternity.

Our changed feeling about the coming convention at Indianapolis does not exist because we for a moment believe that any sixteen men can wholly determine the spirit of that meeting. It comes from the nature of the agreements found possible by these sixteen and our confidence in the essential soundness of our Baptist constituency. Back of these agreements can be discerned some of our time-honored Baptist positions.

Let us look a little more closely at the declaration which is being broadcasted to the pastors and churches of the convention. In the first place, we find that there was agreement on the point that every Baptist should be permitted to hold his own views of truth. He should seek to know the truth for himself and, having found it, he should be true to its leadings. Brethren, we cannot battle at Indianapolis or anywhere else if we are ready to give each other the credit for an honest quest for truth and to grant the right to every man to hold the truth he finds. This principle recognizes a proper measure of individual liberty and individual responsibility.

The declaration growing out of this informal conference goes a step farther and declares the right of any Baptist or group of Baptists anywhere and at any time to formulate its common faith or doctrine. It was agreed that the time was ripe for such a statement by Northern Baptists. The Southern Baptist Convention has sent out its fraternal message—a message which it makes clear is never to be used to measure its pastors and workers but rather to give definite form to some vague ideas about the Baptist position on the part of those outside the Baptist fold. It is worthy of note that the Columbia Conference, made up of men and women from both the Northern and Southern Conventions, will convey through the presidents of the two conventions the feeling of the group that the time is now ripe for a brief statement which will in a general way represent the position of the Baptists of the United States. It will be suggested that a committee made up of members of both conventions be appointed to draft such a statement. Baptists will not battle at Indianapolis over the right of any Baptist group to express its common faith or doctrine. Only in the event that some group tries to force its statement as a test of orthodoxy can trouble come.

The declaration shows that there is a question of fidelity. Granting to each man the right to seek truth and to hold it, the document recognizes the obligation resting upon each to promulgate the truth as he sees it. Having found truth which he believes vital to his life and usefulness he is in honor bound to impart the truth to other men. If we hold to this agreement Baptists cannot battle at Indianapolis or anywhere else, for our whole missionary program is the practical application of this principle.

Fraternity was emphasized. While these sixteen men represent widely differing points of view, they all recognize the great fundamental fact that our churches, our institutions, our missionary societies are fraternal organizations. They are built upon Christian fraternity and by Christian cooperation. No measure of uniformity of belief can ever make as deep an impression upon a godless world as the genuineness of our fraternal spirit.

We have a right to expect some very definite results if these agreements have general acceptance among Baptists. We can look for a better understanding in the matter of our cooperative work. Differences of opinion have nearly defeated our great missionary program as far as the immediate extension of that program is concerned. We call to witness all the pastors whose hearts have ached during these months as they have faced the practical failure of the New World Movement because of a divided church—divided in its opinions. We call to witness scores of churches which have for long years had an honorable history in denominational cooperation but which of late have not had enthusiastic leadership because the pastor has felt it necessary to identify himself with this or that group. It is clear to all of us that we cannot do our best work until we together shape our programs and together bring to completion one worthy task after another.

Our fiscal year is about to close. These are anxious days for our societies, our missionaries, our convention and city workers. These are anxious days for every loyal Baptist. We must do our best. We will do our best. And thousands of our church folks in all walks in life will face themselves and their Lord with a quiet heart for they well know that in the face of adverse circumstances they have done their best.

Editorial Comment

DENOMINATIONAL DAY

Sunday, April 23, has been designated as Denominational Day. On this day the Northern Baptist Convention requests all our pastors to turn the minds of their people toward our denominational history, principles, plans and prospects, both in the pulpit, the Sunday school, especially the adult classes, and the young people's societies. The committee in charge has sent a circular to the pastors, suggesting "The Meaning of Baptism" as the topic for the day and making certain helpful statements with reference to it.

There may be reasons why churches cannot observe this particular day, but there is no good reason why some day about this time of year should not be used to impress again upon our people the distinctive principles for which we Baptists stand and the contribution we have made to Christian history. There are some people who seem to wonder if the Baptist witness is any longer needed. There are many Baptist pulpits filled with men trained in undenominational schools who are in no real sense Baptists. There is much confusion as to what we do or do not believe. Ministers have laid upon them in our present denominational situation a peculiar duty which they must not shirk. And our deacons and all church officials should be zealous in seeing that the people know the reason for their faith and their church affiliation.

Let us have a great Denominational Day everywhere!

PAID PROPAGANDA AGAINST BRITAIN

THE BAPTIST is in receipt from one of our well-known Burman missionaries of an extract from the Springfield (Mass.) Republican of Dec. 29, in which it is said that "British residents of interior towns are engaged in a general exodus to sea-coast and fortified cities in fear of the revolution which Indian Nationalist leaders have called for Dec. 26." This information was credited to the American Commission to Promote Self-Government in India, with headquarters in Washington.

Our informant says: "I trust you will explain that this is utterly misleading, is simply paid propaganda to bother the English government, and when stirring up the Irish question ceases to be of interest, the same propaganda seems to be turned against India. But there is no Nationalist army (spoken of later in the despatch as giving protection to Americans) to protect anyone. Such an army would be nothing more than a mob beating up women first and robbing banks next, as has happened in a year past, until stopped by stern repressive measures. There is no nationalist spirit in India, seeking for self-determination. It is simply a noisy and infinitesimal few who are making all the row at present, and who have never done or purposed anything constructive, but who have led into riot their hooligan followers whenever they have tried to accomplish anything by forceful measures. Please say that the missionaries have never seen the beginnings of any exodus and will sit tight till the cows come home. The Indian government has been waked up by British sentiment and is caring for all threatened points in fine style.

We have never had more attentive listeners to our preaching than at present and our work goes right on despite all opposition."

During the war we learned to distrust a great deal which appeared in the newspapers. It would seem that we must not yet lay aside a sound suspicion.

SEND YOUR PASTOR TO INDIANAPOLIS

The annual meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis, June 14-20, is one of those epoch-making events which seldom come to any body. It comes in the midst of the most acute financial crisis we have known, when questions of the conduct of our missionary societies must be faced and solved. Shall we move forward, shall we stand still, or shall we go backward? Which will events compel us to do? There are to be brought before it questions of general policy, already widely discussed, which are fraught with the greatest consequences for years to come. There are sharp differences of opinion and much anguish of mind. What is the Christian solution?

Every church should be represented at this convention, preferably by both the pastor and at least one layman. But in any event every church which can possibly do so should be making plans now to send its pastor. Often the pastor cannot afford the expense of such a trip. But the church cannot afford not to have him there. It cannot afford to be apart from the denominational thought and discussion and decision. Wise churches have long since put an item into their budget to cover this matter. Perhaps your church has taken this course. If it has not, get busy now to provide for the presence of pastor and delegates at this important meeting.

CANADIAN-UNITED STATES DAYS

In many of our cities the period, April 2-8, was observed as Canadian-United States days, under the auspices of the Kiwanis Club International, which with its 710 clubs and 62,000 members in the United States and Canada feels that a mutual benefit may be attained by fostering a movement whose purposes are:

1. Furtherance of that era of good feeling between the two great English speaking peoples of America in order that the amicable relations established 104 years ago may continue.

2. Disseminating information to both Canadians and Americans which will give each more knowledge of the other.

3. Educating Canadians and the people of the United States in reference to the unanimity of the ideals of the people of these two great countries.

4. Promotion of better business relations between Canada and the United States.

The long peace between these two countries has been one of the beautiful features of modern history. There is no reason why it should not be everlasting. And yet there is the more certainty of this if all efforts for promoting understanding and goodwill are viewed with sympathy. There are those who hate everything connected with the British Empire. The more reason why all who love peace and the ideals of Jesus should emphasize the things for which they stand.

DOES THIS DEMAND RETRENCHMENT?

A cablegram from Secretary Robbins announces that there have been 2500 baptisms in the Kengtung field in Northern Burma and across the border in China since January 1.

These new and virgin fields give promise of developing a strong, vigorous Christian constituency. If we could only put more workers into them at the present moment, the results under God would be astonishing. Shall we be compelled, owing to financial conditions, to turn away from a door which has so manifestly been opened by God?

This is what retrenchment means everywhere on the foreign field—the missing of God's moment for great advances.

Northern Baptists simply must raise by April 30 the money needed to pay our debts and to keep the work going.

A WORD TO MR. BRYAN

Few men in the world have such power as a lay preacher of the gospel as William Jennings Bryan. When he confines himself to his subject he is mighty for the persuading of men. When he wanders off into an attack on the general theory of evolution, and especially when, in such attacks, he ignores most of the later work done among scientists on that subject, he stirs up opposition among the very classes he most needs and wishes to reach and effectually hinders the thing he wants to do. We understand well that in what he is doing Mr. Bryan is thoroughly conscientious, but we cannot refrain from suggesting that at the present juncture positive preaching of the Gospel will do vastly more good than a great deal of criticism.

CHURCHES GAIN 761,727 IN 1921

A religious census recently compiled by Dr. H. K. Carroll for The Christian Herald indicates that the churches made large gains during 1921. The total increase in church membership, Dr. Carroll finds, was 761,727, bringing the total membership for the United States up to 43,523,206. The Methodist group showed gains of almost 300,000; the Presbyterians of 62,649, the Disciples of 24,000; and the Roman Catholics of 49,372. Owing to a change in the statistical year, figures for the Northern and Southern Baptist Conventions are lacking. The above figures may be compared with those for 1920 when the gains in the Methodist group were 237,127; in the Presbyterian group 43,031; and in the Baptist group 129,283.

The total number of ministers is given as 195,414, an increase of 1,791 over 1920. It is estimated that there are now 230,572 churches, or an increase of eighty-eight.

Such figures, if they reveal anything, indicate that the churches have fully recovered from the bad slump of 1919 and are putting on campaigns, especially for evangelism, more aggressive than anything which has been known for many years.

AUTOMOBILE DEATHS IN CHICAGO

During 1921, 664 persons were killed in Cook County, Illinois, by automobiles, an increase of 122 over the preceding year. Of these, 242 were children, 151 of whom were killed in the middle of the block. Forty-nine were under the age of five and 139 less than ten. There were 213 children, fifteen years of age or under, left dependent by the death of a parent. Is it any wonder that the city of Chicago is a good deal stirred over this matter.

Detroit has been receiving some publicity because of a great reduction in the number of such accidents. The following telegram tells the story: "Fatal street traffic accidents 1920, 240; Period 1921, 134; Attribute reduction to close co-operation, courts, citizens, public safety organizations, composed of Detroit Automobile Club, Federated Women's Clubs, Board Education, other city departments and business, civic, social organizations, police department, churches, etc. Much credit due new Municipal Court judges in imposing jail sentences, speeders and wreckless drivers. Continuous educational publicity by public Safety Bureau Police Department, through meetings all over city, clubs, churches, schools, lodge halls, exhibition safety films throughout city, distribution safety literature. Object for 1922 less than hundred street traffic accidents."

Education of the children and jail sentences for speeders and reckless drivers seem to have worked this change. Other cities, which believe that children have a right to life and the pursuit of happiness in our big centers of population, will take notice.

NOT ALL PLAIN SAILING FOR ZIONISM

We are in receipt of a pamphlet published by The Palestine National League, entitled, "Palestine's Cry for Justice." The purport of it is that to the inhabitants of Palestine Zionism is a matter of life and death. Historically, it is said, Palestine belongs to its present inhabitants, of whom less than one-tenth are Jews. The present great shrines of Palestine are Christian and Mohammedan, not Jewish. The inhabitants object to the character of the new-comers and dread the racial and political animosities which are certain to be engendered. Palestine cannot render a decent living to a much greater number than now inhabit it. Moreover Zionist claims, it is urged, are founded upon a false interpretation of the Scriptures.

There is more of a similar kind. Apparently the idea of self-determination for all people does not weigh much in the minds of those who would displace for aliens the present inhabitants of the country. It would seem to be fairly clear that grave injustices are to be done. Freed from the heavy rule of the Turk there is a chance for the people now living in this ancient land to show what they can do. Is this to be taken from them in order that other people may take this land and develop it for their own good? Certainly it is of some interest to the Christian world that not all Jews are a unit in this matter of colonizing Palestine.

LET'S PAY OUR DEBTS

For the honor of the Baptist denomination, let us pay our debts and come to April 30 with a clean sheet. It can be done, but only if everybody gets busy now.

My Parish

Association between a chaplain and men in the navy is delightfully direct. One's parishioners surprise him in his bath, or call him out of his bunk, or take him at mess or play. And that is well, since religion is an affair of life and not a parade.

By LIEUT. C. A. NEYMAN

NOT so long ago I stood up weekly—some of my then-parishioners may choose to change the spelling!—in a frock coat and strove to exhort a congregation of people ranging in size (and likewise in age) about as do the strings of a harp, but with a perceptible inclination to the feminine gender. A part of my Monday to Saturday concern was the preliminary planning for a new church building which might have cost $100,000, if the richest son-in-law of the church loosened his purse strings as certain people thought he should, though he probably could not afford it. There were plenty of other duties not needing enumeration or detailed explanation. Perhaps our church did as well as most. Certainly it had its ever faithful and indefatigable few—its tithers, its workers, its staying, its paying, its praying host. And, I recall, with pride, that there was a sincere effort to chin up to every phase of the Five Year Program.

What's a Scuttle-butt?

In those days I did not know a ship's scuttle-butt from its scuppers; and my entire theological lore would have stood me in poor stead in following instructions to "go over her brows." Indeed, my nautical experience was limited largely to day-off trips down the old Illinois-Michigan Canal in C. M. Brown's one-lunger motor boat. It has not been so long; though a measureless flood of water has run under Jefferson Street bridge since then; and meanwhile a number of things have happened, such as the last months of the war, the armistice, the return of khaki and bluejacket hordes from France and camps and open sea, and the signing of my permanent commission as a chaplain in the United States Navy.

Now I know scuttle-butts and scuppers and brows, and any quantity of other "salty" things. I feel very much alive, am exceedingly proud of my task, and look back without longing upon those other days. Once in a while there comes an acquaintance of those yesteryears to frown a bit at me and drop poorly veiled hints that he thinks I am loafing, maybe, or dodging my duty. He may, perchance, ask me why I do not return to civil life and once more tackle something "big" in the religious world. To him I am inclined to shout as did that ponderous hulk of a dentist, McTeague, "You can't make small of my job."

This is a parish!

That chimerical hundred thousand would be pin-money here. Millions of dollars were spent to make this plant. In these compact steel acres is investment equal to not less than half the assessed valuation of the whole city back yonder.

There was an old "Michigan" car, mercifully bestowed upon the pastor, which coughed its way about through endless miles of streets and to the doors of remote missions, hunting the elusive communicant. I remember with what pangs of pride we bowed to the necessities of honest counting and acknowledged to each other that our roster dared not boast more than 500 names—even including non-residents, some of whom might easily have died since last heard from. But here there are never less than 1,000 of us and we count each others' noses every morning at a given hour; and in a day's work not one of the 1,000 goes much farther than 400 feet from the chaplain's desk, and not a one but may be called to his elbow, if he wish, on five minutes' notice.

Communities Not Homogeneous

A generous deacon was a printer, too; so I do not recall that I was much the poorer for leaving uncounted calling cards at unanswered doors. It is said, in social circles sometimes, that to ring a bell in a deserted home is to gain time. But a minister who has left his office and his dog-eared texts to do his daily stint of calls cannot, in conscience, regard it so. Yet, how hard it was upon entering the homes of those who needed him most, perhaps, because they had drifted farthest from the vortex of the church life and uplift, to say and do the things that were most helpful. So little could be known of the powerful undercurrents of those lives. They lived apart. Their actions and their needs were so out of sight. Over a very pit of sin they might spread a wily camouflage. A word of kindly intended censure, well merited or undeserved, might sever entirely the flimsy ties that bound them to the church.

But, here where we count noses with each new day, we sin or fail or have our virtues in the sight and understanding of all. What people in civilian life think will wait upon the judgment day to be revealed, we in the Navy know will meet the skipper's praise or blame today—or at tomorrow's mast.

Judgment at Today's Mast

I do not recall that I ever consciously tempered my ecclesiastical dicta to the church's financial lambs folded for the budget's shearing, but I confess it was some time after I put on a uniform before I could administer a reprimand without an apologetic tone and without the disagreeable feeling of having filiped a coin out of the collection plate or emptied a pew.

Associations between a chaplain and officers and men in the Navy, as just hinted, are or may be delightfully direct. The propinquity is astounding. Instead of having to build up contacts, one finds them tumbling upon him, in plethora, willy-nilly. This is not a matter of standing behind a pulpit armed by cloistered preparation, or of going out, guided by a list, to pull at door bells and sit on parlor chairs. Here one's parishioners surprise him in his bath, or call him out of his bunk, or take him at mess, or at play, or walk in upon his meditation and study. But that is well, if one can be humble enough and of sufficient genuineness, since, after all, religion is an affair of life and not a parade.

In so far as the chaplain wishes (limited only by his abilities or energy) he may guide the athletic, recreational, and educational activities of the men on a battleship. For example, he may choose the motion pictures which are shown as frequently as four or five times a week. Thus he may apply censorship at the point where it is least wordy and most effective.

The library falls under his supervision. Modern battleships carry large and excellent libraries and men read a great deal. The chaplain's knowledge of fiction, modern and classical, will be taxed considerably and need much furbishing if he is to make the most of all the opportunities that will be presented for directing men's reading. Approaching, also, by way of text-books or correspondence courses, and mounting into the wholesome significance of organized classes, he will be called upon to help men plug sad gaps in their grammar or high school or even college educations. Should a man come with a trigonometry problem, when the chaplain has not seen the inside of a trig. text for ten years, he had best determine to save his face by solving the problem.

Developing Reading Tastes

There are interesting cases. One marine wishes to be shown how to draw up a pedigree. He plans on a farmer's career later. A sailor wades through every mathematics text in the library. Another reads all there is of Eucken, James, Rousseau and Darwin. The next wants a story book and is willing to be aided in its selection, though he is a bit crestfallen to learn that every volume of Zane Grey is out on loan. He doesn't know of any other authors that interest him, unless it be Rex Beach, and all Beach's books are worn out. What does one give him? Sometimes Conrad works; or fails. Or Stevenson! Or Dumas! But it pays to go by easier stages, via, say, Curwood, Cullum, Kelland, Vance, Rinehart, Wells or even "Tarzan." One must not be too fastidious. In that great boon, reading, taste develops slowly. And almost anything beats "Whiz Bang." Another sailor was an assistant scout master before enlisting and desires to be a full-fledged scout master when his "hitch" is finished. He reads Allan Hoben's "The Minister and the Boy" (declaring it a fine book), and H. Thistleton Mark and Begbie—all before the regular Boy Scout Manuals have time to arrive. H. G. Wells' "The Outline of History" is as busy as anything, and almost any book needs but be mentioned in a sermon in order to be requested immediately from the librarian. A great packing case gave up its Bibles, one by one, before there was time to distribute them, though sceptical observers made facetious declarations that the big rubber bands which embraced them had something to do with the demand.

The year around, there is always at least one form of athletic activity at fever heat in the Navy. This interest in sound, clean, powerful bodies and agile minds is as valuable to the blue-jacket as to the high-school lad or college man. The chaplain may take part anywhere he wishes, either in general or specific supervision or by actual participation. It is not necessary that he be able to out-box or out-wrestle or out-row the best men on the ship. Nor need he necessarily be big league stuff in the pitcher's box. But he'd better not get his terms mixed up or be apathetic.

He has these men when they report on board, fresh from training camp or another ship. Then, if his own eye-teeth be cut and he be dry behind the ears in his Navy experiences, he will know what to say to them, without mincing matters, about their conduct while on the ship. He will not

You Are the Captain

YES, you are the Captain, you Baptist who are reading these lines. You are in charge of the Denominational Ship, and it will go forward or backward, just as you command.

You may be thinking that some folks down in New York will say what is to be done, but you are very greatly mistaken about that. Those folks in New York have made up their minds that in this great crisis they will do exactly what you tell them to do. They will go forward or retrench just in accordance with the returns. And in this election, Dollars and not Votes are decisive.

You Baptist who read these lines, and those other Baptists who sit with you in church this month of April, and who sit in the other Baptist churches throughout our Northern Convention are the Captain. You give the orders and the people in New York obey them. It is a great responsibility to be the Captain of Christ's Baptist Ship in such a storm as this.

hesitate to emphasize the importance of religion in a sailor's life. And he will point out concretely where religious principles find expression in duty and social contacts and pleasures on board and ashore. There is a definiteness about this which one cannot corral in the regular pastorate. At least not often.

He has them month after month. Their slightest delinquencies he may know. Should he choose, he can let them understand that he knows and that he expects different conduct. When a time has passed he learns what it is that constitutes a good sailor, and a word of praise, if truly merited, helps encourage men to faithfulness and accomplishment.

He has them when they are about to leave the ship. Before they shoulder neatly lashed seabags and hammocks, it is his privilege to bid them God's speed and to indicate his interest in their success on the next ship or as they go back into civil life.

If they go in disgrace, he may cheer them to face a lowering future, to turn a new leaf and to look to the sustaining power of God's love to lift them above their own weaknesses.

Let him but gain their confidence and respect and they will bring their troubles to him, seeking advice and assistance. Home relationships need adjustment sometimes. Absence makes the heart grow fonder, no doubt, but a growing boy or a wayward son frequently neglects his letters to his mother, or forgets that he has a financial responsibility to help bear. Love affairs are intensely real to youngsters, and take surprising turns. What one of us does not know that? With the home ties drawn thin to the breaking point there comes a telegram telling of sickness or death and the world goes suddenly black. There may be leave to obtain and carfare to find. Or a time of grief and pain may be made lighter because a touch of sympathy is extended.

A Gospel Without Frills

Furthermore, they will listen to his preaching, these sailors. One never realizes what a scattering salvo he delivers at an audience which includes young and old of both sexes, nor how nearly impossible it is to minister adequately to the bill-peddler and the jurist at the same time, nor how near a miracle he attempts in breaking spiritual bread for both the mother whose long-tried faith has a distinct pre-millenarian twist and the high-school superintendent who does not shudder at mention of higher criticism. One never realizes these things, I say—at least not completely—until he stands regularly before an audience of sailors who are much of an age and experience and who are never given to critically splitting doctrinal hairs. The discovery bobs up suddenly; and then one most likely flounders around for a while in an effort to deliver himself of some special message peculiarly adapted to these men. Yet, it dawns on him later that what is needed, yes, what is wanted, is a straightforward, unmincing "gospel" message. No frills, no tricks. But, for Heaven's sake, no shooting over heads, and no talking "down." Red-blooded presentation of red-blooded Christian principles!

Somehow, while a chaplain will preach very infrequently to large crowds of sailors on a battleship, I have never felt half so neglected by my shipmates when there was a small attendance as I did occasionally as a civilian pastor looking out over an expanse of church furniture dotted with parishioners or visitors.

In a small town once we could fill our church on Sunday evenings by announcing a song service, but city people turned up their noses at such garden-variety worship. The sailors, however, will fill a compartment on Sunday evenings and call for hymn after hymn—and sing them lustily—until the pianist is about to drop exhausted from the stool. They clamor, all at once after each last chorus, for their favorites, and he who leads the service must have a delicately-adjusted ear to select out of the bedlam's shout the number of the next song. A lecturer, who invariably has a religious message, is brought from ashore for these song services.

There are glorious experiences here. With what lavish hands the ship's crew fed, clothed and stuffed with sweets six score of a city's desperately poor children Christmas! It was, indeed, a wholesale Good Samaritanism. Best of all was the spirit in which it was done. Instead of "We gave a lot to those children," one heard "Didn't the kiddies enjoy themselves!"

Sailor men are not such a heathen lot. They have their faults, God knows. But their sins are men's sins, growing out of exuberant animalism sometimes—not hypocrisies; and they are not whitened sepulchres!

Here comes the boy of eighteen to have his fling. Much of the Navy's personnel is of this age—the later teens and early twenties. He has been hard to handle at home, has revolted against school restraint, or narrow horizons, or unromantic toil or parental discipline. Neither he nor his parents know exactly what he will find in the Navy. But it looks like a good place. It seems to offer adventure and a trade, maybe, and regular pay. So he joins.

He meets surprisingly endless

routine and discipline. By the ship's bells he rises (rising consists of jumping down out of a hammock), eats, works, plays, goes and comes. His work is not hard. But it bears a label—responsibility. For everything directed or attempted he is called to account.

A lesson strikes through. He begins to see what makes the world go 'round—work, intelligently directed work. What some one else leaves undone he must do. He discovers a firm belief, therefore, in cooperation. He regrets abandoning his school books. Unresisted temptation, on board or ashore, brings its stinging consequences. He becomes more willing to consider the matter of right and wrong.

Guarding the Critical Age

In short, he is at the turning point of his life. At the age when his greatest character crisis normally arrives he is where he may be exposed to the most pernicious influences but where at the same time he is constantly under watchful eyes and under wholesome disciplinary checks.

His dreaming ceases to be simply dreaming. Ambitions stir within him, take definite form and seek concrete satisfaction. He is turning into man's estate. The fires of Wanderlust die down. The metal commences to cool in the mold. He finds himself. He may stay in the Navy for another "hitch;" or he may return to civilian pursuits, knowing much more than he did when he enlisted, sobered and more ready for the tasks of life.

What an opportunity! To stand at his side when all this is going on!

I always wanted an institutional church, something of big substantial stones and broad expanse, wherein would be a gymnasium and club rooms, a school, too, and a constant weekday bustle. A church, mind you, that reached out into every phase of the community life and contributed to the uplift of the people of every class. Not simply one which a janitor unlocked and dusted once or twice a week, which never parted with its musty silences. One that bubbled with practical Christian activities. One that stood on a strategic corner and opened its arms that people might enter to worship and work.

Under Providence, ambitions have their fulfillment in peculiar ways. My institutional church is a battleship. My parsonage and my pulpit are on the same deck. Almost everything is here that I wanted back there, and numberless things beside. Certainly more contacts than ever the clubs and gymnasiums would have secured. Better still than having the church stand on a strategic corner and invite the passer-by, is to have the whole institution, from keel to truck, move majestically out to sea and take its crew (my parishioners) bodily into new cities and far lands where there are great lessons to be learned and sights that inspire.

"Green earth has her sons and her daughters,

And these have their guerdons; but we

Are the wind's, and the sun's, and the water's, Elect of the sea.

But afar on the headland exalted,
But beyond in the curl of the bay,
From the depth of the dome deep-vaulted,

Our father is lord of the day.
Our father and lord that we follow,
For deathless and ageless is he;
And his robe is the whole sky's hollow,
His sandal the sea."

My Bible and I

We've traveled together, my Bible and I,
In all kinds of weather, with smile or with sigh,
In sunshine or sorrow, in tempest or calm,
Thy friendship's unchanging, my Lamp and my Psalm.

We've traveled together, my Bible and I,
When life has grown weary, and death e'en was nigh;
But all through the darkness of mist and of wrong,
I found thus a solace, a prayer, and a song.

So now who shall part us, my Bible and I?
Shall critics, or scoffers, or others who try?
Shall shadow for substance or stone for good bread
Supplant thy sound wisdom, give folly instead?

Ah, no, my dear Bible. Revealer of Light,
Thou Sword of the Spirit, put error to flight;
And still through life's journey, until the last sigh,
We'll travel together, my Bible and I.

A Fraternal Communication to Northern Baptists

AT an informal conference held in New York, April 5, 1922, the undersigned, while recognizing that a divergence in doctrinal views exists among our Baptist people and that it is the right and duty of every Baptist to promote the faith that he holds, unanimously agreed that we ought to do our utmost to promote fraternity, cooperation and unity among Northern Baptists in this hour of crisis and extremity. After earnest prayer and much discussion, acting as individuals only, we came to the following formal conclusion:

We are agreed: That the time is at hand when as a denomination we should make a statement of our historic Baptist faith and practice, and that this matter should be dealt with at the meeting of the convention to be held in Indianapolis.

We are agreed: That it is clearly within the right of all Baptists, individually or in groups, to give expression to their own views and beliefs and to suggest any change in plans or policies affecting the denomination. The exercise of this right should not subject the individual or group to unfraternal criticism. We urge upon all our brethren that we avoid the censorious spirit, and that Baptists in all discussion of matters of doctrine or denominational policy maintain a spirit of Christian fraternity.

We are agreed: That the maintenance of the distinct and positive Christian teaching and influence of our denominational schools is of the utmost importance, and that we are entitled to ask that the trustees of our schools provide for our boys and girls only such teachers as are possessed of a real and vital Christian faith and as are competent to aid in the development of genuine Christian manhood and womanhood.

We are agreed: That it would be best that at the annual meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention the election of officers should not occur until twenty-four hours after the presentation of the report of the nominating committee, and that the election should take place on or before Saturday noon of the convention week.

We are agreed: That it is the right and privilege of each donor to designate his gift to any object or organization as may seem best to him and that we are all under unescapable bonds to our brethren and to the historic Baptist organizations founded by our fathers, to co-operate to the fullest extent in the campaign for the payment of their debts, since the fundamental right of Baptists to express themselves carries with it not only liberty but responsibility, and since there is now no reason why we should not co-operate to the fullest extent of our ability in our missionary enterprises.

We are agreed: That we ask fellow Baptists to join in prayer and most earnest intercession, asking the Lord Jesus Christ to show us His way and to give us the grace and strength to walk therein.

We are agreed: That we unite in a communication to the Baptist pastors, the Baptist people and the Baptist press, giving expression to the agreements here reached, and calling upon all our people to join with us in lifting our denomination to a new and higher plane of communion with God, a more fervent passion for souls, and a consuming zeal for His service and the coming of His Kingdom.

A Reply to Dr. Straton's Open Letter

Charges unfounded—The present situation calls for heroic effort to save our institutions

REV. JOHN ROACH STRATON, D.D.,
New York City.
Dear Brother:

Your recent open letter in The Religious Searchlight of January 1, 1922, addressed to "The Board of Promotion," and widely circulated in our constituency has had our earnest, thoughtful and prayerful attention. At a meeting of the Administrative Committee held in New York, Feb. 8, the undersigned were requested to give consideration to the statements made in your communication and make response thereto.

We wish, in the first place, to call to your attention the fact that the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention has nothing to do with the administrative policies of any of the societies or boards of the denomination.

Societies Form Own Policies

The only responsibility the Board of Promotion has is "to serve the denomination as the cooperative agency of the various boards, societies, state conventions, city mission societies and educational institutions for disseminating information about them and raising money for them." The board does not build the budgets, determine the policies or spend the money which the denomination contributes through it for the work of these organizations. Each organization, through its own board of managers or trustees, administers its own funds and fixes its own policies. In this respect, the administrative affairs of the various organizations participating in the New World Movement are within the control and power of the several organizations just as they always have been. It will be apparent, therefore, that administrative policies are entirely independent of and outside the field of activity of the Board of Promotion.

Speaking as individuals, we wish to express our belief that it is the conviction of our people generally that the authority for foreign missions, home missions or any other missions is based upon the command of our Lord, as contained in the New Testament and summed up concisely and inclusively in the Great Commission. We conceive of this commission as resting in the authority and wisdom of Christ and binding upon his people everywhere and for all times.

Follow Divine Commission

Within the scope of this command, we see evangelism, education, social betterment, each and all in their proper order. We believe the officers and members of all the boards and of all organizations participating in the New World Movement seek to follow this Divine Commission as a missionary charter or program of service. It is inclusive enough to point the way for all our denominational agencies, and it is our understanding that this is the charter under which all our societies and boards are projecting their work.

It is our firm conviction that all our denominational representatives fully intend to be true to this program, as commonly understood among Baptists. Any departure from the program commonly accepted by our people on the part of individuals would have to be dealt with by those organizations responsible for the employment of the persons in question. It is clearly not within the power or authority of the Board of Promotion to speak for the organizations which it serves or to deal with those whose conduct, belief, or course of action may be called in question.

In view of the foregoing facts, and in keeping with what we believe to be the attitude of those who are in charge of the administrative affairs of the denomination, we believe it is the duty of any member of our great Baptist family who may be in possession of reliable information reflecting upon the honor and standing of a representative or representatives of any of the organizations participating in the New World Movement, to take such information directly to the organization employing the person or persons in question. It is obvious, of course, that in all such cases it is essential from the standpoint of Christian courtesy and fairness to the person or persons involved that, before any definite charges are made, care should be exercised to secure definite and reliable information and that both the information and the sources from which it is secured should be fully disclosed to the organization concerned. We feel confident that when this course is followed, any and all organizations whose interests the Board of Promotion seeks to advance will be ready to give such matters their careful, frank, full and prompt attention.

Unfair Method Followed

In the light of these considerations, may we be permitted to express our judgment that it seems very unfortunate and unfair to the best interests of our work for you to have raised the questions set forth in your open letter, as to the teaching of professors and authors, dead and living, as well as for you to spread a spirit of distrust regarding our missionaries, without connecting such statements with any one of the institutions or missionary societies or boards, and without first having given full information to the organizations whose representatives you are disposed to believe are not faithfully discharging their commission.

In this connection we would remind you of the method for the settlement of differences between brethren enjoined by our Lord and recorded in Matthew 18:15-17. Surely it would have been more in accordance with the spirit of this scripture to have brought your charges privately to the attention of each organization concerned, before publishing them to the churches at large.

We are advised that your statements have so disturbed the hearts of devoted followers of Christ among us as to cause much confusion. You were gracious enough in your letter to ask for information which would permit you to give "unstinted support" to the work of our denomination. We are putting forth the supreme effort of our lives as a people to save our organization from bankruptcy and ruin at a time of widespread financial distress. We feel that the situation is such as to call for the most heroic effort to save our institutions. To this end, the heartiest support of our churches is needed.

It has never been vouchsafed to a great brotherhood such as ours, that there should be absolute agreement in every detail. There was not such an agreement among the early disciples. The work of the kingdom has ever advanced, however, in spite of many glaring human limitations. Certainly there ought to be agreement in the paramount issue now before us, namely, that we must pay our debts and thus preserve the honor and integrity of our institutions. May we not leave the matter of the correction of faults in organization, if and wherever they may be found to exist, to be taken care of in due course and according to the rules of comity and fraternity so well understood among cooperative brethren, and now unite all our forces in the earnest effort being put forth to meet our debts of honor?

Trust Funds Not Misused

Being fully convinced that it is the desire of those charged with administrative responsibilities in our organizations to deal fairly and in a manner becoming to Christian fraternity with all irregularities which may be substantiated by reliable information and being assured of your desire to help foster the interests of the great Leader, we earnestly request you to give the same widespread publicity to this communication which you have to the first issue of The Religious Searchlight containing your open letter to the Board of Promotion.

You make the very serious charge that "in some cases even sacred 'trust funds' designed for other purposes have been loaned by denominational leaders—trustees of the funds—to the Board of Promotion to pay on that foolish Interchurch debt."

In reply to this statement we wish to say that so far as we know, the boards of managers or trustees of the organizations in making loans to the General Board of Promotion to enable it to meet the Interchurch debt, did not use "trust funds" for this purpose. The Interchurch obligation was a debt of honor which Northern Baptists by vote of the convention assumed. As between Northern Baptists and the Interchurch organization, the whole debt has been paid in full. Funds other than "trust funds" were loaned temporarily to the Board of Promotion by some of the organizations participating in the New World Movement in order to enable the denomination to meet this debt. Each organization loaning such funds to the Board of Promotion is to receive interest at the rate of 6 per cent for the time of the loan. Provision is made to pay off all these obligations in the $15,000,000 which the denomination is asked to pay between Jan. 1 and April 30, 1922. Surely no one could justly criticize the organizations for bearing their proportionate share of this debt of honor which rested heavily upon the denomination.

Do Your Part Now

We trust that you will use the widest possible liberty in pointing out to the organizations concerned any errors in administration which you may find. In the meantime, we covet your heartiest support in the effort being made to meet the financial obligation of the denomination, and feel assured you will be glad to join with us in making an urgent appeal to all our churches to furnish their full share of the $15,000,000 which the Northern Baptist Laymen's Council is urging the denom-

Evangelism a Primary Emphasis

The evangelistic achievements of the future, the reaching of untouched multitudes who have never heard of Jesus Christ, await the completion of the New World Movement.

By WILLIAM B. LIPPHARD

EVANGELISM has always received the primary emphasis in the foreign mission work of the denomination. Have the results of recent years suggested the possibility of a decline in this emphasis? This is a fair question. Some people have asked it and it deserves a fair and specific answer. Any adequate reply must obviously be based on facts and not on generalities nor on suppositions. Facts always speak for themselves. From time immemorial, the presentation of evidence has demonstrated that there is nothing so eloquent as a fact.

In 1920 the missionaries of the Foreign Mission Society reported the baptism of 10,483 converts on the ten mission fields in the non-Christian world. This is a fact supported by accurate statistics. This compares with 10,145 in 1919, with 7,098 in 1918 (the last year of the war) and with 9,770 in 1917. Statistics for 1921 are not yet complete and therefore no report for the entire year is at present available. Reports from many stations already received, however, indicate the strong probability that the encouraging record of 1920 will have been exceeded in 1921.

Baptisms Everywhere

Several selected reports from various fields suggest this probability. In the very heart of the Belgian Congo Mission, at the Sona Bata station, Home Secretary P. H. J. Lerrigo, on his visit last fall, witnessed a baptismal service at six o'clock in the morning, at which 350 converts were baptized. At another station, Kimpese, the whole congregation participated in the largest communion service ever held there, and this had followed the baptism of thirty-one young people. On Christmas morning, Secretary J. C. Robbins was the preacher at the Telugu Baptist Church in Madras, South India. A large congregation had gathered and at the close twenty-seven candidates were baptized. In far-away West China, the most remote mission field of the denomination, the First Baptist Church of Suifu reported eighty-eight baptisms during the year. The church now enrolls a membership of 400, and at the inquirer's class the missionary faced a regular attendance of 135 people, many of whom will be among those to be baptized during the present year.

This primary emphasis of evangelism is also seen in the changes taking place over a period of years. The Baptist mission school at Tura, Assam, eighteen years ago graduated a young man who went as a native preacher to a town called Rong-jeng. At that time there were no Christians there; today a Christian church of 265 members may be found in that town. This is one of many similar facts that could be presented. A year ago the Christian constituency in the state of Manipur pledged 2500 rupees for the support of four field evangelists.

How Many Are "Following the Example" in This Way?

MANY of us read of that prayer-meeting in Rangoon, Burma, when our missionaries, having received word of the denominational emergency in America, first prayed together, then each pledged one month's salary to meet the crisis. Edwin C. Whittmore, director of the United Baptist Convention of Maine, sends word of an answer in Maine to that prayer in Burma. He received the following letter at his state headquarters from two women who are co-pastors in Maine churches:

"Enclosed find check for $84 for the Woman's Continuation Campaign. Following the example of our missionaries in Burma, we gladly give one month's salary. Sincerely, Misses Nash and Whittier."

A cablegram received only last week from Burma, announced that on the Keng-tung field of Northern Burma and on the adjacent new field across the border in China, 2500 converts have been baptized since January 1, 1922. This indicates a great evangelistic ingathering. Probably the majority of these converts were won on the new field which was opened largely as a result of the financial stimulus of the New World Movement. It will be recalled that three new stations were opened by the Foreign Mission Society in the winter of 1920-1921.

Of special significance are the reports coming from the educational institutions. They show that also in educational work evangelism receives the primary emphasis.

At Shanghai Baptist College forty students were baptized last year. In the two upper classes fifty-seven out of sixty-two students enrolled are Christians. At Swatow Academy all but two of the members of the senior class have become members of the church. At Kaying, South China, the missionary reports that in the academy more than 50 per cent of the students are Christians. At Judson College in Rangoon 80 per cent of the student body of 138 members are Christians. The college is contributing 900 rupees annually toward the support of one of its graduates, who is working as a missionary in the Shan States. Nearly 90 per cent of the graduates of Shanghai Baptist College are Christians, and of these one-third are serving as teachers in mission schools.

One other fact may be mentioned, because it suggests the possibility of future results. The great land of Russia has been receiving considerable public attention in the secular press. The doors may soon be open to aggressive evangelistic effort. In anticipation of that possibility, the Foreign Mission Board, through Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, commissioner for Europe, recently purchased 60,000 Bibles and 40,000 New Testaments for distribution in Russia.

376,306 Converts

During the 108 years of organized Baptist foreign mission work, beginning with Adoniram Judson in 1813, a total of 376,306 converts have been baptized. This figure does not include the statistical results for 1921, which are not yet complete.

Is an enterprise producing such results worthy of financial support?

This is a question to which the denomination by its response at the close of the fiscal year on April 30 will furnish the answer. Contributions should be sent to the State Promotion Directors or to the Treasurer of the Foreign Mission Society, George B. Huntington, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

What relation have these facts to the New World Movement? At a recent meeting in Calvary Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., Dr. P. H. J. Lerrigo, in concluding an address, described a group of fifty people of the Congo whom he had seen standing before the porch of a house. They were asking a preacher the question which the eunuch who met Philip asked so many years ago, "What doth hinder me to be baptized?" If the preacher had all the facts before him he might have been compelled to say, as an answer to the question, that the failure to complete the New World Movement hinders this group as well as thousands of others in other mission fields from being baptized. The evangelistic achievements of the future, the sending of reinforcements, the care of property on our fields, the entrance into many open doors confronting missionaries everywhere, the reaching of the untouched multitudes who have never heard of Jesus Christ—all these developments in the advancement of the kingdom await the completion of the New World Movement.

Shall this work stop or be retarded? What is your answer?

BAPTISMAL SCENE

A Polish Child Meets Jesus

This story illustrating what American benevolence is doing in Europe is translated by Miss Engelism Strzelec from "Nowe Dugi," a Polish weekly printed in Lodz with the backing of the A. B. F. M. S.

By TOM. GRUDA

LITTLE Mary turned a theologian without knowing it. It was deep, radical theology and caused the neighbors' children to think very seriously.

The parents of little Mary lived in Ukraina. They were prosperous farmers, possessing a comfortable house, comfortably furnished, a large garden, a large farm with woods and meadow, herds of cattle and many horses. Mary and her three brothers and two sisters knew nothing about hunger, need of clothing or anything than can make a person uncomfortable. Mary's best enjoyment was to catch butterflies during the spring and summer, and in the winter time she spent days with her private teacher, listening to fairy tales about enchanted queens, speaking birds and trees on which were growing gold leaves. She was one of the most fortunate and happy children.

War and Its Aftermath

But the world war came. Father was called by the Czar to the front and mother began to worry; when there was no letter for a long time she often cried. One day father came home; the war was over. But dear father was always mournful and restless. There was no peace. All over the country tramped bands of armed men fighting each other. Day and night one must hear shooting. Mary's father and mother were struck with awe each time somebody knocked at the door, whether it was day or night.

The wars came. One night Mary's father came home. Mother was yet watching but all the rest of the family were in deep sleep. He said something to her, then they woke the family. All put on their clothing in a hurry, took what they could and started walking to the railroad depot. The children cried because they were sleepy and frightened. The grown folks spoke in whispers. After a long journey in the dark summer night they came to a woods and seated themselves to rest awhile. They looked back in the direction they had come, and saw a big blaze. They were sure that their house also was in flames. They felt fortunate that they left in time. To their ears came the sound of shooting and they decided to hurry forward. The pilgrimage was long and in some places terrible. The fleeing family expected from all sides something horrible. When a man was seen from afar, always two thoughts contradicted each other: "It's an enemy!" "It is a friend!" They were forced to turn away in another direction, because they learned the railroad was in the hands of the enemy. In running so fast they became exhausted from thirst and hunger, but there was no time to rest. "Hurry! Hurry!" was the watchword of the parents, because every moment was more dangerous.

Hungry, exhausted, they came to a quiet environment, but it was difficult to find some place to live, also to get bread and other necessary things. Their clothes and shoes had worn out and underclothing had become filthy. The mother sold her diamond ear-rings and the father rented for that money two little furnished rooms and bought some bread. In this way housekeeping started in unfavorable conditions and in an unknown environment. Here Mary began to discover what hunger and cold are, she became mournful and unhappy.

Winter came. The father had been seeking work all summer and finally he found occupation in another town. He was obliged to go very early in the morning to his job and came back very late at night, Mary had hardly a chance to see her daddy. His earning was too small to get even enough bread and they did not even dream of getting clothing. Mary's mother fell seriously sick, the children were hungry and there was nothing to satisfy them.

In better days of the past time Mary's parents had cared very little about religion, considering it out of date. Now there began to be heard often the name of God and Jesus. Grandma always repeated her prayers and constantly said, "Oh, Lord Jesus Christ, have mercy upon us!" Mary heard her sighing and began to think about it. To her question about who is Jesus and how can he help, she received an unsatisfactory answer, because grandma repeated all the time, "Jesus have mercy upon us!" Speaking to her sick daughter, she always said, "Possibly Jesus will send us some help." Mary began to think of Jesus as a mighty ruler who could do away with all misery and suffering. She began to think that the only necessary thing would be to go to Jesus and tell him all about the suffering. Her mother recovered but there was nothing to do except hope that she would not get sick again from hunger.

Where Does Jesus Live?

Because to Mary's question about Jesus nobody had given her a satisfactory answer, and when she asked where Jesus lived her grandmother said, "Very far." Mary had decided to go even very far to find Jesus and tell him about the hunger and need in the family. She thought that good people would point the way to her. She began to make up her little speech about things needed in the family. She thought about papa's clothes—he walked already in rags and very ugly wooden shoes. She thought about mother who was walking barefooted and very badly dressed, and about all the needs of the family. She quite forgot to think about herself. Then Mary thought, "Why does not Jesus come with some help to us? He must know that we all suffer so much, and dear grandma is always praying and expecting him; she is crying nearly all the time."

One day Mary's father did not go to work. The doctor came and said he was very sick and would be obliged to stay in bed a long time. Mary saw tears in her mother's eyes and grandma was repeating, "O greatest Jesus have mercy upon us, do not suffer us to perish in this condition." When the sun was setting and grandma was sitting in a corner on a rough bench, Mary decided to put the question about Jesus to grandma.

"Is Jesus far from us?" she asked.

"Jesus is very far, my dear child," said grandmother.

"Is he good?"

"Very good."

"Can Jesus afford to give us as much bread as we need?"

"Yes, child, he has enough for all; he can do everything."

"Why don't we go to him, grandma?"

Grandma put her weary hand on Mary's head and said, in broken words, "He is so far—so very far from us." The old lady, broken with suffering, could say no more. Mary stopped questioning her. She looked all around; there lay daddy, very sick; mamma not very well, everybody hungry and the house cold. She decided to go to Jesus the next morning. No matter how far he might be, the good people would help her to find them.

Hunting for the Master

The next morning, Mary, though hungry, started on her way to Jesus. She did not tell anybody about her intention, she was sure that he could be found if earnestly sought. She walked as fast as she could but after a while she became frightened. She stopped and looked backward. It was impossible for her to guess in what direction her home was. She became more frightened and began to cry. A gentleman, seeing the lonely child shivering and crying, asked, "Why do you cry, my little girl?" Mary had not heard such a kind voice for a long time. In her little heart appeared an unknown courage and hope. She seemed to trust the stranger. She grasped his hands and looking in to his eyes with confidence, she asked, "Please, sir, tell me which way leads to Jesus. Is he far from here?"

The gentleman smilingly answered, "Why have you started to go to Jesus?"

She began to explain why she wanted to go to Jesus, "Papa is sick, mother is all the time crying, there is no bread in the house, and it is so cold, and grandma said that Jesus can help us."

"If that is so, then I can show you the way to Jesus, but we must go first to your parents. Possibly they will be worrying about you. Do not cry. You will have bread and clothes and we will try to help father recover from his sickness and mother will stop shedding tears."

The stranger took Mary's hand and walked with her to her home. She began to be really happy, trusting entirely to the word of the man. Her heart rejoiced and it appeared to her that the stranger must be Jesus himself; looking in his eyes, she asked, "Are you Jesus?"

"No, my little girl, but I know Jesus very well, he has sent me to help your dear parents."

Mary clasped her hands in joy. How well she had done when she started to find Jesus. She began to ask particulars about the good gentleman who was sent by Jesus to help them.

"Do you live in this town?"

"No, dear child, I live very far from here, very far indeed, across the large deep ocean in America."

"Why did you come so far here?"

On the Eve of Battle

By HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY

I AM writing this in a hotel where I am waiting for the time of my next speech to come. It will be my last communication to the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention before we take the contributions which will decide whether the Baptist host has suffered a great defeat or won a great victory.

If we fail, the devil will have won in his strategy of division and misrepresentation. If we win every friend of the cause of Christ will be strengthened in faith and courage.

All other Protestant denominations stand in the same case with us. They all have great forward-looking programs in the interests of Christ's cross and his purpose for mankind. Every program is halted when part way through by doubts and fears and distrust. Each denomination meets the same sort of opposition within its own ranks. Our victory will put new courage into the others, our defeat will strengthen all the unspiritual forces of the nation.

When the whole world is looking to Jesus Christ to see if there really is power in him to meet the world's need, can his own disciples fail him? Suppose some one has blundered, is that reason for betraying his cause? Shall we close up mission stations and recall missionaries and abandon work that we have been fifty years in building up because of an intellectual difference in regard to theology? Or shall we carry on, and then settle our dispute?

There are hundreds of young men considering the claims of the ministry: will failure be likely to encourage them to volunteer? There are hundreds longing to throw their lives into home or foreign mission service. Will our failure make for their enthusiasm and courage?

For every reason, human and divine, we must carry on. We have the ability. We must consecrate it in service that is stamped with the cross. The world which looks on to see whether the church really holds Jesus Christ essential to the world's welfare must receive such a proof as will give it fresh evidence of the power of the uplifted Christ.

"Lift high his royal banner. It must not, it must not suffer loss."

Will you not join me in such a volume of passionate prayer as shall open the floodgates of power in the heart of our denomination? God is able to fight for us where we cannot fight. God is willing to do far more than we ask. Jesus has invited and promised us. Shall we not throw ourselves into the Almighty Arm?

The Only Tie That Binds

By ROBERT A. ASHWORTH

WOULD it be possible to bring together a group of men more unlike one another than the company of disciples who met in the Upper Room for the last supper with their Lord? There was Simon Peter, the man of rock, and John, the apostle of love, Thomas, of warm heart but melancholy temperament, ready to die with his Lord, but slow to believe in the resurrection, Philip, the earnest inquirer, Nathanael, the guileless, Matthew, the publican, Simon, the zealot, and finally Judas, the traitor. They were alike only in their negative qualities: they were not learned and they were not distinguished. In their tastes and aptitudes and interests and opinions they were diverse. Take for example, Matthew and Simon. Simon was a zealot, a political malcontent and rebel in arms against the Roman Empire because of the imposition of taxes; Matthew was a publican, in the employ of the Empire and engaged in the collection of those taxes, who would have the conquered bow to the yoke and pay to Caesar Caesar's due.

What could hold together in a single company men so divergent in their temperaments, interests and points of view as these? We know what sufficed to unite them. All but one were bound together with indissoluble ties, and that one, Judas, before the supper was ended, left the company, because he did not belong in it, and went out into the night. The remainder were held together by a single bond: they loved Jesus Christ, and had united their fortunes to His. The most diverse came together in Him.

What was true of the upper room was true of the early days of the history of the church. "Two things," says Professor Glover, "stand out, when we study the character of early Christianity—its great complexity, and its unity in the personality of Jesus of Nazareth."

Let us proclaim this in these days that so much need to remember it. The only bond that is sufficiently strong to secure the unity of Christians of the twentieth century is that which sufficed to hold together the Christians of the first century—love for their common Lord and devotion to His cause. If we are to wait until the disciples of Jesus think alike we shall never be united till "the world is old, and the stars are cold, and the books of the judgment day unfold." The bond of union must be sought at a lower level than that at which men do their thinking. When we are speaking of things fundamental we must not forget that there is something more basic than the products of reason, and that men are moved and energized by their instinctive emotions and not by their theories, by their experience and not by their explanations of it formulated in cold blood, by their loves and hates and devotions and not by their philosophies.

Christians can never be frozen together: they must be welded into one, and that at white heat, if the union is to be either strong or permanent. Christians, for the most part, are like certain metals: they are refractory except at high temperatures. The centrifugal forces that fling the disciples of Jesus apart are of the head: the centripetal forces that draw them together, and toward the central Christ, issue from the heart.

We Can Make the Goal If—

By FRED W. FREEMAN

THERE'S plenty of time to win, but unless we use the time heroically and sacrificially we will fail.

The morale of the denomination is rising, but so far as I can see it, we have not yet reached the point of blood earnestness that assures success.

Some encouraging items:

1. The Nebraska Convention and its call for a week of self-denial and prayer. If this kind of thing can be made more general and genuine, we can win.

2. The meeting of the group of sixteen in New York. This resulted in the assurance of "a fraternal communication to Northern Baptists," which ought to add much to the spirit of unity and cooperation and make large contribution to success.

3. The recent meeting of about one hundred of the laymen of New York representing most of the churches of the Metropolitan District. Not a pastor was present. The meeting was unique in many ways and it is believed by those present who know the situation there, that distinctly helpful and promising results will follow and that the full quota of expectancy both as to collections on pledges and the offerings of new money from the Metropolitan District will be realized. Many other tokens of progress are coming in but nothing short of apostolic zeal, devotion, sacrifice and intercession will meet the situation.

I close as I began this note. There's plenty of time to win, but unless we use the time heroically and sacrificially we will fail.

"You see Jesus has sent me here so that I could bring help to your parents."

"Is Jesus also in America?"

"Yes, Jesus is in America. He asked us to collect good things and go to all the people that suffer from hunger and help them."

Mary listened diligently and she understood everything which was said. While she was questioning her good friend, they came to her home. The gentleman questioned intelligently about everything, noted everything that was in the house, cheered the sick father and told the mother and grandmother to be hopeful.

The same day in the afternoon a wagon came with clothing, bread and condensed milk. Mary was jubilant. Her mother began to smile and grandmother thanked God for the help. The good gentleman came again and left some money. After a few days Mary was dressed in warm underwear, a neat dress and coat, nearly as good as in past days. It was spring. She went out with her little brother to walk. A neighbor's girl came to her and asked how she got her new clothes.

"Jesus has given me all, and he has given needed things to all our family," answered Mary.

"Jesus gave you this nice dress?" the girl asked, wondering.

"Yes, Jesus did it."

"And the new shoes?"

"Jesus."

"And this nice bonnet?"

"Jesus gave me all I have on," answered Mary with pride.

Jesus: Receiver or Giver?

The playmate began to wonder. She could not understand. Not long ago the priest was in her father's house and wanted something for Jesus. He said that Jesus needed it very much. She had heard much about Jesus, but she saw him only in pictures and the altar in the church. But he never moved, never gave anything to anybody. How could he make such a beautiful present to any one?

After a moment of reflection she said to Mary, "I have never received anything from Jesus."

Said Mary: "Because Jesus gives only to those who are sick and need it very much; only when father is sick and mother is crying because she has no bread and no money for buying food."

"Did Jesus give it to you in the church?" asked the girl curiously.

"No, he came to our house, brought needed clothing for everybody, also bread and milk."

This was too much for the little inquirer. In her mind it was impossible for Jesus to come and help anybody. So far as she knew, Jesus never moved himself; sometimes the priest carried him from the church on the street in a procession. She tried to convince Mary that she was mistaken, that Jesus could not give things to anybody.

"I was many times in the church and everybody said that Jesus is in the church and I never got one thing from him."

That assertion was strange to Mary. How is it that she had never been in the church, never stopped in a building where Jesus was all the time? She had met only one gentleman who knew Jesus and got so many good things. Mary began to reflect upon all she had heard, and tried to give some answer to her friend. She finally said, "You see, that Jesus who is in the church gives nothing to the needy, but that Jesus who comes from America does give us what we need."

"Jesus from America?" asked Mary's surprised friend "How does he know about who needs here clothes and milk?"

Mary laughed, thinking her friend stupid because she could not understand such a simple thing. "Yes, he knows everything," she explained. "This gentleman said that Jesus sent him from America purposely to give us things which we need."

"This is not possible," contradicted Mary's friend.

"It is true," affirmed Mary. "I saw myself the gentleman, I brought him to our house. He spoke to me so gently, he is so good, and he said to me that Jesus sent him to us from America."

This was more than Mary's friend could contradict. She began to think the matter over seriously. Finally she said, "Yes, it might be, but it is not the Jesus who is in the church, because the Jesus who is always in the church never gives a thing to the needy people."

Mary, with joy, said: "The Jesus who gave us so many good things is in America. He knows all. He knows about those who need help and sends to them his good friend with the clothing, shoes, milk and money."

Easter Thank-Offering for Missions

By J. W. WEDDELL

IT should be understood in this matter of setting aside a week's salary at our option for the present missionary emergency that this sum should be straight out over and above one's regular giving which is with many based on the tithing principle. One writer thinks that this is too much to ask; another that it is too little even to think of. But it is the littles from many sources that make up the much. And if some of our missionaries on the field in a truly sacrificial way give a month of their salaries and if others on this side in a smaller way yet in vastly larger numbers lay down in addition to all else a week's salary, which in turn might possibly provoke a great loyal rank and file to give at once at least a day's wage or income, the result would not be trifling and might even, under God, save the day. In any case for the sake of our endangered cause let us get together and do something—something concrete and practical—and do it quick. Why not, whatever our method, make a real Easter thank-offering for missions?

A Missionary Meeting Long Ago

'T WAS once upon a time they met to talk of mission work—The Indian, the Arabian, the habits of the Turk.

Mr. Fearful and Miss Cautious, Mr. Stingy and Miss Slow, All waited anxiously to hear what every one should know.

The president walked to the chair; for order gave a rap.

"Our business first is foreign work; so study well this map.

Far off in darkest heathen lands some money must be given; This was our Saviour's last command before he went to heaven."

Miss Cautious spoke: "We can't afford to help across the sea;

Those people are too far away. It always seems to me

That just across the continent are needs much greater there.

I move that foreign work be dropped; and then I'll give my share."

This motion seconded at once, the foreign work was lost,

Because the needs were great at home; they had to count the cost.

But now another voice was heard, the speaker was Miss Slow:

"Domestic work may be all right; but I for one say 'No!'"

"I move that we go slowly; our church we must repair;

For charity begins at home. We can't send money there.

So I suggest that we henceforth drop missions from our work.

We can't afford to labor for Indian or for Turk."

The motion seconded at once, thus mission work was lost,

Because the church must be repaired, the people count the cost.

Then Mr. Stingy rose, and said: "My friends, I cannot see Why you are ever trying to get money out of me.

"You know my family is large; my money much I need;

I have so many clothes to buy, so many mouths to feed.

I move that all this church expense be left for richer people;

These are the ones to run the church and guard from steps to steeple."

The motion seconded at once, the debts were left to others,

For well they knew the church roll gave the names of richer brothers,

Then came a voice, a feeble one, which said: "I can't afford

To help my family along; I leave them with the Lord.

"I earn enough to keep myself, and hope some coming year

To have enough laid up in bank to read my title clear."

Then all the members said: "You're right. We owe ourselves a debt."

So each one closed his pocketbook; they've not been opened yet.

But this was many years ago, full fifty years or more.

We in a new creation live; such meetings we deplore.

How grieved we feel that long ago the people did not know

That giving brings great blessings, and we reap from what we sow.

The women are now striving in an effort bold and brave

To win their sisters from vain pride, and teach them how to save;

Come join their forces worthy and with all your might and main Boost in every manner the Continuation Campaign!

The Open Forum

AS DR. DEAN SEES THE SITUATION

Some inquiries that have come to me through the mail and some conferences with denominational leaders held recently regarding my position in the present financial campaign as a member of the national Committee on Fundamentals lead me to request the courtesy of your columns.

I am most heartily in favor of the present special campaign to meet our threatened deficit and I am happy to find that the Baptist churches of the Southern California Convention are practically a unit in this stand. They are a unit also on the fundamentals. We have almost no people in this convention field who are bitten with the German rationalism. The noble church of which I have the honor of being pastor has set for itself a goal of $50,000 in addition to pledges already made, and this in spite of the fact that it raised its full quota for the $100,000,000 campaign. Most of us are in very moderate circumstances and many are on the border line of poverty. This morning a widow of a gallant Civil War veteran said, "I had waited long for the payment of back pension due my husband at the time of his death. At last I wrote to our good Baptist president a personal appeal and in ten days I had received the money. I wish to give a part of it to the Continuation Campaign."

As a Fundamentalist I believe that some of our schools and colleges have been badly injured by the rationalistic wave that is now, I think, beginning to subside. But on the whole our schools and colleges have been doing excellent work, and we must not throw the silver out with the dish-water.

There are two great tasks before Northern Baptists just now. One is to adopt and stand together on a sturdy Baptist declaration of faith. I am in favor of appointing a committee at the next session of the Northern Baptist Convention to co-operate with similar committees from the Southern Baptist Convention and the Canadian Baptist Convention in drawing up a careful, comprehensive and loyal declaration of faith. In addition to this declaration it would be well for us to draw up also an appeal to the public containing the Baptist viewpoint on practical world matters, particularly those having to do with civil and religious liberty. Are the 7,000,000 American Baptists so impotent that they cannot bring combined pressure to bear upon congress and the present administration in behalf of Armenia and the other wretched victims of the Turk? Shall we permit a continual Golgotha to be enacted behind the Turkish lines and look on with complacency while England and France compromise with the Turkish Nationalists and betray the sacred cause of humanity? In a recent conversation with M. Venizelos, ex-premier of Greece, he said to me, "I have information that new massacres and deportations are going on behind the Turkish armies. Can you inform me why the enlightened nations of the world permit this? Why Greece should stand alone for civilization and Christianity?" Baptists need to speak out boldly both their doctrines and their policies. Rationalism within our ranks and reactionaryism in politics ought to both feel the strong hand of the Baptists.

But there is another task before the Northern Baptist Convention and that is the paying of our debts, the extension of our work and the completion of the $100,000,000 campaign. Now that churches may designate gifts there is absolutely no excuse for any church in the field of the convention not cooperating heartily in the Continuation Campaign. This in general is the position I have always held ever since the $100,000,000 campaign was started. And if my name has the least weight with any hesitating minister or church I hope this statement will place that weight on the right side of the scale.

THE FUNDAMENTAL BAPTIST PRINCIPLE

I hear a good deal of wild talk just now as to what is to happen at Indianapolis. Personally the prospect does not disturb my composure, nor should it bother any true Baptist. I have been a member of the Baptist denomination, in good and regular standing, for forty-six years, and I am at present a deacon in Calvary Baptist Church, New Haven.

The fundamental Baptist principle is individual liberty. We have no creed, no hierarchy, and there is really no Baptist Church; there is simply a collection of Baptist churches. No combination of churches and no compact majority in any considerable convention can change this fundamental principle. Each church is a separate unit; no Baptist church, no group of churches, can tell any other church what it must do, nor can they force any creed upon it. They have absolutely no more power over it than the University Club in New York has over the University Club in Cleveland.

This freedom has always been one of the chief sources of our strength as a denomination, for it has saved us from the melancholy schisms and quarrels so frequent elsewhere.

If there is any Baptist church that wants a creed, that church can have one at any time. But it cannot force that creed on other churches without violating the fundamental Baptist principle. No convention can drive me out of the Baptist fold, for I shall refuse to go.

Baptists believe in Jesus Christ, the divine Savior; that ought to be enough for any Baptist. I refuse to sign any man-made creed, no matter what any convention may say; and in refusing, I shall be a fundamental Baptist.

A 1921 MODEL MISSIONARY

In a recent number of one of our best known magazines there appeared an article under the title of "A 1921 Model Missionary." The writer evidently endeavored to justify missions by recounting some of the impressions that he had received while traveling in the Far East. But unfortunately the article contained the subtle inference that the saving of souls is not the primary interest or concern of the missionary of today.

Those of us who are particularly interested in the missionary enterprise appreciate keenly the favorable testimony occasionally offered by business men or travelers who come into contact with our work, but we deplore the fact that erroneous impressions are sometimes received and spread broadcast. The missionaries themselves are frequently to blame for these erroneous impressions because in their attempts to court the favor or support of the visitors they place undue emphasis upon the economic and other physical advantages that come as a direct result of missionary effort.

The language school in Nanking, where I was privileged to spend a year, offered a splendid opportunity to know intimately scores of modern missionaries, young men and women, representing different denominations. Probably there is as great a diversity in this body of young people as ever was in the missionaries who were sent out fifty years ago. One thing they have in common and that is to give to a needy people the gospel of Christ. The salary offered to the young physician would hardly induce him to come out "if he were more interested in sores than in souls." The young educationalist would hardly come out here if he were more interested in science than in human souls. And let me add that to think that there are men and women out here whose sole object is to destroy faith in God and his Word is only the rankest kind of foolishness. There is only one thing that can keep young people out here, separated from all that they know and love, and that is a zealous loyalty to the faith in the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The "1921 Model Missionary" is just the same kind of missionary as were those who spread the gospel over the whole world in the past. He differs only in the matter of outside appearance. He is probably a little better equipped in the matter of education, but he is motivated by the same power, he has the same zeal, the same love, and the same faith and hope.

Easter Everywhere

In every leaf that crowds the plain,
In every violet 'neath the hill,
In every golden daffodil
I see the risen Lord again!

In each arbutus flower I see
A faith that lived through frost and snow.
And in the birds that northwest go,
A guiding Hand's revealed to me.

Lo! winter from her dark abyss
Came forth to kill all lovely things,
'Twas vain, spring rose on emerald wings,
Moth-like, from her dead chrysalis.

Each germ within the tiny seed
Throws off the husk that to it clings,
And toward the sun it upward brings
New life to blossom to its need.

Ye hearts that mourn, rise up and sing!
Death hath no power to hold his prey;
The grave is only where we lay
The soul for its eternal spring!

In every leaf that crowds the plain,
In every violet 'neath the hill,
In every golden daffodil...
I see the risen Lord again!

The People Who Would Not Buy Easter

THEY said they couldn't afford to—not this year.

But the Milliner was not worrying about it, for one by one the most stylish of the little hats upon her shelves went winging their way home to crown certain smiling faces. And the strange thing was that although people bought Easter hats, they still could not afford buying Easter. No, not this year!

But the Suit-and-Cloak Maker was not worrying, either, for one by one his latest models were fitted on delighted customers. And although people seemed to be affording Easter tweeds and Easter tricotines they still could not afford to buy Easter. At least, not this year.

Yet dressmakers plied their needles tirelessly, shoemakers discussed the height of the new Easter heels, hosiery counters were heaped high with the silken sheen of myriad spring stockings, and it was a common sight to see bent elbows resting on small cushions with the owners' rigid fingers help upright as clerks fitted gloves and gauntlets—gloves and gauntlets—gloves and gauntlets.... For in the week preceding April 16 all the Christian world read Easter advertisements from the merchants and rushed downtown to buy its Easter frocks and Easter socks and Easter shoes and gloves. Until a heathen might almost think that Easter was a thing you wore upon your body. Almost—but not quite! For there were the Easter lilies.

The people who could not afford to buy Easter itself (Not this year, at any rate) sought the busy florist and ordered pots of fragrant blooms, either from decorative love of their rare beauty or in memory of some loved one passed away. And there was a symbol in this for those with eyes to see it: that there is no death! That from all seeming deadness low-laid in earth with tears comes forth a glorious resurrection always. So lilies are never just lilies at Easter: but sermons and symbols of faith—tokens of some mystery which the angels have wrought in the night. In such revealing moments the "stone rolled away" no longer seems merely a Bible story but the most comforting glorious fact to those who mourn. But the very people who patronize florists and consider their lilies are also the people who often beg off from buying Easter. They have all the Easter they need! As if Easter were fashionable clothes. Or crowded pews on that one Sunday morning. Or triumphant anthems. Or lilies in pots.

So, because they will neither buy nor share Easter, it must surely come to pass that women will be weeping here and there around the world. And as on that early Easter morning centuries ago, I think the risen Christ who appeared first of all before a woman, may whisper to some far-off Baptist convert in our mission fields: "Woman, why weepest thou?"

"Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him. For I was one of the new inquirers in the things of God: all my life had I not hungered for some satisfying peace? And gone on weary pilgrimages? Performing needless penance? Then came the teacher of the one true God to sit down in our village and open up the way. Spellbound we listened, men and women thirsty for the springs of God; until one day we went again to listen—but behold, there was no teacher! There was no longer money for evangelists. New fields could not be entered. New converts must just—wait. So the little we have learned is now confused; we understood so ignorantly—it almost seems as if the people who stopped giving money had taken away our Lord and we know not where they have laid him."

And he, who died to be forever the Good Shepherd to all who wander and the Great Physician to all in pain and the Light of the world to those who walk in darkness, feels again the print of nails in his hands—new nails thrust in by the people who will not buy Easter for others. Not for them will he pray as of old: "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do." For they know only too well what they do, when Easter clothes + Easter gloves + Easter shoes + Easter socks + Easter lilies would finance a New World Movement and buy an Easter of glad awakening for the groping, wandering souls of earth.

But it is also written in the gospels: "While it was yet dark, the women came. . . ." Yes; and God be thanked they are

Before Him the demons flee
To the dead He sayeth: Arise!
To the living: Follow Me!
And that voice still soundeth on
From the centuries that are gone,
To the centuries that shall be."

The Young Reserves

The Flower That Preached An Easter Sermon

NOT very long ago I was looking at a wonderful picture, and although there was a great deal in it, the thing of all things that I loved was a lily; and next to the lily, I loved the little girl who carried it. You see, I felt quite sure I knew who she was. I may be all wrong, but just see if you don't agree with me.

The background of the picture was all hill, green—not the dear gay green of new spring grass, but a sober green; and on the hill were three crosses: I think it was the crosses which made the background so dark and somber. Looking at it, you had the feeling you have when there is a thunderstorm coming—a feeling that is like nothing else in the world; uncomfortable, strained and miserable; as if you couldn't bear waiting much longer.

In the foreground was a perfectly lovely garden; I knew it was the one which Joseph of Arimathea had recently bought. Bright little spring flowers in prim rows were thrusting their heads out of the ground; yet you felt that they had stopped midway of blooming in the same hushed waiting that the crosses on the hill seemed to have.

Then there was a great vault in a mound of earth, with a really enormous stone rolled up against the opening, sealed by gorgeous important-looking seals with Roman eagles on them, so that you saw that government officials had this place in charge. Yet even the waxen seals seemed waiting. Beside them were two Roman soldiers in the marvelous helmets and armor that Roman soldiers needed to guard a place sealed with government seals. Only these great warriors, so strong that the muscles stood out on their arms, had evidently become so tired in their waiting that they had both fallen asleep.

I think it was because they were asleep that the little girl dared come so close. You could see that she had crept up on tiptoe, probably dreadfully frightened, but quite determined to do the lovely thing she planned to do: the dear secret thing that she must have lain awake planning all Saturday evening. Yet it was not such a secret as she had imagined, for very faintly in the picture you could see an angel hovering beside her—perhaps to protect her in case those grim soldiers awakened; they say there is always such an angel beside us day and night to guard us in all our ways. But even the angel seemed waiting. The very lily waited, hushed and pale. It was only the little girl who was in a hurry. You know how she must have felt: being so alone, with soldiers snoring, and their cruel swords gripped in their hands, all ready...

I began wondering about her: who was she, and why had she risked it, and what did she want her lily to say, and why was she sure that a lily would say it? But I hadn't looked more than a minute before I was quite sure that she was the Little-girl-to-whom-Jesus-said, "Arise!"

There may have been disciples (and there were) who felt that Jesus was dead forever; and there may have been Roman governors who were positive he was dead forever; there may have been three Marys preparing spices for the body they thought would never again be mortal; but the little daughter of Jairus knew better.

"But I was like that myself, mother, don't you remember?" she said to her mother. "Why, you even had the mourners come to weep and wail for me, mother. You thought I was dead forever; but when the Lord Jesus came into my room and took my hand saying: 'Arise, little girl, arise!' I got right up, mother—just as easy! And he will arise, too. Oh, I just know he will!"

But I suppose Jairus and his wife, who had traveled all the way from Capernaum, felt that being killed on a cross by Jews and Roman soldiers was very different. And it had been three days now. Yet the little girl knew! And no doubt she remembered how the Lord Jesus had said to her mother on the day when she arose from the dead: "I think the little maid is hungry—give her food." For she had been hungry and food was exactly what she wanted. So now she began wondering what the Lord Jesus would want when he arose from the dead himself. How she must have thought and thought and thought, eager to choose the very thing that would show him that she understood. And then she remembered how a flower had preached one of his sermons: "Consider the lilies," he had said.

Of course! a lily was the very thing. But were there lilies in Jerusalem fields, gorgeous lilies that rivaled Solomon in all his glory? Evidently she could not find one with scarlet petals, for the one in her hand was white—white like the soul of a child, pure like the thoughts of a child. And I think she may have said to herself:

"This white lily has a story
But it whispers very low,
I will tell it while I hold it
For the story sweet I know.

Once this lily, now so lovely,
Wore a dress of brownish gray,
No sweet perfume, no white beauty,
In the ground 'twas laid away.

From the darkness and the stillness
God awoke this lily fair,
Now it whispers 'Christ is risen.'
(Whispers in the Easter air.)"

Then early, very early that Sunday morning, while it was still dark, she ran all the way to leave it at the Savior's tomb to show him that she understood, that she knew he would arise as the lily itself had once arisen. And in the picture she is actually tiptoeing bravely between those two great soldiers, laying her lily right before the tomb. That is absolutely all the picture tells.

Yet I think I know the sequel: I think that in another minute or two the soldiers will yawn themselves awake and stroll home for breakfast; I think the angel will then roll the mammoth stone aside, being careful not to tread upon that precious lily; I think the Savior will come forth and stoop to pick it up. And I think that on that glorious Easter morning he will say to me: "Verily I say unto you, whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein."

What Easter Suggests

EASTER? Vacation time! Holidays can educate as well as books.

ASTIR? Every inch of nature waking up: buds swelling, birds building nests, grass getting greener.

SEEDS? Dead? Not a bit of it,—aching to take off their brown coats and get to work feeding mankind or furnishing flowers!

TRIMMINGS? On little girl's bonnets and big girls' hats, but "handsome is as handsome does!"

EGGS? Fresh ones to eat, painted ones to admire, but the Chinese say an egg is the symbol of all life.

RABBITS? Somebody once said that the rabbit's favorite food was "Let-us"! So let us THINK!! Seeds bloom! Trimmings decorate! Eggs hatch.

IDLE? Seeds that never sprout are worthless; trimmings that no one buys are a dead loss; eggs that do not hatch are no good. What about idle Young Reserves who do not do what they are

WORK AMONG WANDERING LABORERS IN U. S.

(Missionary Topic) II Thess. 3:7-13

Materials: "From Survey to Service," price 50 cents. "Harvesting Souls in Berry Patches," 5 cents. Order from the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, or 125 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago. "Young People's Service" may be secured from the American Baptist Publication Society, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, or any branch house, for 15 cents per quarter or 60 cents per yearly subscription.

Is it a revelation to you to learn that millions of people are constantly "on the move" from one part of our country to another? Have you thought of the reason for this continual migration? The cause is chiefly economic. II. Paul Douglass, in his book entitled "From Survey to Service," attributes this periodic fluctuation in industry to three main causes:

There is Nature herself. Grain must be harvested when it is ripe. A quarter of a million migrants are needed annually, in the grain belt alone.

"In the second place, there is the seasonal demand for goods. For example, straw hats could be manufactured twelve months in the year, but since they are worn only in warm weather, we find more than twice as many people employed in this occupation in February as in July.

"Finally, there is the problem of human nature. After a man becomes accustomed to temporary employment, he may refuse steady work, or any job at all for that matter; but usually he starts his life of vagrancy through necessity rather than choice."

The people without community life have been classified by Ralph E. Diffendorfer as harvesters, workers in small fruit and canning industries, lumbermen, ice cutters, oyster grubbers, construction gangs, sound, canal, and river-boat employees. Let us study a few of these classes.

I. The Harvesters

Possibly you have friends who talk of going to the harvest-field in order to have a few weeks' outing, and you have thought of the harvesters as a grand vacation party. There is an army of these men, however, sweeping northward from Texas to Minnesota at the rate of a hundred miles per week. Some "follow through" from the latter part of May to August and are joined by "labor vacationists" from the cities and smaller towns. Their number is still further increased by lumbermen, miners, workers in oil-fields, and other available recruits.

There are difficulties to overcome: crop conditions vary with the weather from season to season, wages fluctuate, storms cause loss of time, and the labor supply may be very irregular, so that the harvest-field workers do not have an ideal vacation.

Follow them into the fields, analyze the group at work, and lodge with them at night. You will find yourself in company with all grades of humanity, from the educated and refined down to the degraded and desperate. Though the beaming sun gives to all alike a coat of tan, the hearts underneath do not respond alike to the "Son of Righteousness." Some there are who at home would find their way to a house of worship on the Lord's Day, would be content to sit down with their family and read the daily newspaper. Of necessity, separated from loved ones, deprived of the familiar newspaper, without the conveniences which common decency demand, they are dragged down to the hobo-level, compelled to live without baths, to sleep with working-clothes on, in barn lofts or hay-mows, to listen to cursing and vile language and often to participate in gambling. Sunday work deprives of the opportunity for attendance upon church services even where living conditions might enable some men to prepare themselves for association with other people. In addition to all these disadvantages, there is frequently a social ostracism on the part of the people of the community, a "thus far shalt thou come and no farther" which is most difficult to overcome.

The Christian people of one Kansas town at least opened their hearts to the harvesters of the vicinity, tested their response to brotherly treatment, and reaped the reward of those who follow the Master's suggestion, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye have done it unto me." The county had called for 1,000 harvesters, in response to which the town was filled with strangers. Then adverse weather conditions delayed the beginning of the harvest about ten days. A welfare service was organized with business men, town officers, and churches cooperating. A recreation center was furnished with tables, chairs, stationery, newspapers, magazines and musical instruments. The appreciation of these conveniences may be attested by the use of more than 5,000 sheets of writing paper by the men. Medical attention was provided. As sleeping rooms in the town were not available for all, the men were permitted to sleep in the room.

Young people's societies and pastors furnished entertainments on week nights and conducted religious services on Sunday at the Center, which were well attended. Naturally the men felt welcome in the churches of that town and after they had gone out into the fields to work many of them came back to attend church services. A letter of appreciation of all the kindly interest shown was afterward received from one of the strangers, indicating the immeasurable good that was accomplished.

II. Railroad Construction Men

A harder class to deal with, doubtless, is the construction companies along the railroad. It is not necessary to describe these strings of dilapidated box-cars with holes in the roof and cracks in the walls. Water is scarce because it must be carried from a distance. There are no conveniences for common decency. Dirt, vermin, and unsanitation reign undisturbed. In some cases ten or more men bunk in a car. Blankets furnished by the companies are passed on from one to another without laundering, in spite of dangerous contagious diseases. Living conditions are most depressing to those who have to endure them, consequently only the lowest type of men can be obtained for the work.

III. The Lumbermen

The lumber industry furnishes one of the hardest problems for missionary endeavor. Men in companies varying from fifty to one thousand camp together, living in the crudest huts in the forest, far from trade centers. They are without families, in fact, as a rule, there are no women in the camps except cooks. Radical social views are held and warmly discussed in their midst. Long hours, extremely unsatisfactory living conditions, and unreasonable relationships to the employees on the part of the companies, greatly aggravated the unrest among the loggers before the war. Conditions since then, however, have been somewhat improved; better houses have been provided; more married men are engaged in the occupation, some of whom travel to and from their homes by auto.

Religiously, many of the people in the lumber camps have felt antagonistic toward churches and ministers in particular, whom they consider "parasites" of society. Very little missionary work as yet has been done for this class. A few theological students have gone into the woods as lumbermen, working through vacation with the men, alert for opportunities to tell the gospel story to them, and thus provide an antidote for the bitterness of their hearts. Very few local churches have attempted to reach those working within the boundaries of, or adjacent to, their fields.—Adapted from Service.

North Dakota's Experience

The first organized delegation of B. Y. P. U'ers to the international convention has written history for the work in this state. Four young ladies and one young man represented us. Not even we, who had the highest regard for the convention, had dared hope that its influence would be so marked. What inexpressible joy was ours when on Sunday afternoon all four of our young ladies went forward to dedicate their lives for some specific form of religious service! The joy was increased when we received the news that the young man delegate, who had to leave before that memorable session, wrote that he too had heard the call, and was ready to join his fellow-delegates. 100 per cent. Can you beat it? Is the convention of Baptist young people a spiritual asset? There is only one answer. This is, decidedly, YES!!!

When the State Young People's Convention convened at Minot, we were successful in getting three of the young ladies to attend. They briefly related their experiences at Cincinnati. Such was the impression made by their testimony to the quality of that meeting that when the invitation was given to others to join them, twenty-one young people stepped upon the platform in dedication of their lives. The inspiration of the international and state conventions continues to this day. As a result, we have as a direct or indirect result, about fifty life service volunteers.

Wherever the spirit of consecration has manifested itself the work in the local B. Y. P. U.'s has taken on new life. Therefore, we are setting our goal high for the present year. Already one society has informed us that it has decided to send ten delegates to St. Paul. If you want new life in your society, if you desire an enlarged vision for your young people, if you are praying the Lord of the harvest to cast forth workers in the harvest-field, make the necessary sacrifice and send a delegation to the convention at St. Paul.

OREGON

Since the last promoter, Pendleton B. Y. P. U. has sent in the payment of the grounds, $38.60. Veneta B. Y. P. U., $23.50 and Grace, of Portland, $2.50. This makes a total paid by the young people, $1025.60. Many thanks. We shall reach the goal.

Grants Pass Society leads in the amount already paid, $120, and Independence comes a close second with $116, Pendleton third with $114.60.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Dr. Floyd Adams of Strong Place Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., was the speaker at the Young People's Federation Meeting on March 21, Second Baptist Church. There were 500 present. Enthusiasm for the Better B. Y. P. U. campaign is running high.

CALIFORNIA

The Baptist Young People's Union of the First Church of San Pedro publishes an attractive little paper called the Young Baptist.

IOWA

Iowa Association B. Y. P. U. rally will be held at First Church, Fort Madison, Iowa, April 22-23. The rally theme will be "A B. Y. P. U. in every church in the association." General Secretary White will deliver two addresses.

KENTUCKY

Under the leadership of Mr. W. S. Farmer, state chairman, the Baptist men of Kentucky held a great convention in the Fourth Avenue Church, Louisville, Ky., March 22-23. The key-word for the convention was "Follow Me." The men of the state are carrying on a great program along stewardship lines.

SPECIAL REQUEST

Miss Vera Rice of Denison University, Granville, Ohio, who is to conduct two conferences at the St. Paul Convention on "Local organization and operation" of the young people's society, is very anxious to have suggestions from the young people for this conference—novel ideas regarding programs, cleverly printed announcements, and any other attractive features the young people have found helpful in carrying out local programs. Send material direct to Miss Rice.

A Clinic in the Personal Religion of Young People

Some time ago Rev. P. H. MacDowell, pastor First Church, Melrose, Mass., conducted a B. Y. P. U. clinic. Letters were sent out to one hundred young people embodying the four propositions as given below. The young people were asked to answer the propositions frankly and to mail their answers to the pastor, for confidential use.

I. The greatest help in my Christian life is

II. The greatest problem in my own personal religious life is.....

III. To my thinking the greatest problem in present day church work is.....

IV. Speaking of and for the young people of the world, as I know them, I believe that the greatest hindrance to their religious thinking and living is.....

Name.....

NOTE: Please make answers clear, definite, full, stating reason, giving the "why" of your findings. For additional space please use the back side.

The clinic findings from these answers will inspire and guide full, frank, face-to-face discussion. All answers are in strict confidence.

Discussional Questions For the B. Y. P. U. Clinic

1. What book have you read in the past month? Do you advise others to read it and why?

2. What play or show or movie have you attended the past month that you are glad to commend, and why?

3. What is your favorite daily newspaper, and why?

4. Which church service do you like best? From what church service do you get the most benefit?

5. What is your favorite amusement? From what recreation do you get the most benefit?

6. Will plays in the church help or hurt the theater? Will acting, taking part in these plays, help or hurt our church young people?

7. In the parish annex, or social rooms of a modern church building, would you have a kitchen? a stage? a bowling alley? pool or billiard tables? a smoking room? game rooms? gymnasium and swimming pool? movie equipment? dancing?

8. If we were to add $1,000 to our church budget, and were to give the spending of it to the B. Y. P. U., how would you spend it?

9. Here are two men of equally good character—one smokes and one sleeps in church: for which one do you vote for deacon?

10. How much of the appropriation for music would you spend on a paid quartet, and why?

Pastor MacDowell writes: "These ten questions struck oil. I know here is a rich gold mine for a busy pastor, or for a pastor divorced from his young people."

Retroactive Influences in Sunday-school Work for New Americans

By WILLIAM JAMES SLY

It is well known that since the war large numbers of Baptists have returned to their old homes in Europe. It is safe to say that there is scarcely a Baptist foreign language church in our land from which a number of its members have not returned. This is true of all groups but it is especially true of the Hungarians, Poles, Italians, Slovaks and Roumanians. Some long to make a short visit to see their parents and friends as well as to see the devastations of war. Some, for various reasons, decide to remain permanently. Earnest and devout men and women deliberately plan to return and remain in order that they may share with their old friends the blessings of the gospel they have learned in America. A few have larger ambitions of taking part in the religious reconstruction of their country. Others long to reach father or mother with the love of Jesus as they have learned it. Whatever the causes that take these Christians back, they often take with them a vision of American Bible-school principles and methods in such an appreciative way that they wish to establish such schools there. Surely it is a great encouragement for Christian workers with New Americans here to learn such facts and to realize that what is given here is planted in many a town, hamlet or large city in Europe to which these workers return or even send letters.

Examples of such retroactive influences may serve to illustrate what is going on now and is likely to go on still more in the future. Rev. Nicholas Dulity, pastor of the Hungarian Baptist Church in New York City, tells that when he recently went to Hungary he was able to take the ideas of Sunday-school work which he had worked out in his own church and translate them into accomplishment in several places in the homeland. He stated that he held institutes and conferences, discussing such subjects as child-nature, graded lessons and teacher-training, similar to institutes held here. Rev. Stephen Orosz, Magyar professor in the International Seminary at East Orange states that if sufficient funds were available to assist the Magyar Sunday schools in the United States in developing their teacher training for a few years, the influence of this work would constantly spread to Hungary, the land of the Magyars.

Several months ago some Russian brothers who had received a vision of modern methods in their Sunday school in Buffalo returned to their home town near Minsk in Russia. On their arrival these brothers began to hold open-air preaching services and then to gather the converts and others into a Sunday school which they modeled as far as possible on the pattern of their own school in Buffalo. They soon numbered over 100 children besides many adults. They attempted a graded school with several American features, which of course were things unknown in that community. Other illustrations might be mentioned of the same splendid retroactive influences that are being exerted in other lands among other Baptist groups. Thus we see that what American Sunday-school workers are doing for these New American Sunday schools here is being done not only for America but for all lands of Europe as well. Such facts give a new significance to this Christian phase of Americanization work.

International Uniform Lesson for April 30

ISAIAH'S SUMMONS AND RESPONSE

Isaiah 6:1-8

Golden Text: Isaiah 6:8

Setting

Isaiah, prophet, poet, statesman, the son of Amoz, was a prophet in Judah about 740 to 700 B. C. He felt the death of King Uzziah keenly as is evidenced by the opening verse of the lesson—it was an event from which he dated a crucial point in his own life.

Lesson

Note the contrast between Isaiah in the temple, and Uzziah in the temple in last Sunday's lesson. A prideful young man could have had no such revelation as came to this one. Worshipful, reverent, he lifted up his eyes and had a vision which affected vitally the course of his life. He beheld the Lord sitting upon a great, high throne with the seraphim crying: "Holy, holy, holy is Jehovah of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory!" The foundations of the house shook and the house was full of smoke. Said Isaiah: "Woe is me! For I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, Jehovah of hosts." Then were Isaiah's lips touched by a live coal, which a seraphim had taken by means of a tongs from off the altar, with the words: "Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin forgiven." And Isaiah heard the voice of the Lord saying: "Whom shall I send and who will go for us?" He answered: "Here am I; send me."

Fire is the symbol of purification; the touching of Isaiah's lips with the glowing coal indicated that they were purged. With Isaiah's reverence and open mind there went the humility that is essential to the true worshiper—the putting wholly aside of self and its insignificant accomplishments. There was also the willingness to serve. The course to which Isaiah committed himself was not a glorious one—rather it was one which would probably bring upon him the scorn and enmity of those among whom he worked.

Leading Thoughts

1. Visions come to those with the starward gaze, not to those seeking earth worms. 2. Isaiah saw God. How do men see him today? 3. God speaks in the ear of every devout, humble, seeking, self-surrendering worshiper. 4. "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" The question is as pregnant today as when Isaiah heard and answered.

What an Open Confession Meant to a Jaro Student

With regard to myself I can tell you frankly that I am entirely cursed by my parents and relatives. They said that I was no longer a good boy and a member of the family because I had broken one of their regulations. When I left home this last Christmas vacation my parents told me that I must not think any more of them nor write them, because they had no son named Melchor. But I told them that as long as I was alive I could never forget anybody at home, that I would send letters even though they would not receive them and that I would not stop calling them my parents, for such they really were. My stepmother told me that this year I should meet my failure in school because she said that she would pray to God all the time to fail me in my studies. Some of my aunts told me that had I not submitted myself to the Protestant religion, whatever I should ask of them they were ready to help me, but now I was a sinner and so I would not get one centavo. They said if I wanted to get help from them and become again a member of the family I must go to their church and confess to the priest. I told them that whatever circumstances befell me I would remain true and sacrifice for my faith. I told them that the true religion is the Protestant and that I would follow it to my grave. Some of my cousins asked me how I would follow my studies if my parents refused to support me. I told them that as I was now an orphan boy it was up to me to struggle hard in order to succeed in life.

(This boy is a second year student in the Jaro Industrial School and was baptized early in the term. His experience given above was taken from a letter he wrote Mrs. Stuart and is not at all an infrequent situation met by the boys and girls who wish to think for themselves and follow whither that thinking leads them. The girls find it especially hard to make their way against such a condition, but some of them do, going ahead bravely supporting themselves. It is much easier for the boys and many of them have not been in their homes for years as a result of this condition, while others, by taking the stand, win all their relatives.)

Our Own Folks

Evangelism in New England

By YORK A. KING

Dr. Baldwin's recent complimentary remarks concerning the effort of the churches of another denomination to hold simultaneous evangelistic meetings in a given city has led several who know about our work in this district, to give the denominational press some information concerning our New England plan of church evangelism which is carried on in practically all the churches in a given state simultaneously. Last year in Vermont and Connecticut, this year in Massachusetts and Rhode Island the plan has been a state-wide movement. In New Hampshire and Maine it has "caught on" only in some sections. But the local leaders in those two states have been so active along evangelistic lines that the ingatherings there are also unusually large this year.

The plan of church evangelism which The Home Mission Society's director of evangelism for this district inaugurated two and a half years ago, has met with the heartiest approval of all the state officials where it has been tried and the fullest cooperation of the leading pastors and laymen. It is so scriptural in its demands, so direct in its appeal to every Christian to become a soul-winner, and productive of such permanent results as to commend it to all. It is also free from any trace of the mercenary spirit which, with or without reason, so many complain has become identified with "professional evangelism."

Taking Massachusetts for an example, the movement was headed up in the office of Rev. William Reid, state board of promotion secretary. By visiting each of the associational gatherings, at their annual meeting in the autumn, we secured the appointment of a committee on evangelism and their unanimous approval of our plan. Two, a minister and a layman, from these were subsequently appointed by the state convention as the state committee on evangelism.

With this simple organization we approached every church, in each association, inquiring what their plans were along the line of evangelism and requesting their cooperation. The three specific things we asked from each church were:

- (1) That they would secure as many individuals and small groups as possible who would join our "Rom. 10:1 circle," instead of the word "Israel" in that verse, insert the names of those for whom they would pray and to whom they would go, if led by The Holy Spirit to do so, with an invitation to accept Christ as their personal Saviour.
- (2) If the church wished assistance in special meetings they were asked to state the time most convenient to themselves and the names of the men whom they would prefer to have assist their pastor in conducting the same. And if they would release their pastor for one or two periods of twelve days to assist another church if called upon to do so.
- (3) That a free-will offering, sufficient to cover the car fare and entertainment of those who came to assist in their meeting, be taken at the closing service.

Several of the committees were able to arrange for a series of meetings in every church in their association. A few succeeded in arranging a schedule for all but one or two. Some of the more rural churches are now calling for assistance, as the milder weather makes it possible to hold such services in those communities. But, for the most part, all the Baptist churches in this state will have had some special effort along the line of evangelism, with or without outside assistance, during this church year.

Already the results are abundantly encouraging. Decisions for Christ and his church are being reported in large numbers. Many who have not been inside of churches for years, who claim that they have been afraid of "the tricks of the evangelists" have been moved when told of neighbors' interest and prayers. And, coming into the simple service, have been impressed with the sincerity of the evangelistic appeal and gladly acknowledged their faith in Christ and desired fellowship in his church. These in turn, with their new-found joy in the gospel, often go out after their associates and introduce them to Christ.

The number of baptisms already reported far exceeds that of other years. We have heard of one or two smaller churches which have nearly doubled their membership. There is also a turning to devotional Bible study and prayer that is most encouraging. Without difficulty, now the subject of one's personal salvation is introduced and the claims of the gospel pressed home with convincing results. For by using the means of grace one grows in grace and it is only a short step to an intelligent grasp of the whole field of Christian stewardship. An encouraging growth of this kind of evangelism is evinced by the gratifying reports of the Vermont and Connecticut pastors and churches who are now in the second year of its operation.

The director, for the evangelistic department of the Home Mission Society in the New England district, has personally conducted a series of twelve days' meeting in one church in each association. While he has made no effort to tabulate results he is assured that several hundred have made decisions for Christ and his church in these meetings. He has seen many timid Christians become revived and possessed with a holy boldness that made personal evangelism a real pleasure.

Whenever the church has been negligent in prayer and witnessing it has experienced times of spiritual death. Whenever it has returned to prayer and witnessing it has enjoyed times of refreshing from on high. Many of God's chosen people in these communities, having been much in prayer, are beginning to realize the burden of the Lord. They believe that they hear the sound of the going in the tops of the mulberry trees. And, accepting the mercy drops as tokens of coming showers, are expecting an old-fashioned revival of religion in Holy Ghost power.

A Letter From Arizona

By EDWARD P. BRAND

The writer and his wife have been spending a few weeks in southern Arizona, visiting their daughter in Tucson. He has also visited Phoenix and some other places in this part of the state. This was formerly the southern portion of the Great American Desert. Now, with improved methods of irrigation, it has become a very prosperous country. Tucson and Phoenix are attractive little cities, the former with about 20,000 population and the latter with about 29,000. Phoenix is now in the territory being irrigated by the famous Roosevelt Dam.

Baptist church work has always been rather difficult in Arizona, but was never in better condition than now. Rev. H. Z. Morton, an Illinois and Shurtleff College boy, has been general superintendent for the past three years and is having good success. During a visit to Phoenix I met Dr. Bruce Kinney. He was attending an interchurch conference of Indian mission work in Arizona. I heard discussions upon this work for two days. Much attention is now being given to the Indians. It appeared to me from the talk of the missionaries and the Indians that in some places they are not getting justice from the government and some white neighbors in water rights, but it is hoped that these difficulties can be remedied in the near future.

The Presbyterians have a fine Indian school four miles from the city of Tucson. The writer was invited to preach to the students in that school Sunday morning, March 26. There were 156 Indian students present at the service.

I have heard good reports from the Baptist work among the Hopi Indians, but they are so far away that I will not visit them. The First Baptist Church of Tucson, of which Rev. S. R. Beals is pastor, has about 600 members and fine congregations. They have secured a fine lot and have plans adopted for a $100,000 meeting house. There is a good Mexican Baptist Church here, aided by the Home Mission Society. It expects to change location and build a new meeting house. The new Baptist church has 100 members. It supports a pastor and has a small but comfortable adobe meeting house, but there is talk of building a new house.

At Phoenix the First Baptist Church, of which Mr. Shanks is pastor, has a good meeting house and six or seven hundred members. The Second Church recently split and the pastor and a portion of the membership organized a new church which united with the New Mexico State Convention and will cooperate with the South. Nearly all Arizona is strong with the North and was the first state to go over the top in subscribing its full apportionment on the New World Movement. A Baptist chapel car is now in Phoenix doing good and aggressive work among the Mexicans. Dr. Zane Batten, of the Publication Society, and Dr. Wilcox, of the Home Mission Society, made a trip through this part of the state the middle of March and gave some strong addresses on the topic of men's brotherhoods and social service.

About forty Indians recently came out from the Presbyterian missions at two points near Phoenix and requested baptism and membership in Baptist churches. They were received by the churches. No proselyting work had been done among them by the white Baptists. They came of their own accord.

Porto Rican Churches

By HERBERT FORD

The annual association of the Porto Rican Baptist Churches was held March 9-12 in the handsome new edifice of the San Juan church. Leading addresses on two evenings were made by the chief justice of the supreme court of Porto Rico, Emilio del Toro, and by the commissioner of education, Juan B. Huyke, both outstanding Christian men. The day sessions, devoted to practical discourses and discussions and to business matters, were highly successful. One of the papers by Jose Ferrer, a country pastor, on "The Fruits of the Gospel in the Family and Social Life of the Country People," was of absorbing interest, and would be irrefutable proof against the arguments of any objector to missions. One new church, Toita, was admitted into the fellowship of the association. One of the principal resolutions was a petition to the Woman's Society for an extension of its work. Rev. E. M. Bernier, who was delegate to the Des Moines meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention, gave a most discriminating report, and also presented a paper of great timeliness on the subject of the autonomy of Baptist churches in mission fields. This is a subject on which there has been some lack of understanding, and it was thought by some that there might be dynamite in the discussion; but the paper brought out the issues so clearly as to meet with apparent universal acceptance. The Porto Rico Association in reality partakes more of the nature of a state convention, and is in fact so regarded and treated by the Northern Baptist Convention, although the formal steps necessary for the change have not as yet been taken. For local reasons it is not practicable to form associations in the various missionary districts of the island, so that the annual gathering, even if it shall formally become a state convention, will doubtless continue to function also as an association, just as now, though an association, it functions in all essential respects, as a state convention.

November 28, 1921.

Habakkuk 3:17, 18, 19.—For though the fig tree shall not flourish, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no food; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls; yet I will rejoice in Jehovah, I will joy in the God of my salvation. Jehovah, the Lord, is my strength; and he maketh my feet like hinds' feet, and will make me to walk upon my high places.

My dear brother and sisters born by the precious blood of Jesus and living in America:

I greet you by the love of our Lord Jesus Christ and wish to tell you something about the blessed experiences we have here in Russia. The above motto is the real expression of what is in my soul and in the heart of all the people in Russia. The outward circumstances are worse than you can imagine. There is no real life here but everything is as the fading leaf. The famine and all kinds of accompanying diseases are the calamity of the nation. Death gets a prey of tens of thousands daily in our country. A Baptist came here from the famine district and tells that up to 300 people are buried in one grave. People are flocking to Petrograd for bread but the inhabitants here are dying daily for lack of it. There was a great cry for help during the recent all-Russian Baptist convention which met in Moscow Oct. 30-Nov. 8, 1921. The delegates from the famine district with tears begged us to come to save the Baptist people there and not to lose time. Soon it will be too late. They suffer spiritually also because every particle of strength, time, thought and desire must be used in order to get something somewhere to fill their stomachs. Baptist churches are low spiritually there. They are "like dead." How the non-Christians live and behave—this is beyond description! They use all means to save their lives. There are not a few cases where people came at night to their neighbors, supposing bread was in the house, and killed all the family to get hold of food. Some wonder why it is that help does not come from other countries where there is plenty of everything.

Now a few words to you Baptist people. In spite of all the hard experiences in all Russia we have a great blessing here. The time that we are now in is a filling with God's power which the Lord pours on unbelievers. Fifty years ago we had in all Russia a few Baptists only, and now at our convention at Moscow we had delegates from 3,650 Baptist churches and besides that about 1,000 Baptist churches could not send their delegates because of the tremendous expense for traveling in Russia at the present time. The ticket from Petrograd to Moscow costs 300,000 rubles, and this distance is only 400 miles. The delegates from long distances would have to spend millions. This is why we had only ninety-eight delegates. One delegate represented fifty churches, three other men came as representatives of 200 churches, and from Siberia about 1,000 Baptist churches were represented by two pastors only. The convention was full of blessing and we hope the results will be important. A new by-law of the union was composed according to which we elect five brethren as the executive council of the union. In addition to them twenty brethren were elected as advisory council. The election was for three years. The budget for the period from Nov. 10, 1921, to March 1, 1922, was accepted and it makes an almost unbelievable amount—600,000,000 rubles. The means needed are tremendous because there are so many sections in the country unevangelized and it is strongly on our hearts to use the present circumstances to the utmost in bringing the distressed people the message of peace. We have a great plan for Petrograd and around the city. We secured seven brethren and seven sisters for this work, but there are no means to support them, therefore we beg the union to help us with at least 5,000,000.

The convention made it plain that there is a tremendous inquiry for the Holy Scriptures, both the Bibles and New Testaments and also Christian literature. We need several millions of Bibles and hymnals with notes in Russia. The executive council desired to have a Bible Institute and a special course for choir leaders.

As never before the people beg us to come to them with the Word of God. In some places the conversions are by masses. Again the great obstacle is the traveling expense. To expect any large contribution from our own people in Russia is useless because the people are so impoverished. So many of them are hardly able to sustain their own families. We gather large amounts, but it is in rubles, the rate of which is very low. In 1920 we got 9,000,000 for the union; in 1921 we spent 51,000,000, but 42,000,000 had to come from the sale of literature or the council had to take heroic measures sometimes in order not to discontinue the proclamation of the gospel. If we get, by the mercy of the Lord, in 1922 the means we need we are sure 500 Baptist churches will spring up during the year. The people themselves seek after God. In order to tell them about him we need not only money, but goods and clothing.

In spite of political and religious abnormalities the Lord is carrying his work on. The more we work the more requests we get for preachers, choir leaders, Sunday-school teachers, etc. Our headquarters at Moscow looks and works like a government office, but we are not able to cope with the need, and still we use the motto, "The Lord is my strength and in him I rejoice!" We strongly hope to see a new Russia with millions of regenerated men and women born from the Word of God and the Holy Spirit. Please, beloved, respond to our requests and the begging of those who are hungry for the Word of God and send us everything you can.

Yours in the love of Christ,
Petrograd. I. SHILOV.

News from Hungary

The interest of a certain class of people in the gospel is still alive in Hungary. In smaller as well as in larger communities the houses of prayer are always overfilled and there are places where some of the brethren cannot even get in. As general building activity is not yet stirring there is no possibility of hiring larger quarters. We are afraid that those visitors who cannot enter once or twice will totally stay away.

In several places there are arising new stations that ought to be visited, but we do not possess a sufficient number of workers. We must wait two years and a half until we can obtain about eighteen persons from our Theological Institute.

Our Theological Institute is placed in a small hired hotel. In order to transfer it into a more spacious home, Dr. Rushbrooke, European commissioner, and Dr. Gill, European secretary of the Southern Union, stayed at Budapest February 16-20. They have selected in a vivacious main street a low house where there can be constructed a modern building quite serving the purpose.

Our statistics are giving us a pretty good aspect. They show that at the beginning of 1921 there existed 356 meetings and stations with 7,194 members. On Jan. 1, 1922, there were 367 meetings and stations with 8,196 members. That means an increase of eleven meetings and stations and a surplus of 14 per cent of members. In the year 1921 there were baptized 1,014 persons, 14 per cent in proportion to the number of members. Also in the present year there have already been several baptisms and amongst them a Unitarian minister and an ancient city police head, both of them being immediately used in our mission.

The consequential calamities of war still are continuing in a high degree. The farmers are well to do, but the distress of the poor townspeople is terrible. We have an organized committee permanently in action, the members of which are visiting the abodes of misery. The scarcity of dwellings, and principally bad feeding are mightily providing for a continually growing extension of phthisis which is horribly ravaging. It often occurs that men abandon their families for not being able to support them. Our visitors, besides material relief, are bringing the Word to the sufferers and many become comforted. The other day there happened a moving scene in a chapel of ours. The day before we had placed in a brother's house a wholly abandoned little orphan girl of ten years, in rags. On Sunday already the family brought her fully dressed to chapel. Before the beginning of Sunday school the girl joyfully cried aloud: "Oh, that's little Clara!" And the next moment we saw her embrace and kiss another little girl who was her elder sister, placed by us as "nobody's child" in another family a year and a half ago. So the two orphans met and all who were witnesses shed tears, but tears of happiness.

The Widening Influence of Missions

By F. KURTZ

It is a very interesting thing for the older missionaries to meet their former pupils and Christian friends in most unexpected places on their travels. Recently when my wife and I went to the railway station to purchase our tickets, the agent we found was a Christian young man. The guard of the train proved to be another Christian. At the end of our journey, the man who took our tickets, a uniformed ticket collector, was one of our former schoolboys. Stopping for a few days in Secunderabad, another of our former schoolboys called to present us with a copy of the daily paper. He has a position on the paper as a typist. During the visit of the Prince of Wales, he was connected with the Prince's camp where he was put up with European reporters.

This is of course not exactly the usual experience, but could be duplicated by many missionaries and only shows how the Christian community is permeating every branch of work formerly wholly monopolized by high caste Hindus and Mohammedans.

Indian Christians are scattered over the world. They are studying in the universities of England, Europe and America. They are colonists where they have planted the Christian church in Burma, Penang, Fiji, Natal, Madagascar, British Guiana and Jamaica. Lately they have in large number been connected with the army and are located in Mesopotamia. Recently in the Moplah rebellion, a prominent part of the troops used to suppress it were the Chin-Kachin troops from Burma, a large part of whom are Christians.

This kind of influence, which is growing every year, is never shown in the statistical tables of mission reports.

In Recognition of the Services of Dr. John W. Lyell

The Board of Managers of the American Baptist Historical Society records its great loss in the death of its honored secretary, Rev. John William Lyell, D. D., who passed from us suddenly Jan. 31, 1922. The loss which the Board suffers may be seen in part by recalling the extended service given to it by Dr. Lyell.

He first became officially connected with the society when he was elected a member of the Board of Managers at the annual meeting in May, 1904, a relationship which continued till his decease. His interest in the work and his devotion to it were recognized when, on June 1, 1909, he was elected treasurer and entered upon a service which he maintained with fidelity until May 15, 1911, when the state of his health and more immediate duties required his resignation, which was accepted by the Board with deep regret.

In spite of this resignation his active interest in the work made it natural for him to be chosen secretary on March 17, 1913, as successor to the Rev. George H. Charles, whose death had closed a career marked by unusual devotion to the affairs of the society and its board of managers. From the time of that election until his sudden death, Dr. Lyell gave without interruption the faithful service which was characteristic of him in anything which he undertook. Even when his health was far from good and he sometimes felt that he must resign his secretaryship with us, he continued in response to the desires of his associates to perform the duties which came to him in the important position for which he had been selected. The recent advances in effectiveness in our work, particularly a larger recognition in the councils of the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention, were largely due to the thoughtful and active participation of Dr. Lyell.

We, therefore, as a Board of Managers, in a mere statement of the service which Dr. Lyell performed with us are perhaps recording in a suitable way the rare achievements of one who through nearly a score of years was distinguished in his devotion to Baptist history and its preservation as well as to the practical everyday affairs of a busy pastoral relationship. We cannot cease to be grateful that we have had his companionship, his cooperative efforts and his noble Christian spirit for our encouragement.

B. P. HOPE, CHAS. A. WALKER, FRANK G. LEWIS, Committee.

Annual Meeting of American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

The one hundred and eighth annual meeting of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society will be held in the Cadle Tabernacle in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana, on June 14, 1922, at 10:00 A.M., and succeeding days, to act upon any report that shall then be presented, to elect officers and members of the Board of Managers, and to transact any other business that may properly come before the meeting.

By order of the Board of Managers,
William B. Lippard, Recording Secretary.

Maine Laymen's Conference

One hundred of the leading Baptist laymen of Maine were invited to meet Mr. Henry Bond in conference at Waterville, March 28. The response was highly satisfactory as some eighty men representing fifty churches were present at the sessions of the conference and the banquet. With the clearness, force and spiritual power of all Mr. Bond's utterances, he set forth the meaning and purpose of the new laymen's organization as well as the situation in which the missionary societies now find themselves. A profound impression was made. Steps were taken for the complete organization of the laymen of the state. Several men new to the work were found who will undertake special service.

Mr. Harry S. Brown of Waterville who was the efficient leader of the New World Movement Campaign will serve as chairman of the Maine Laymen's Council. The other members are Ex-Governor Carl E. Milliken, of Augusta; H. Wallace Noyes, Portland; E. M. Hamlin, Milo; W. P. Breneman, Auburn; B. F. Giberson, Presque Isle and Herbert W. Rowe, of Bangor. The list of associational vice-chairmen is not yet completed. Many churches have already appointed their representatives and will proceed immediately to full organization. Along with the effort to secure the funds needed by April 30, the laymen will urge the matter of tithing and stewardship.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE CHURCH AT NATICK is profoundly bereaved by the sudden death of Pastor Frank H. Hartley. He was but two years there, but had taken such efficient and happy relations with church and town that his passing brought a wide-felt shock of sorrow. He fitted perfectly into somewhat difficult church conditions, and by industry, devotion and tact had won the confidence and co-operation of all, bringing the church into maximum strength and standing in the community.

REV. FRANK M. HOLT IS TEN YEARS DEEP in his pastorate at Reading. Every year he gets a pat of approval from his people that leaves his salary a notch higher. Pulpit committees peer around frequently, but have not yet dislodged him. Meanwhile everything goes on strongly. He is just finishing a succession of mid-week "church nights." They compass everything that a church should attend to, and have features, utilities, and inspirations that bring out 250 people.

A NUMBER OF CHURCHES are having a special fortnight of meetings under evangelists. Others are spicing the evening services with symphony players, and draw large audiences of music lovers, giving ministers inspiration for short, pungent sermons. Protestantism has to throw out all sorts of attractive bait in angling for its own people.

REV. W. A. KINZIE, MANAGER of our Publication Society branch in Boston, besides giving us an attractive bookstore, is a constant and acceptable pulpit supply among the churches, and a wise and willing friend of ministers and churches. He is much resorted to for counsel by committees and ministers in times of difficulty and uncertainty. Such a service, like virtue, is its own reward.

DURING THE SPRING VACATION of Newton Theological Institution, five student teams went out on evangelistic work. These teams, composed of two or three students, held services in churches of Massachusetts and New Hampshire. At a student meeting the following week reports were heard from the men who preached. The men told of the deep spiritual atmosphere which pervaded their meetings. Last year ten teams did work. The seminary is glad thus to be of immediate service in the great work of the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

THE MEN'S CLASS of Malden Church had an attendance of 256 Sunday, April 2, the lieutenant-governor, the state senator, three representatives and the mayor being present. The Blues are still ahead, but the Reds are not far behind. A 300 mark was set for the following Sunday's attendance. Dr. Rosselle is teacher of the class.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

EVANGELISTIC EFFORT is being emphasized by a good number of the churches at the present time. The three Baptist churches of Manchester are at a full tide of evangelistic endeavor. These three churches, in accord with their mutual planning, are working separately. Rev. Felix Powell, a Methodist evangelist from Portland, Maine, is conducting an energetic campaign at Tabernacle Church, Rev. H. R. Whitelock, pastor. At Merimack Street Church, Rev. Percy Back is in the midst of successful revival effort. At First Church, Manchester, Rev. C. P. MacGregor, pastor, is conducting his own campaign with marked success.

REV. J. K. MILLER, Convention missionary-pastor, has completed a successful series of meetings with the Rochester Church, Rev. E. W. Churchill, pastor. Mr. Miller now has engagements for evangelistic work with churches at Milton Mills, Milton and Rumney, which will require his attention until the middle of May.

FIRST CHURCH, NASHUA, Rev. A. J. Archibald, pastor, is conducting a campaign of house to house evangelism. This has met with encouraging success. Sixty-nine members have been added to the church, a number of these by baptism.

COLBY ACADEMY ALUMNI ASSOCIATION held its biennial reunion in Chipman Hall, Tremont Temple, Boston, March 27. Gov. Brown, of New Hampshire, and Lt. Gov. Fuller, of Massachusetts, were invited guests of honor. The attendance was larger than usual and the spirit manifested in the addresses most excellent. The outlook for this, our one Baptist Academy in New Hampshire, was seldom brighter than now. A special meeting of trustees was held in one of the assembly rooms of Tremont Temple the following morning to consider the retirement of Rev. C. L. Page as executive secretary of the academy. Mr. Page requests his release to take up important denominational work in Boston. As executive secretary for four years Mr. Page's work has been abundantly fruitful. He will remain on the Board of Trustees.

THE RECENT AND SUDDEN DEATH of Rev. F. S. Hartley, pastor at Natick, Mass., brought sorrow to many in New Hampshire. Before going to Natick Mr. Hartley was pastor at Rochester, N. H. and was well known throughout the state. At the time of his leaving New Hampshire he was a member of the Board of the Convention.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

ONE OF THE FEATURES of "Family Day," March 22, at Holmesburg Church, Rev. A. Z. Myers, pastor, was to honor persons who had worked faithfully in that Sunday school and others in the past. Special services were held each evening during Passion Week except Saturday, the pastor preaching and the choir singing.

REJOICING WAS MANIFEST among members of First Church, Allentown, when Pastor H. G. Dooley announced at the communion service, April 2, that the goal for 100 new members had been more than realized. The first Sunday in April, 1921, Pastor Dooley set the members of his church working toward a goal for 100 new members by April, 1922. This victory surpasses any spiritual movement in the sixty-two years of the church's history. Pastor Dooley attributes this unusual increase to faith in God and strenuous personal evangelism.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. M. NELSON, Turtle Creek, baptized two young people March 26.

TWO WEEKS OF EVANGELISTIC SERVICES, beginning Sunday evening, April 2, were held at Saltsburg by Rev. L. L. Bradley.

FIVE WERE BAPTIZED by Rev. A. C. Wright, West Newton, March 26.

REV. W. H. CUTLER has entered upon his pastorate with the Ambridge Church.

WORK AT WILKINSBURG is making steady advance. $3500 has been expended recently in enlarging the class rooms and improving the building. The League of Stewards now includes eighty-eight persons. The church accepted a group of twenty-five candidates for baptism Easter Sunday. During the sixteen months of the pastorate of Rev. F. L. Carr, 162 have been received into the membership of the church. $10,000 has been paid each year through the board of promotion for denominational work.

NEW YORK

FIRST CHURCH OF BATAVIA held its annual church day March 29. Supper was served to over 300, followed by a business meeting. Reports showed that a multitude of activities were being vigorously pushed, the work of the young people being particularly encouraging. Sunday-school attendance has almost doubled in the last two years and a half. Important improvements in church property were made during the year. Despite the hard times the budget was the largest in the church history. Returns from the canvass showed the largest giving in the church. The address of the evening was given by Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, president of Rochester Theological Seminary, on "What We Have versus What Belongs to Us."

DR. W. J. FORD, pastor of Albion First Church for nearly nine years, resigned from the work at Albion and began his work, April 1, in his new field at First Church, Burlington, Vt. The opportunity to do the larger work in the larger town was the inducement which led Dr. Ford to make the change.

NEW JERSEY

DR. L. C. BARNES of the Home Mission Society addressed the congregation of Emmanuel Church, Ridgewood, Dr. T. H. Sprague, pastor, the morning of March 26, and Miss Converse, of Yokohama, delivered a stereopticon address on the Mary L. Colby School for Girls, April 2. The men's club recently was guest to the men's church clubs of the community, having Major A. P. Simmons as speaker. A series of devotional home meetings were held, two each week previous to Easter with the deacons of the church serving as the leaders. Plans are being considered for the remodeling of the Bible-school room in the church house. A series of Thursday evening suppers, Bible studies and discussions have been held, the discussions being led by Dr. F. L. Anderson, Dr. S. Z. Batten, Rev. J. E. Edwards, Rev. C. E. Goodal, Rev. Otto Laegeler and Miss Helen Hudson.

ILLINOIS

EIGHTY MEMBERS DREW from First Church, Carlinville, last August to organize the Emmanuel Baptist church. The new church was organized for the sole purpose of having located in Carlinville a church affiliated with the Southern Baptist Convention. Wednesday evening, March 29, was one of the best evenings for spiritual enjoyment ever experienced by the membership of First Church. It was the regular evening for prayer service and also for the monthly business session, but the real pleasure of the evening was the reception of new members. Thirty-one, who had confessed Christ as a result of the recent Hendrick's revival, were present and were accepted as candidates for baptism and two were accepted into membership by letter, making an addition of thirty-three new members. The church is putting on the New World Movement canvas. Mr. and Mrs. A. Lincoln Hoblit made a pledge of $250 to help with church quota for this year.

OHIO

NEWCOMERTOWN: March 26, First Church had the largest attendance at Bible school in the history of the church. Three weeks' evangelistic services are in progress with Pastor H. C. Fletcher as his own evangelist.

ZANESVILLE: Evangelists Kramer and Mitchell have closed a great religious campaign at Market Street Church. For three weeks the building was packed night after night. The Y. M. C. A. has invited Mr. Kramer to hold ten days of meetings for men when their new $3,000 home is opened.

SCIOTOVILLE: Eighteen months ago Berean Church had forty-one members. There are now over 200. About 100 persons have been baptized during this time by the pastor, W. H. Overstreet.

THE NORWALK CHURCH recently had with it for a two-weeks' evangelistic campaign, Rev. David Bovington, pastor of First Church, Cleveland, who preached every evening, and Rev. E. A. Parkinson, pastor of Clyde Church, as song leader.

EUCLID AVENUE CHURCH, Cleveland, is holding special pre-Easter meetings April 2-16. Rev. B. B. Crimm, southern evangelist, preaches and Arthur McKee leads the music. The church is making plans to receive at least 150 new members Easter Sunday.

THE ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING of Centerville Church showed the best financial report for years. A fine Easter program was given and an offering taken for the Women's $2,000,000 Campaign. April 2 was a record breaker in attendance.

CEDAR AVENUE CHURCH, Cleveland, has called Rev. W. J. H. Brown of Toronto, Ont., Can., and he begins his work there April 23.

MEMORIAL CHURCH, COLUMBUS, Rev. C. R. Robbins, pastor, received forty-nine new members, mostly by baptism, during the past month. Also the main auditorium has been redecorated and furnished with new draperies; the lower sanctuary has been rewired and hung with handsome electric lamps; new roof has been put on the entire edifice, and at once a portico will be built on the front of the old building greatly adding to its attractiveness. This will be the gift of one woman in memory of her mother. All this material work has kept pace with the revival of religion and all the money for carrying on both has come.

TWO WEEKS' REVIVAL SERVICES were conducted at Big Darby Church during February, Rev. Geo. C. Sprouse, pastor. Four stewardship sermons were delivered at the Sunday morning services, beginning Feb. 26.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF FIRST CHURCH, Mt. Gilead, held its regular meeting March 26. An illustrated lecture on his trip through Bolivia, S. A., was given by Dr. Kirtley Mather, head professor of geology at Denison University.

LITTLE MUSKINGUM: The Woman's Mission Society planned a meeting for April 13 at which time a special Easter offering was given for the onward movement so dear to the hearts of Northern Baptists. The Association has secured the services of Rev. F. A. Mather as evangelist, his work to begin April 30.

ROSCO CHURCH is in the midst of a revival. Souls are being saved and revived. God is sending the message through Rev. M. L. Wottring.

FIRST CHURCH, SANDUSKY, Sunday school has reached the 275 mark, and the cry is now, "We need more room." At the last meeting of the Young People's Bible Study, which meets weekly Wednesday evening, fifty-five were present. Sunday evening audiences more than fill the auditorium, and many new members have been received into the church during the past month.

MICHIGAN

DURING THE NEARLY SEVEN YEARS that Rev. Frederick Allen has been pastor of First Church, Bay City, the work has been carried on with marked achievement. The church is fully organized in every department, the work of the Bible school and B. Y. P. U. being very efficient. The forceful evangelistic appeal of the gospel has resulted in a constantly well attended ministry. At the beginning of the present pastorate the current expense budget was $3,100; the benevolent budget about $500; for the year just closing the budgets were about $8,000 and $5,000 respectively. The increase in membership by baptism has kept pace proportionately. The church has shown its appreciation of the services of the pastor by generous additions to salary, amounting to $1,000. Mr. Allen has taken an active interest in the denominational affairs of the state, recently serving as the first vice-president of the convention.

A CITY-WIDE MOVEMENT under the Lansing Council of Religious Education resulted in a school of methods and principles conducted April 3-7. Elementary psychology, Bible study, church administration and methods for work with children, adolescents and adults were taken up. The tuition for the course was 50 cents. No text books were used, but note books were required.

SCOTTEN AVE. CHURCH, DETROIT, has closed one of its most successful years. Forty-two new members have been added and only thirteen lost, one of the latter by death. All bills are paid and a surplus is in the treasury. All departments are in a healthy condition. Pastor Steinkraus' leadership is responsible to a great degree for this present prosperity.

FIRST CHURCH OF MILLINGTON sent invitations to the churches of the Saginaw Valley Association to meet with them in council Tuesday, March 28, to consider the propriety of setting aside to the Gospel ministry their pastor, Brother Clair A. Perrigo. Five churches responded to this invitation. The council organized by electing Rev. J. C. Rooney moderator; Rev. W. B. Jarman clerk. The candidate gave a clear statement concerning his Christian experience and call to the ministry. After due examination the council recommended the ordination of Brother Perrigo and in the evening this service was held. The ordination sermon was preached by Dr. A. H. Harnly of Saginaw, former pastor of the candidate. The hand of fellowship was given by Rev. W. B. Jarman; charge to the candidate by Rev. J. C. Rooney; charge to the church by Rev. Fred B. Davis.

REV. CHARLES RUFUS OSBORN, pastor of the First Church, Coldwater, for the last three years presented his resignation at the morning service on March 19. His last sermon in Coldwater will be preached on May 28 and he will assume the pastorate of the Morgan Park Church, Chicago, on June 1. Relations between the Coldwater Church and Mr. Osborn have been particularly happy, and it was with the greatest sorrow that the resignation was accepted.

Ministers' Aid Society

The annual meeting of the Baptist Ministers' Aid Society for the election of officers and transaction of other necessary business, will be held at the Baptist Ministers' Home, Fenton, Wednesday May 3, 1922, beginning at 9:30 a.m. The meeting of the trustees will follow. Churches contributing to the work of the society are entitled to send delegates.

MINNESOTA

SEVERAL OF OUR RETIRED MINISTERS, veterans in the service, have died this past winter—Reverends V. B. Conklin, L. C. Morehouse, J. C. Hoblit and now A. B. Nordberg, 74 years old. This last brother was a faithful worker in South Dakota and Minnesota for many years, his last pastorate, over seven years, being at Clear Lake, Minn.

DR. G. E. BURLINGAME held evangelistic meetings recently at Owatonna and Austin with excellent results in both instances. His engagements are Woodland Park, St. Paul, Parkers Prairie and Montevideo, where he is to spend the month of May.

THE COMMITTEE in charge of the Baptist Young People's Association of America Convention which meets in St. Paul, June 28-July 2, is hard at work. The advance registration is large and the outlook gratifying for a large attendance. Twin Cities will do their utmost to make the convention successful in the highest sense.

AT BEMIDJI, PASTOR KEHOE recently baptized four and others are waiting this ordinance. At Bethel Church, Minneapolis, six converts have been baptized by Pastor Hall recently. At Artichoke the work is making good progress under the leadership of H. G. Jorgensen, a student pastor.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made for a student in connection with the Norwegian tent-work this coming summer. This work has been carried on several seasons with success.

TWO WEEKS' MEETINGS have been held at the Fourth Church, Minneapolis, in which Rev. E. A. Valliant of St. Paul assisted

OBITUARY

MRS. P. Q. FISHER

Mrs. P. Q. FISHER was born in Chandlersville, Ohio, Dec. 23, 1844 and died of apoplexy at her home in Nashport, Ohio, March 26, 1922. Shortly after her marriage to Dr. P. Q. Fisher she moved to Nashport where she resided for 56 years.

Mrs. Fisher's home life was most beautiful and she was widely known for her kindness and hospitality; in times of sickness her heart and hands were ever open in neighborly sympathy and the entire community sustains a heavy loss in her departure.

As a Christian she was a woman of high ideals and broad vision; in her church, in the W. C. T. U. and throughout the state of Ohio she was loved and honored for her zeal and interest in the Lord's work; after so many years of reform work when Ohio and the nation were free from the curse of the liquor traffic none rejoiced more than she and to such workers are we indebted for the stainless flag. The W. C. T. U. of Nashport held a special service Tuesday evening at her home and also attended the services Wednesday at 10 A. M. conducted by Rev. W. H. Wilson, pastor of the First Baptist church, Byesville, Ohio. Of the many tributes perhaps none reveal more clearly the secret of her noble life than that of Judge Lemert expressed at the open grave when he said, "I never knew a woman who lived nearer to Jesus Christ than she."

Mrs. Fisher is survived by husband and one daughter, Mrs. O. L. Lemert, wife of Judge Lemert of Zanesville, Ohio. Interment took place Wednesday afternoon at Zanesville, Ohio.

Good Friday in South India

THE following vivid description of Good Friday in South India, with its heathen festivals, its almost incredible heathen practices, and, nevertheless, the wonderful opportunities the day presents for winning men and women to Christ, comes from the pen of one of our new missionaries there:

"On Good Friday occurred the annual 'Car Festival' at Nellore. It seemed strange while the Christians were assembled in the church to commemorate our Lord's death, to see the town crowded with a seething mass of Hindus to celebrate the annual ride of one of their gods. Realizing that at this heathen festival there would be a fine opportunity to sell Christian literature, some of us went out in the hospital automobile and established ourselves at a cross roads.

"Soon the huge car appeared, drawn by over 100 perspiring and half-dressed Brahmins. Its shape was like a pyramidal, and it was decorated with fantastic figures, and held on the outside the god whose 'outing' it was. As I looked at the great heavy wheels, I shuddered. It was this very Juggernaut car under whose wheels mothers used to throw their children as a sacrifice to the god. Since the government put a stop to that, they throw cocoanuts at the wheels; if the cocoanut breaks, good luck is theirs.

"It was indeed an oriental scene,—this surging shouting mass of people, filling the roads and hanging from the house tops. The deformed and the crippled were there, begging alms. The ascetic was branding himself by the roadside to gain merit from his god. It was just such an oriental crowd as this, I thought, that on that first Good Friday so many years ago cried, 'Crucify him!' Many of those there today would cry the same, yet I was amazed at the response of the people when we untied our bundles of literature and displayed them. They swarmed about us, and for about an hour we sold little gospels as fast as we could sell them. In that time 104 books were sold, and we had to stop then because we had not one more that we could sell. God says, 'My word shall not return to me void,' and we are praying that these portions of his word will bear fruit."

Given—14,000 Hours of Work

Tura, Garo Hills,
Assam, India,
January 1, 1922.

DEAR MISS PRESCOTT:

Having learned of the financial condition of our Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and remembering what you have done for the Garo girls, we, the boarding department of the Mission Middle English Girls' School, Tura, wish to help you. For two years we have cut the grass, picked out weeds and swept the mission compound with our stiff grass brooms to keep it clean and neat. On the compound there are many jack fruit trees and for our work we receive the money from the fruit of these trees as it is sold. This money, rupees eighty-five, annas one (about $30), we are sending to you as our gift at this time. We are sending it by our teacher, Miss Holbrook, who is going to America soon. This amount represents 14,000 hours' work. It is not much, but it assures you of our sympathy and prayers at this trying time. We try to always remember, "My God shall supply every need of yours according to his riches in glory in Christ Jesus," Phil. 4:19.

(Signed) TURA SCHOOL GIRLS.

"Who Will Be Who"

By FREDERICK B. IGLER

(Note: THE BAPTIST has from time to time presented under the caption of "Who is Who" the outstanding leaders of our Northern Convention. The series was very much worth-while. A look into the future may be interesting to the older folks and worth-while to the hosts of Younger Baptists.)

IT was just about a year ago. Franklin Field of the University of Pennsylvania was the scene of the Harvard-Pennsylvania track meet. There was a goodly number of early track enthusiasts on hand. Harvard had been down South training for a time and had previously contested with State College. Pennsylvania was facing her first outdoor competition of the spring. Pennsylvania because of her record on the track was picked to win, but not in the two-mile race.

The two-mile event was announced and all eyes were centered at the scratch. Two men became the subject of conversation immediately, the Harvard man because he was captain of the team and the Pennsylvania man because he was unknown. Yes, a few knew that he was captain of the Cross Country Team, but then—Cross Country is a very minor sport.

They were off. Lap after lap they ran. The people in my section of the stands admitted the unknown Pennsylvania youth was running a good race, but they conceded a spurt to the Harvard captain in the seventh lap and the race and victory on the last lap of that dogged two-mile race. It did look as if the Harvard man might pass him on the seventh lap so slowly and steadily was he gaining. "Well, the Penn man has run a good race anyway," was the comment, but just as the crowd talked in such fashion, and the Harvard man was gaining a wee bit with each stride, the unknown Pennsylvania boy brought into play his reserve and while the crowd yelled itself hoarse he spurred down the stretch a splendid winner.

"Who is that Penn man?" was the question on the lips of many that day. Those who found out that he was captain of the Cross Country Team did not know what pleased me about the fellow. I pass it on to you who are interested in the future of our denomination. I realize, too, that he is only one of a great many who will make up that book to be written some day under the caption "Who is Who."

The student who bested the Harvard captain is a Baptist. They tell me that a few years back, when living with his mother in a western New York suburb, he frequently ran back and forth to high school in the city. As a student in the university he makes a good rank. He is loved by all those who know him and why?

Perhaps the reasons are found in the following facts. He carries full work at the university, works eight hours every night at the Federal Reserve Bank that he might keep himself in school and help with the support of his home, and in addition finds time to practice for track. In this sport he has become captain of Cross Country and a member of the track squad, running in the mile and two-mile events. A full day's work for a young man? Yes, and yet he finds time on Sunday to teach a boys' class in a Baptist Sunday school, and last year he found time to be president of the Young People's Society in the same Baptist church. Today he is mentioned as one of the first men which the university will send to London to compete in the Cambridge-Oxford games in April.

"Who Will Be Who?" Our Baptist democracy and the kingdom's needs will be safe in such hands.

Will There Be Another "Ship of Fellowship"?

MANY friends of the Foreign Mission Society and of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society have raised the question whether the two organizations are planning to send another "Ship of Fellowship" to Europe next fall. Apparently the interest aroused last fall and the success of this unique relief achievement is leading many to hope that a similar effort will be made in anticipation of the needs of next winter. In reply it can be stated that the two societies are now making a careful investigation through Commissioner J. H. Rushbrooke and other representatives in Europe as well as through the American Relief Administration, of which Herbert Hoover is chairman, as to the probable need for relief measures in various countries and especially in Russia next fall. Whatever information is available will be conveyed to the denomination. If the distressing conditions that prevailed during the current winter have not been relieved by the end of the summer the Foreign Mission Societies would doubtless propose that the denomination forward another shipment of relief supplies. Now that the warm days of spring have arrived, instead of discarding the winter garments, it is suggested that our constituency carefully lay aside all such warm wearing apparel so that such gifts can be promptly forwarded to New York in the event that another appeal is issued on behalf of the suffering people of Europe. Definite information as to whether or not such relief measures will be necessary should be available in time for announcement prior to the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention in Indianapolis.

ination to pay from Jan. 1 to April 1, 1922, in order to meet all our obligations.

You are already aware that gifts designated by the donors for any organization or for any particular part of the work of any organization participating in the New World Movement will be paid in full to the organization for which they are designated, in addition to the pro rata share of that organization of all undesignated funds. This leaves the door wide open for full cooperation in the support of such phases of the work as may make the strongest appeal to individuals or churches. All gifts designated for the general work of any organization will help the $15,000,000 needed by April 30.

With fraternal greetings, we are, sincerely yours,

The Spiritual Pilgrimage of Jesus

The Bruce Lectures, 1917

James Alexander Robertson, M. A.

Dr. James Moffatt, in his foreword to the book, says: "Mr. Robertson brings more than critical training to his difficult task. He has the fine gifts of moral insight and spiritual penetration. What he has produced seems to me to be a singularly attractive piece of work; the effect is to enable us to see the life of Jesus, not as the reflection of presuppositions which we bring to it, but as the inspiration of our personal experience in the same order of faith, and as the ultimate justification of our Christian attitude toward God and the world." $2.25

"It Is to Laugh"

PLEASANT POLLY (entertaining big sister's beau)—"Oh, Adolphus, guess what father said about you last night!"

ADOLPHUS—"I haven't an idea in the world."

PLEASANT POLLY—"Oh, shame! You listened."—Oral Hygiene.

Little Louise was lost on the street and was brought into the police station. The officers tried in every way to learn her name. Finally one of the officers said, "What name does your mother call your father?" "Why," said Louise, very innocently, "she don't call him any name; she likes him."—Harper's Magazine.

They were discussing the North American Indian in a rural school, when the teacher asked if any one could tell what the leaders of the tribes were called.

"Chiefs," answered one bright little girl.

"Correct. Now, can any of you tell me what the women were called?"

There was silence for some time, and then a small boy frantically waved his hand for recognition.

"Well, Frankie?" said the teacher.

"Mis-chiefs," he announced proudly.

The story is told again in the Tumulty history of the former President, of Mr. Wilson's father, a Presbyterian minister in Augusta, Ga.

One summer day he was driving through the city, behind his gray mare. A man sitting in front of a store looked up and saw the parson, who was wearing an old alpaca coat.

"Doctor," said the observer, "your horse looks better groomed than yourself."

"Yes," replied Dr. Wilson. "I take care of my horse. My congregation takes care of me."

Our Book Shelf

The Honor of the Church, by Charles R. Brown, Dean of Divinity School, Yale University. Boston: The Pilgrim Press. $1.

This little book of ninety-seven pages is a protest against the current tendency to make fun of the church, and also a popular, concrete presentation of the church and its place in the world. The message is timely and needed—good for the friends of the church, good to be put into the hands of young people that they may be able to meet the scorner. All that Dean Brown writes is fresh and stimulating. This book is no exception. The chapter heads are: Honoring the Church, Building the Church, Belonging to the Church, Recruiting the Church, Adapting the Church, Unifying the Church.

The Training of Children in the Christian Family, by Luther Allan Weigle, Professor of Christian Nurture in Yale. Boston: The Pilgrim Press. $1.50. Postage, 10 cents.

Great numbers of parents feel helpless when it comes to giving their children intelligent Christian nurture. This book will help them. Mr. Weigle thinks that children today need a new set of parents, that no institution can make up for the failure of the home. The treatment of the subject is simple and not technical and yet fairly adequate. All sides of the subject are considered, such as the building of strong bodies, the formation of right habits, the play, work, study and reading of the child, his friends, his devotional life and his relation to the church. Parents and other workers with children will get many valuable suggestions. The outline of this book is a course for the training of parents prepared for the International Sunday School Lesson Committee.

In the Breaking of Bread, by James I. Vance. New York: F. H. Revell Co. $1.25 net.

A volume of twenty-four short communion addresses intended to prove helpful in a devotional way to men and women as they prepare themselves for the partaking of the Lord's Supper. We suspect that in many of our churches there is but little preparation except such as may come through the service which precedes. If this volume were to kindle in some faith and love and hope as they make ready to commune with their Lord, it would serve a helpful devotional purpose.

The Book of Job, by Moses Battenweiser, Professor of Biblical Exegesis, Hebrew Union College. New York: The Macmillan Company. $4.

A new study of the book of Job, based upon the work of many years and tested by constant discussion in the class room and with other scholars. The first eighty-six pages are a critical discussion of various problems relating to the book, including its meaning, date, and relation to other Biblical books. There follows a new translation, with copious notes. At the close is a complete vocalized Hebrew text. One of the interesting features of the book is a re-ordering of Chapters 16-37 in an attempt to restore the speeches to the original form and to give a deeper and more satisfactory meaning to the poem. Scholars must pass on the results of this, but even to the lay reader they are interesting. The volume as a whole is helpful in giving fresh life to one of the most wonderful of the Old Testament books.

The Publication Society from the beginning has sought to meet the needs of its constituents and has always had a sensitive ear to suggestions from Sunday-school workers. Knowing that certain changes were demanded in the exercises used on Children's Day, the society last year sent to a large number of representative schools a questionnaire asking for an expression of opinion regarding the type of Children's Day program desired. The answers disclosed several interesting facts. The average church considers Children's Day as a family day with older folks as well as children participating in the program.

The society is presenting a program embodying the best of the many suggestions coming in from the workers, making room for the customary individual recitations by the little people, offering a number of parts with action and life for junior boys and girls and the time-honored "emblematic" piece for young people which the churches have long been accustomed to. Miss Meme Brockway, director of children's work in the department of religious education, has succeeded in building a program in keeping with the spirit and dignity of the general theme, "The Service of Love," and has maintained the high standard in the selection of music set forth in the program of last year.

The Publication Society will furnish churches with as many copies as they may wish for the observance of the day, on the same terms as heretofore. All orders and inquiries should be addressed to Headquarters, 1701-3 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

THE MUSICAL AIR

Not many years ago we were thrilled with the news that man had achieved the great feat of sending messages by Morse code through the pathless air, messages which were picked up in ever-growing circles and made intelligible to the rest of us who did not understand the mystic code of dots and dashes. Now has come another great step onward—the wireless radiophone, by means of which at the present time, from a dozen or more central stations throughout this country, are sent out, or "broadcasted" (to use the technical term) concert-programs, market reports, news notices, financial tables, sporting news, sermons and addresses. It is startling and thought-provoking to realize that in thousands of homes tonight the wireless sets will be "tuned up" as soon as the evening meal is out of the way and for the rest of the evening the whole family can "listen in" on a program of music, news items, bedtime stories, and what not—something to appeal to almost every taste or whimsy. In the popular magazines of the day and through the medium of the public press the general public is made well acquainted with the receiving procedure and results. Not much as yet has appeared, however, of the details of the sending end, the activities of the singer or player whose voice is sent out to be heard over a radius of 2000 miles or more. It was the pleasure of the editor of this page to officiate as accompanist for his wife, Margaret Lester, soprano, when she sang for the radiophone in Chicago one Saturday night.

The Mystic Mechanism

Morgan L. Eastman, musical director for the Commonwealth Edison activities in Chicago—one of the busiest and most competent musicians alive—oversees the musical menu provided from the K. Y. W. Station a-top the immense Edison building in Chicago. We have been personal friends for quite a few years. Soon after the regular series of evening concerts here was instituted, he telephoned us and made an appointment for a program to be given via wireless. Soon after seven o'clock on the fateful night, we stepped into the sending studio on the top floor of the skyscraper, and were met by the efficient master of ceremonies, Mr. Jaspert, who spent the ensuing few minutes in telling us a few things to do, and some not to do: to be sure to sing directly into the microphone, to enunciate very distinctly, to avoid so far as possible all sudden dynamic changes, to grade the playing of the bass part of the piano so that it would not rumble over everything else, and so on. This ordeal over, we were ushered into the sending room proper where at last we had an opportunity to examine the mystic mechanism. All we saw was a room of moderate size, the walls draped in heavy hangings so as to avoid any "echo effects," the floor covered with heavy carpets for the same reason. From the corner of the room ran a small insulated wire cable connecting with a little cylinder hanging from a light support. Over in a corner was a desk with what seemed to be a telephone-operator's head-gear and an innocent looking telephone. A few chairs and floor lamps added to a large-size grand piano completed the furniture in the room.

While we were gazing around a slip of a girl came in with a business-like air opened up her satchel, produced a book of juvenile stories and announced that she was ready to start the bedtime hour stories. Thereupon, Mr. Cook, the announcer, the fortunate possessor of a rich, resonant bass speaking-voice, and an uncanny clarity and distinctness of enunciation, performed an operation upon some keys lying under his hand, a little light glistened upon the tip of the suspended microphone—and the miracle was performed. The way was now ready for this quiet, girlish voice to be sent out over the infinite distances with no more effort, no more elaboration than would have been necessary in casual face-to-face conversation. After a preliminary announcement by Mr. Cook, telling the details of the evening's entertainment, the personnel engaged, and some future schedules of financial reports, the young lady read for twenty or more minutes, no doubt causing intense thrills to seize upon many tots hearing the fairy romances just before bedtime. A rest period of ten minutes came at the end of the stories, and with it the balance of our concert party—Marion Chase Schaeffer, reader, and Carl Craven, tenor. Mrs. Lester was scheduled to start the ball rolling, and promptly at eight o'clock, Mr. Cook's sonorous voice rolled out, slowly and carefully enunciating:

"This is Station K. Y. W., wave-length 360, The Westinghouse Station, Edison Building, Chicago, Illinois. The musical program of this evening will be opened with two songs, 'Homing,' by Del Riego, and 'Spring Is Awake,' by Gaines, sung by Margaret Lester, soprano, accompanied by William Lester at the piano."

An Audience of 200,000

Then, with a wave of the hand, he gave us the signal to begin. Just before we went in we had asked Mr. Cook if he had any definite idea as to the approximate number of listeners who could hear our efforts. We were very much surprised when he nonchalantly told us that careful investigation on the part of the company had set the figure at between 200,000 and 250,000 regular radio fans for each concert. When it is remembered that the largest audiences thus far known in modern times, grouped for opera, festival, or other musical occasions would not number one twentieth part of this tremendous aggregation, the awe-inspiring factor of these numbers can be easily grasped. What was still more nerve-tensing was the fact that here was no mass-stimulus, no thrill to be gained by the reactions of a crowd of music lovers, none of that verve and enthusiasm which comes to an artist when his auditors evidently approve of what is being done; none of these legitimate aids to success when singing under ordinary conditions; nothing but a dead silence except your own efforts, and a dead, immobile impersonal cylinder hanging before one's mouth, looking for all the world like a telephone receiver attached to a thermos bottle. The dead-black blankness of the thing was thrown into greater relief by the unwinking glare of the point of light at its tip, showing that the air-ways were now open to whatever sounds we cared to send out. Conquering a positive aversion to breaking the pall of silence, I start the prelude to the first song, four sustained chords, then the golden voice enters. Reports come via the telephone clipped to Mr. Cook's ears, he waves to me to play softer, to Mrs. Lester to step a little closer to the microphone. Then, as a look of contentment spreads over his face, and no other signal comes, we gain all of our lost courage and soon lose ourselves in the joy of the song. At its close, once more comes the shock of a dead silence; then the light goes out momentarily while the announcer warns the next-group artists (who have just entered to be in readiness) not to make any noise, for, as he laughingly remarks, "even deep breathing carries out over the wires that are not there!" Then the light glistens once more, and the song is announced.

Voice Magically Picked Up

At first the blankness and monotony of the outlook, the soulless efficiency of the little black cylinder before one's mouth, and the tense silence, all envelop the artist in a fog of self-consciousness. But this pall soon evaporates, and the tendency to overdo disappears when the realization comes that the audience is not some 2,000 miles away, but is as close as the mouthpiece of the receiving mechanism into which the voice-waves go, thence to be carried to the sending station on the roof, transformed to ether-waves, and sent on the long journey through the black night, to be magically picked up by a few strands of wire at a farmhouse in southern Illinois, a country home out of Kansas City, a prairie station in western Iowa, a thriving business town in mid-Kansas, or a snowy hillside in northern Minnesota, to say nothing of the dwellers in the cities for 2,000 miles around.

At the close of our first group, when the tenor prepared to sing his first numbers, we hasten silently to a telephone in an adjoining office, hurriedly call up some friends ten miles to the south of us, and ask them how the voice and everything come over the air to them; they have a fine installation in their home, and a bevy of mutual friends in to hear the concert. The report comes back that every word carries: "It sounds like you are in the same room with us!" As soon as we can get another connection we get in touch with another friendly gathering out on the north side of town, nine or ten miles in the other direction. The same comments are made, except that the piano accompaniment is not quite prominent enough. And then we call in rapid succession several other parties and get reports. By this time, the reader is delivering her set numbers, and we all gather around the telephone again while we hear her readings, caught by the aerial in Oak Park, a western suburb, amplified into the living room of a home there and re-transmitted via telephone back to us.

Every Sunday some minister preaches in this studio, with appropriate music before and after. If any of the readers of this page live within "broadcasting" distance of Chicago and have access to a receiving set, if you will tune to wave-length 360, and listen for station K. Y. W. at 8 o'clock of Saturday evening, April 15th, you will hear us perform once more as per schedule. One advantage you have this way, silence can be achieved at the turning of a screw, if you don't like it.

Cyrus Northrop's Creed

Dr. Northrop, president emeritus of the University of Minnesota and one of the best-known of American educators, died suddenly on April 3, in Minneapolis in his eighty-eighth year. His creed had one major item which is here given.

FOR MYSELF, I feel that I should know very little about God if Jesus Christ had not come into the world and revealed God to us, as he said he did, and as I believe he did. And I should have very little confidence in immortality from all the arguments from analogy or human longings, if I did not believe that Jesus rose from the dead, as he said he would rise, and as we are told he did. I feel as Paul did, "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." "But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept."

Believing this as I do, I recognize in Jesus not a mere man, however remarkable, but a messenger from God who had power to lay down his life and power to take it up again, a being fitted in all respects by character and power to be the light of the world and to reveal God to us as he really is. This, that and the other, may disappear or change or perish, but Jesus Christ remains the same yesterday, today and forever, Son of Man and Son of God, the Divine Savior of the World.

Fresh from the Field

The debating team of four men, accompanied by the forensic coach, Prof. E. R. Nichols, of the University of Redlands, has just returned from a debating trip which it made during the spring vacation. This trip took the men as far east as Minnesota and Iowa. They debated against teams from the following universities and colleges: Willamette University, Salem, Oregon; University of Montana, Missoula, Mont.; the Northern Normal and Industrial Institute, Aberdeen, S. D.; McAlester College, St. Paul, Minn. The last debate was an open forum debate, with no decision. In the other three debates the team won six decisions to their opponents' three from the nine judges.

A state rural church conference will be held, June 26—July 8, inclusive, at the College of Agriculture of the University of Wisconsin to discuss the social, economic and religious problems of rural life which concern the country church. Representatives of all rural and village churches of the state are invited. It is of interest to Baptists to know that the committee on rural work of the Wisconsin Baptist Convention initiated this movement.

Rev. D. C. Gilmore and Mrs. Gilmore sailed from New York on April 12 on the steamship Britannia, returning to Rangoon, Burma, to resume a service which has extended over more than thirty years. They will go by way of Beirut, stopping over to visit a son who is a missionary in Syria. They first sailed to Burma as our missionaries in 1890. For the greater part of the thirty-two years since then, Dr. Gilmore has been identified with Rangoon College. He has seen it develop since that time from a tiny high school, struggling for existence, into a college of about 140 students, giving bachelor degrees in arts and sciences, a constituent part of the new Rangoon University. Best of all, he has seen its graduates going out and doing their part in the great task of Christianizing Burma. "Judson College feels that its greatest achievement is not its high educational standard, but its training of Christian leaders," Dr. Gilmore said, just before he sailed. Dr. Gilmore was awarded the highly coveted honor of the Kaiser-i-Hind Gold Medal by the King of England on New Year's Day, and will receive the medal with appropriate ceremonies upon his arrival in Burma. This honor was conferred upon him for "distinguished public service in India."

Rev. Chas. E. Goodall, pastor of the First Church, Roselle, is serving temporarily as executive secretary of the New Jersey Baptist Convention, until a successor to Dr. Holloway shall be chosen. Mr. Goodall was a student at Bucknell and Crozer and did postgraduate work at Oxford, Eng. His first pastorate was with the First Church, Huntington, Pa., from which he went to his present church twelve years ago. Mr. Goodall is continuing his pastoral duties in connection with this other service.

Dr. Wm. A. Waldo, on April 2, resigned his pastorate of the First Church, Corvallis, Oregon, where he has been doing an important work in connection with the State College. His intention is to

Modern Money Methods for the Church

By FREDERICK A. AGAR

The object of the author is to suggest ways whereby the local church may be delivered from unwise financial methods, and to outline a plan adapted to provide adequate financial resources for both the local and the wider Christian enterprise. "Giving is not a matter of legislation, but of life"; "Living and giving in a spiritual sense are synonymous." These two quotations show the atmosphere of this eminently practical book. $1.00 net

By-Paths to Forgotten Folks

By COE HAYNE

Mr. Hayne has not taken cross-sections of fact, he has transplanted it alive. His stories of home mission work bring us into immediate contact with the living factors of human interest. It is as if we visited the homes of Indians, Alaskans, Nicaraguans, ranchmen, and foreign-speaking people, and made personal acquaintance with them and with the men and women who are the hand and the tongue of Christian concern for them. $1.25 net

How to Conduct a Church Vacation School

By ALBERT H. GAGE

This is a timely treatment of a most important subject by an eminently well-qualified author. It is the result of actual experience in promoting, conducting and supervising Church Vacation Schools. It is written for pastors, Sunday School workers and young people who are interested in the conduct of a week-day school during the vacation period. This manual may be closely followed to great advantage at every point. Illustrated. $1.50 net

Makers of the Bible

By HERMON H. SEVERN

A manual of information about the processes through which the Bible came to be and was handed down.

The author's theme, the history of the Bible from the lost books that preceded it, through the story of its making, its early readers and translators, down to modern reconstruction of the best text from the manuscripts, necessarily occupies most of his attention. Scholarly in knowledge, clear in statement, he is also deeply reverent in spirit. $1.25 net

The Withered Fig Tree

By EDWIN M. POTEAT

The author's purpose is to make clear the fundamental principles underlying the stewardship movement and to furnish a basis for the organization of local leagues or groups of Christian stewards. Authentic personal testimonies reinforce the argument. The book is arranged for the use of classes, questions that will stimulate discussion and afford themes for debate being attached to each chapter. $1.00 net

Constructive Evangelism

By INGRAM E. BILL

The writer's aim is to show the interrelations of evangelism with religious education and social service. His work combines a statement of the principles of the new evangelism with a practical manual of methods and a challenging appeal to service. A serviceable list of books on evangelism, religious education, story-telling, music, social service, and methods is appended. $1.00 net

Innocent (?) Flirtations

Most young men and young women flirt. We say most because there are so few bachelors and maiden ladies abroad. We favor innocent flirtation even though it lead to matrimony. THE BAPTIST has, however, witnessed some flirtations which were positively disgusting. We have seen sedate churches bound by sacred ties to a minister carry on flirtations with evangelists, stated supplies and visiting ministers. These flirtations sometimes result in unsettling the pastor and sometimes in unsettling the church and sometimes in settling the "soul mate." We fear such flirtations.

There's Always A Way

It would be illuminating if we could know of all the methods used by our people in their efforts to meet in full their church obligations before April 30. One man decides to stay away from Indianapolis and adds $50 to his payment. Another draws on a meagre savings account. Another puts in his vacation allowance. Even editors sometimes worry about finances. We made a remark that we did not know how we could possibly pay up our pledges and a few days afterward our house burned. The ready cash was made available. Another man died in time so that his insurance made it possible for his estate to discharge his obligation. There's a way if we are really anxious to do our duty. For most Baptists it will not be necessary either to burn out or die to meet in full current church obligations.

A Bad Habit

Ministers have so many good habits that even one bad habit makes a deep impression. Ministers are almost as hard upon one another as are the women. It is a notorious fact that a group of ministers will make short work of an offending brother. Not long ago a well-known clergyman said to the editor, "I have just been sitting in a session of the sewer committee. Did you know so and so?" Ministers are used to criticism. They know the sharpness of the gossip's tongue. Not one is exempt. It should be the high privilege of ministers to stand by one another. THE BAPTIST moves to abolish the "sewer committee."

A Retrospective View of the Future

For all mankind these are strenuous days. When we read at one sitting a score or more of the various denominational journals we begin to feel that most of the faults, foibles and failures of the human race are embodied in church folks. It is because we are tuned to this particular wave length. Some who made pledges to the N. W. M. will default. Some will excuse themselves on various pretexts but the majority will make just as strenuous an effort to pay as if the obligation were to their bank. In the past honor has been a characteristic of our church members as a whole. Our Baptist churches are institutions of honor and integrity. We have had but one report of a church attempting by formal vote to release its members from their obligations. Let us make note of this. Once upon a time one of our spiritual advisers in a fervid address admonished his hearers to "take a retrospective view of the future." THE BAPTIST believes that such a view will help us in this hour of crisis.

Some Achievements in Evangelism

IN 1920 there were 10,483 converts baptized on Baptist foreign mission fields. Preliminary reports indicate that this record was surpassed in 1921.

On the Kengtung field of Northern Burma and across the border in China 2,500 converts have been baptized since January 1, 1922.

At Sona Bata in the heart of Belgian Congo, Home Secretary P. H. J. Lerrigo on his recent visit witnessed a baptismal service at six o'clock in the morning when 380 converts were baptized.

The First Baptist Church of Suifu, West China, reports 88 additions to membership by baptism during the last year. The church now has a membership of 400 and recently conducted an enquirers' class of 135 regular attendants.

At Shanghai Baptist College 40 students were baptized last year. In the two upper classes 57 out of 62 students enrolled are Christians.

Nearly 90 per cent of the graduates of Shanghai Baptist College are Christians. About one-third of them are now serving as teachers in mission schools.

Eighteen years ago a young man was graduated from the Baptist Mission School at Tura, Assam, and went to a town called Rongjeng. Today there is a Christian church of 265 members in that town.

The native Christian body in Manipur at their last conference pledged 2,500 rupees for the support of four field evangelists who are now at work there.

During the 108 years of organized Baptist foreign mission work a total of 376,306 converts have been baptized.

Out on the Firing Line

OUT on the firing line where the Christian battle is hardest, men and women, sore beset and with tasks vastly too great for their powers, are wondering if the reserves are ever coming, are speculating on the chances of ammunition reaching them in time, are even considering the possibility that ground taken at such a cost of time and blood may have to be given up as the forces withdraw to shorter lines. On the firing line, the missionaries watch not only those who are over against them but those who have commissioned them for their present task.

The Foreign Mission Society has sent representatives to China to discuss with the men there possible retrenchment. Missionaries in another field have given a month's salary to help avoid such a disaster. Individual missionaries in many places, including at least one on the Congo, have surrendered voluntarily greatly-needed advances in salary. Men and women who have held on to almost impossible tasks in the constant hope that additional workers could be secured are face to face with increased instead of lessening burdens. Over our missionary force hangs the fear that there may be less money for evangelism, less for educational work, less for the forward movements which are necessary if a movement is to remain alive. New work is opening everywhere but without more workers nothing can be done. And a shortage of money kills all hope of more workers.

We must pay our debts. There may be other matters of concern to Northern Baptists just now, but none is so great as this. The new budget of all our missionary organizations will have to be made on the basis of the expectancy each has from the denomination. If we come to the end of the present year with immense debts hanging over each of our societies, no Board would think for one moment, as it makes provision for gradually wiping out past obligations, of spending one cent beyond what it has a reasonable right to expect from the churches during the year. We must pay our debts and face the new year with a clean slate. It has, indeed, come to our notice that the finance committee of the convention has instructed all the organizations connected with it that, in making their budgets for the new year, there must be a general reduction of 25 per cent. To meet the situation expenditures must be made three-fourths of what they have been for the current year.

Could anything make clearer the fact that we are faced not with a theory but with a situation? Curtailment is not something in the distant future; it is rather a fact of the immediate future unless there is such a rallying to the Baptist task as shall make it possible to reconsider such decisions. Retrenchment is always an ugly thing. Camouflage it as you will, it means that we deliberately lessen that share of the Lord's work in the world which we have previously decided had been committed to us.

We must pay our debts. The honor of the Baptist name demands this. There may be matters on which Northern Baptists do not as yet see eye to eye. But in our great cooperative tasks we all have an equal stake. We shall hardly face our missionaries or our Lord without shame if we have failed because we were tired or because there was leadership we did not like or because of some question related to a few men in Baptist schools. We have on hand a big job and there is no method of putting it to one side while we debate and decide other matters, no matter how important they may be.

Many of our churches have during the last few weeks been making such efforts as their history has seldom seen. There has been a host of people who have been giving until they have really felt it. For months to come they are going to get along without things the heart has greatly desired because they have preferred even to suffer discomfort than to fail the Lord in this hour of crisis. Were all churches and people giving on the same standard, there would be money and to spare for the whole program which under God we have undertaken. Why may not all at once take for themselves this standard?

We cannot get the work and the workers out of our mind. We say that the Great Commission is Christ's word to us; are we behaving as if it were? Imagine what a curtailment of 25 per cent will mean in our home mission work and our foreign mission work. Think of the effect of this on work abroad and then on our work among the foreign-born in this country. Imagine what it means to our state conventions and to our city mission societies and finally to our churches. Christ calls us to go forward. World conditions are presenting an unparalleled opportunity. Men and women from our churches, whom we have commissioned and sent out to the work in our stead, are appealing to us for help in entering into the fields white for harvest which lie before them. We cannot believe that our Baptist people will fail. We do not believe that they will. But this we know, that only the most heroic endeavor and the most sacrificial giving will prevent failure. The next ten days will tell the story.

Denominational Sidetracks

IT is becoming our custom as a denomination to be properly stirred up and aroused, prior to each national convention, over the big issues which are crying for settlement. It might be well at this time, before the heat of the day is on, to define what these big issues are. The smoke of little skirmishes may obscure the movement of the whole battle line. Hot boxes on the denominational express train may thrust us on a side track in order to cool us off. The real issues of the campaign may be discovered by defining what they are not, and then what they are.

The real issue is not whether the expenses of some traveling secretary are too high, even though a few may have an overweening sense of maintaining the dignity of the denomination by putting up at the high-priced hotels. This expense represents an infinitesimal part of the 4 per cent needed to secure each dollar of the movement. It is not: Are the missionaries orthodox? Their orthodoxy will compare very favorably with those of us who are at home. It is not: Shall we or shall we not have a creed? Personally I like a creed, but I do not like it crammed. Dr. Mornay Williams was right in saying that creeds are very imperfect and inadequate evidences of faith and an orthodoxy which relies on them is as errant as its evidences. The just judgment proceeds on fruits, not words. It is the standard which our Lord prescribed for us, and his standard in the day of judgment. It is not: Shall the University of Chicago control the denomination? Nor is the primal question the elimination of some orthodox leader. It would be a strange spectacle to allow a debate on this question to end in a debacle for the New World Movement. It would be like the Chinese burning down their houses in order to enjoy the taste of roast pig. Nor is the question one as to the wisdom or the unwisdom of our relationship to the Inter-church Movement.

To magnify any of the above minor needs in the face of a great crisis would be unwise. The horse that stops to kick ceases to pull, and it seems to some of us that there are those who would rather kick than pull. The real question is: Are we discrediting the denomination by repudiating our debt and so showing to the world that we have no corporate conscience? Are we conniving in the recall of our missionaries and the closing of our foreign stations by quibbling over creeds and expense accounts? Are we getting all heated up over the one fly in the ointment and refusing to apply its healing balm to the hurt of the world? Are we divided on doctrine instead of uniting in service? My own feeling in the matter, and this is based upon intimate knowledge of many of the men who are now in the foreign and home mission work and in the work of the Publication Society, is that they are men to be trusted, men who believe and therefore speak. The fact that twenty-four states had from 25 to 100 per cent increase in the number of their converts, shows this fact. Heresy could not make such conquests. The report of 2,665 baptisms in the fields of the Woman's American Baptist Home Missionary Society is itself proof positive as to its evangelistic fervor.

It can hardly be possible that a denomination which has had a sufficient impulse to thrust it into the front ranks of Protestantism should in the moment of success commit denominational hari-kari. It is unthinkable that the splendid equipment of a through train shall be allowed to rust out on the siding of controversy, because of a dispute between the engineer and the brakemen. The great train dispatcher has given orders, let us move forward on schedule time.

Irregularity of Employment Among Miners

IN thinking of the strike of the coal miners, here are some facts which, according to the Russell Sage Foundation, should be kept in mind.

The country can use approximately 500,000,000 tons of bituminous coal a year. Mines now in operation can produce from 700,000,000 to 900,000,000 tons a year. Many more mines are in operation than are needed.

The inevitable result is irregularity of employment for the 600,000 men in the industry, who work on an average about 214 days a year. If 304 days be regarded as a full working year, the lost days of employment in a period of thirty-two years have averaged ninety.

Seasonal demand for coal results in keeping more men and more capital in the industry to be equipped for the annual peak of demand than would be needed if work were more evenly distributed throughout the year.

Higher rates of pay are needed to offset uncertain employment. In 1918 the average annual earnings of miners in the Central Competitive Field varied from $1,364 in Ohio to a maximum of $1,583 in western Pennsylvania. Estimates of the cost of living prepared by Prof. W. F. Ogburn of Columbia, show that in January, 1920, $1,603 was required for a budget to provide a "minimum of subsistence" for a family of five, while an annual income of $2,244 was demanded to provide a "minimum of health and comfort" for families living in mining communities. Even in the prosperous year of 1918 the miners' earnings were not equal to this estimated minimum of subsistence.

Moreover there is in mining communities little opportunity for work for the daughters and wives of miners.

One of the imperative needs, thinks the Foundation, is a guaranteed minimum of employment.

The Christian as he discusses the price of coal will do well to remember that there are certain human values involved in this economic struggle which he must not ignore.

The Verdict of Three Juries

IN the first trial of Roscoe Arbuckle, film comedian, the majority of the jury was for acquittal; in the second trial a similar majority was for conviction; the third jury brought in a verdict of not guilty. What might not a fourth have done? It is the uncertainty of jury trials in particular classes of cases that led a well-known man to remark that if he were guilty he would like to be tried by a jury, but that if he were innocent he would rather stand before a judge or a board of judges. And yet one has to recognize the fact that it was to conserve human rights that jury trial was first instituted.

Editorial Comment

PEACE AND BREAD

A new book by Jane Addams, "Peace and Bread in Time of War," ends with the prophetic promise of a united world whose slogan will be "Peace and Bread," and whose greeting will be that of the Russian peasant, "To every man his measure of grain, and may every man in the world be a Christian!"

The accompaniment of war is sorrow and distress; the aftermath of war is famine and pestilence. The fighters suffer somewhat; the non-combatants, the women and the children, suffer the longest. By man's folly the world is wrecked; only by patient continuance in well-doing is it remade. Every man in the world has a right to his measure of grain; the Heavenly Father has provided that and more. But there is no assurance that he will get it unless the world's nominal Christianity is changed to the real thing, and unless the non-Christian world is really reached, not by ecclesiasticism, but by the message and spirit of Christ.

CHURCH PEOPLE MARRY

Perhaps the best advice which can be given to every young woman who has a natural desire for a happy marriage is, "Go to church, young woman."

In his book, "Effective Prayer," Russell H. Conwell says that the number of marriages in a church in a period like twenty-five years will astonish any pastor who investigates the matter. He says, "As a rule, all people possessed of Christian character marry." He also says, "Religious life and home life are twin sisters," and adds, "Out of the 7,200 who united with Grace Church and its missions in the thirty years mentioned, all but twenty-nine have been married." Of the more than 5,000 marriages occurring in these years, the records fail to show one divorce, and so far as can be ascertained, only two estrangements have occurred. There is always the possibility that all the facts are not known but a total of four unhappy people out of 10,000 makes something of a record.

A true Christian life on the part of individuals and a Christian atmosphere in the home are the greatest foes of divorce. Be sure, boys and girls, that your prospective partner for life is a Christian before you carry the matter farther.

SAY IT WITH MONEY

The Apostle Paul remarked that the contribution from Philippi brought a sweet fragrance to him in his imprisonment at Rome, that it was a "sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God."

We are sure that God wants Northern Baptists to preach his Gospel in all the world; we have great societies which have been formed for this exact purpose; to give to them at this time of emergency our wholehearted, sacrificial support, is certain to be well-pleasing to him.

There are many ways of expressing our devotion to our Lord. No one of them should be overlooked. But just at the present moment nothing speaks louder than a pledge made and paid. There is in your heart just now a great desire to praise the Lord and to thank him for all his loving kindness. Why not say it with money?

16,185 MINISTERS FAVORED TREATIES

Twenty Protestant denominations, in addition to Jewish and Catholic organizations, were represented by the 16,185 clergymen who signed the petition endorsing the Washington Conference treaties. The number of Methodist pastors favoring ratification was 4,199; of Baptist, 2,371; of Presbyterian, 1,431; of Lutheran, 1,003; of United Brethren, 1,113; of Universalist, 160; of Unitarian, 22. The petition bore the names of 572 Catholic priests and 107 Jewish rabbis. Only 117 opposed ratification, and of these forty-one took the ground that the treaties presented a political question in which it was the duty of the church not to meddle. Only five opposed disarmament. The voice of the clergy seems to have been united and influential on this matter. That experience should be suggestive.

EUROPEAN DISARMAMENT

If the European states can put through an agreement, similar in some respects to the new Pacific agreement, by which aggressive wars in Europe will be prevented for a period as long as ten years, there will be real hope of an ultimate solution of the vexed European problems of rehabilitation. Certainly there can be little expectation of better things as long as great armaments must be maintained. Lloyd George has accomplished striking world results during his long period of power. Anything that would lead to a general European disarmament would be a fitting climax. Christian people, at home and in their churches, may well make this a subject of earnest prayer.

PRINTED PREACHING

THE BAPTIST is greatly interested in the announcement that Charles A. McAlpine, who until recently was director of advertising for the hundred million dollar campaign and also director of publicity for the American Bible Society, is offering to our pastors and church workers a correspondence course in religious publicity. Our issue of Nov. 19, 1921 called attention to the need for such a course although we had no immediate expectation of seeing this brought about. What was good for the students in our seminaries seemed to us likely to be even better for the pastors on the field. Every pastor needs to learn good religious publicity. He has the best product in the world to sell to his community but he will never in the world sell it unless he learns how people can best be reached. We hail this departure as a thing of large moment for our churches which might profitably pay the expenses of such a course for their pastors.

Two Years in a Port City of the Orient

If Christianity is needed anywhere it is in these strange mixtures of East and West, of new and old. Here the impact of the Orient is most severe. The rest of the country is slowly but surely entering upon the path the port cities have marked out.

By DOUGLAS G. HARING

IT does not take two years for anyone who has previously lived in Japan to discover that Yokohama is very different from other Japanese cities. The deluded soul who comes on a personally conducted tour and sees Yokohama, Kobe, Nikko and Miyajima thinks he has seen Japan while the Japanese farmer who makes a trip to Yokohama thinks he has seen a foreign country. Perhaps Yokohama is like "giunabe": that famous dish which Europeans regard as Japanese and which the Japanese regard as foreign.

Anchors Discarded; Sails Spread

The trend of life in the port cities is always away from the old. Anchors are thrown away and the sails of life are spread to any gale that may blow. Too often compass and chart are thrown away too. Sometimes a lucky breeze makes for progress but generally every wind that blows is away from any spiritual growth. There are plenty of Westerners in business here who have purposely cast away their former connections: men who come to get away from prohibition, from domestic scandals, and now and then from the law. Their lives are standing denials of the gospel preached by the missionary. They are seeking the land

"Somewheres east of Suez
Where the best is like the worst,
Where there ain't no Ten Commandments and a man can raise a thirst."

There are other foreign business men of splendid Christian character, men who not only preach Christ by their lives but give what assistance they can to the missionaries. If Christianity is needed anywhere in the world, it is in these strange mixtures of East and West, of new and old, of earth and hell, known as the Port Cities of the Orient. It is here that the impact of the Occident is most severe. The rest of the country is slowly but surely entering upon the path the port cities have marked out.

It is evident that the problem facing the missionary in a port city is different from any other situation in mission work in Japan. The very language of the people is different. English words punctuate the conversation of the people and the "man on the street" is inclined to use murderous Japanese grammar. The dock workers and longshoremen can all swear fluently and picturesquely in English even though they can say nothing else in that language. This is doubtless the result of assiduous teaching by the crews of the boats which they help to unload, and by the American "bums" who abound. It is not uncommon for an American missionary to be approached on the street by some seedy individual of his own race with the following speech: "Now say, youse a good American. Won't you give a yen to help a poor fellow that's been left by his boat to get a meal? These — — ! ? XYZ — — ! ! Japs won't help a guy. Now don't let a fellow American starve under your nose" and so on ad nauseum. In reply to this one often finds the Japanese language exceedingly useful. An answer in Japanese usually brings a puzzled look to the face of the stranded bum, and frequently the conclusion is: "One o' them ! xxx ! Russians !"

Helping Undo Tragedies

Our night school in Yokohama, since its inception by the late Dr. J. L. Dearing, has provided a place where the young men and apprentices employed by the many import and export firms of Yokohama can learn English, which is so necessary to their business, and where they also find the Gospel of Jesus and the road to character and Life. The school is wretchedly housed, but its strong Christian atmosphere influences every boy who enters, even those who never profess Christ openly. Frequently some young man comes thoughtfully to the missionary's house to inquire more about the way of life. "My present position is intolerable—where can I find a place to work where I can be honest?" or "My employer has ordered me never to enter a Christian service on penalty of losing my place," or "I have to care for the family shrine every morning—how can I be a Christian?"—such are the practical questions one faces frequently. Just a few hours before this was written a young man, not a pupil of the school, burst forth to the missionary, "My marriage is a failure. Japanese marriage custom is wrong. A man ought to be free to choose his own wife. My life is most unhappy. What can I do?" The pretty surface of Japan hides many a tragedy, while gay kimonos and modern business suits are alike in covering spiritually breaking hearts. There is an increasing sense of moral poverty in Japan and an intelligent presentation of the vital things in Christianity meets a thoughtful response.

No Escaping Christ

It is a joy to watch the change in new boys after a few months in the night school—indeed after a few weeks. As one Christian boy put it during a discussion of ways of winning more boys—"After all, no boy can ever live the same life he used to live after being in this school, even if he never confesses Christ. He can't escape the words of Jesus."

In spite of the character of many of the foreigners living in Yokohama one finds a more friendly feeling toward foreigners than in many other parts of Japan. Although the purposes and the results of the Washington Conference have been misrepresented all too frequently in the Japanese press, one feels that the Japanese are glad that there is a prospect of a lightened military burden. The more progressive men are of course exuberantly joyful over the lessened prestige of militarism. Certain significant events of recent days tend to show that the Japanese people are no longer heart and soul behind militarism and that most of them welcome any chance to progress away from it toward democracy.

If Japan is to make progress toward democracy; if men and women are to mingle more freely in a social way; if it is to enter into that new life for which the people plainly long, it must find the moral and spiritual strength which comes only from God. It is indeed heart-breaking that mission work must pause and perhaps retrograde because of financial straits at home. Let us pray God to save the day!

The Pre-Convention Conference on Fundamentals

To the Members of Baptist Churches in the Territory of the Northern Baptist Convention:

BRETHREN:

For two successive years now conferences on the Fundamentals of the Christian faith have been held the day preceding the sessions of The Northern Baptist Convention. These conferences at Buffalo, in 1920, and Des Moines, in 1921; were largely attended and productive of great good. While out of them much discussion of denominational doctrines and the conduct of denominational affairs has arisen, that discussion wisely guided can only tend toward the unification of our Baptist people and affairs on a firm foundation of doctrinal integrity and ecclesiastical sanity. How can two walk together except they be agreed? The throes of our recent agitation can only result in a better understanding, a larger unity and a closer and more effective cooperation among Baptists.

The Executive Committee Instructed

The Pre-Convention Conference at Des Moines last year instructed the National Executive Committee on Fundamentals of the Baptist faith to arrange for and hold a third conference preceding the Northern Baptist Convention in 1922. While there have been a number of suggestions made publicly that this conference should not be held there has seemed to be no sound reason for disobeying the instructions of the body which instructed this executive committee. To make assurance doubly sure this committee submitted the question to 200 conservatives in the Northern Baptist Convention. With the exception of three or four these all approved and demanded that we fulfil the obligations imposed on us last year at Des Moines. Therefore, in obedience to those instructions and also in keeping with our own judgment of right, we are issuing our third announcement for a Pre-Convention Conference to be held preceding The Northern Baptist Convention. This conference will be held June 13 in the Cadle Tabernacle where the sessions of The Northern Baptist Convention are to be held in Indianapolis, Ind. We believe it to be essential to the completion of the task undertaken in the inauguration of these conferences that this third conference should be held and largely attended.

Ecclesiology

We have heretofore devoted our discussions largely to theology or to questions of doctrine; seeking to recover our people from the drift toward rationalistic philosophy which can only land us into the quagmire of modernism or practically agnosticism. This year it has seemed desirable for the most part to devote our discussion to ecclesiology or the constitution, organization, cooperation, service and teachings of the churches. The program as submitted is a very strong one. It cannot but attract a widespread attention and result in the greatest good to the churches.

Northern Baptist Convention Matters

We have serious problems before us in our great cooperative work of the churches in The Northern Baptist Convention. We need to provide a leadership in which full confidence can be found and maintained; to adopt a program the working out of which will meet the needs, approved by the majority of our people, and to relate the various divisions of our denominational activities to each other on a proper basis or in right proportion as to place, importance and purpose. We believe that the discussions of this year will also clarify the atmosphere and produce a far better situation than at present obtains in the churches.

A Constructive Program

In issuing this call we would remind the constituency of The Northern Baptist Convention that the Fundamentalists are utterly opposed to any divisive program. We stand for unity. We advocate and seek unity. We desire unity on a basis in which the Word of God is honored; the independence of the churches respected, the integrity of our schools as centers of Christian education is maintained and the faith of our fathers loyally supported while the task committed to them and to us is urgently carried forward. We have asserted what we again repeat that we believe that three-fourths of our Baptist constituency is thoroughly conservative. The conservative churches led by conservative pastors have been in the large majority among those who have supported the New World Movement. These men and churches support every Baptist cause. Where they have not been able to give unqualified consent to the whole program they have supported it as far as conscience permitted. But a liberal estimate of the churches supporting this movement would be 3500. We must find the reason why 6500 of the 10,000 churches of the Northern Baptist Convention are not cooperating in the present New World Movement, correct our errors, change our methods, modify our progress and wherever our leadership has lost the confidence of the constituency substitute a new leadership.

Fundamentalism not a Fad. Fundamentalists not a Faction

Fundamentalists are not married to the name. They are devoted to the cause of the re-statement, re-emphasis and re-affirmation of the faith of our fathers, in the task of our fathers. We stand ready now to abandon the term "Fundamentals" if that will aid in the unification of our people upon the basis of the historic Baptist faith, based upon the inerrant Word of God and devoted to the Baptist task as interpreted by the Baptist fathers.

Yours in the bonds of Christ.

J. C. MASSEE, Chairman.

FLOYD H. ADAMS, Secretary.

Indianapolis Convention Rates

The various passenger associations whose authority embraces the entire Northern Baptist Convention territory, have granted to those attending the Indianapolis Convention, for themselves and the immediate members of their families, the rates indicated below, under the following regulations.

From the Pacific Coast states, (the Trans-continental Association) a rate has been authorized, slightly in excess of one fare for the round trip, permitting stop-overs at all points, both going and returning, within the final limits, selling dates May 25 to August 31, return limit October 31, 1922.

From all other associations, round-trip tickets will be sold at one and one-half the regular one-way rate, by the ticket agent at each local station, when the rate is more than $1.00 upon the presentation and surrender, of an identification certificate, any time between June 5 to June 10 inclusive. These tickets must be validated at Indianapolis at the ticket office of the line over which the ticket reads into that city, which will be done upon presentation of the ticket thereto, any time from June 8-26. The same route must be taken on returning which was used in going to Indianapolis.

Passengers may leave to return at any date within the final limit, but care must be taken to allow time to reach the original starting place, not later than midnight of June 26.

Identification certificates may be procured from state or city superintendents, or secretaries, or by application to the undersigned.

A Seafarer's Sketchbook

By WILLIAM B. LIPPARD

No. 10. LEFT BY THE WAYSIDE IN POLAND.

TO travel beyond one's destination is always inconvenient. Occasionally the experience is both unpleasant and distressing. It was past midnight when I climbed aboard the International Express at the Polish frontier station of Zbaszyn. More than an hour's delay had been incurred by the many passengers because of the examination of their baggage by the customs officials. Even their persons were searched for concealed money and other valuable articles. Fortunately my documents from Mr. Herbert Hoover enabled me to go through this experience with only a perfunctory glance at my passport but the experiences of some of the other travelers were decidedly disagreeable. After giving explicit instructions to the train conductor to awaken me in ample time to leave the train at Lodz in the interior of Poland I retired to my berth and calmly went to sleep in the serene but misplaced confidence that railroading in Poland was like that in America.

Pardon, Sir, I Forgot

When I awoke my dismay was easily recognizable. With humble apology the conductor admitted that he had forgotten to call me. The train was now many miles beyond Lodz. About half an hour later the train came to a sudden stop and we were told something had broken on the engine. An eighth of a mile away was a little wayside station and it was politely but firmly suggested that I leave the train, walk to the little station with my heavy bags and there await a local train going back to Lodz at an hour or even a day which no one was able to indicate. With many misgivings I did so and arrived at the little station. Immediately I became the focus of an attention that had not been accorded me before in all my life. Evidently an American had never stopped at this little village of Stryknow. I realized with despairing consternation that I was alone, an unknown stranger in the heart of a strangely unknown land. Fierce, rough-looking men dressed in the garments of poverty looked at me with glances that might easily be interpreted as suggestive of violence. Women gazed at me and my heavy bags with endless astonishment. Being unfamiliar with the Polish language, I could not possibly understand the extended and gesticular conversation aroused by my presence in their midst. The children seemed to take particular delight in watching me drink a cup of tea and eat a piece of uneatable Polish bread. Two hours were spent in that little wayside station and among that crowd of Poles. Finally a train arrived headed in the direction toward Lodz. Never have I welcomed the arrival of a train with more hearty enthusiasm.

I managed to find a seat in a crowded compartment with five other men. One was a Polish general, another a police officer, two were evidently Polish business men while the fifth was an Englishman. Much of our conversation on that congested journey back to Lodz was conducted with more or less difficulty owing to the several languages. When the Englishman wished to inquire as to the military situation in Poland, he addressed his questions to me. I then interpreted them in German to one of the Polish business men who reinterpreted them into Polish and thus secured the information from the general. His replies then had to be interpreted back through the German language into the English. Here was obviously a case of internationalism in a local railway train. It was a long journey and most of the time seemed to be spent in stopping at every conceivable place that offered an excuse as a station. A huge fence, a big tree, a house somewhat larger than those surrounding it, an abandoned barn, all these seemed to me to furnish to the engineer appropriate places at which to stop his train. Finally we arrived at the station at Lodz at three in the afternoon instead of at seven in the morning as I had at first expected.

What a wonderful relief it was to learn that the immense cargo of bales of clothing and shoes and soap which the "Estonia" had discharged at Danzig for shipment into Poland had preceded my own arrival and were safely housed in the warehouses which Rev. K. W. Strzelec,

IN the address of James B. Colgate at the laying of the cornerstone of the library building at Colgate he said: "Being by faith one in Christ, there can exist full liberty and freedom of speech. This unity does away with any need of creed to bind individuals together and to hold them to the truth. Such a requirement would conflict with the freedom of individual souls. The spirit of Christ is the bond of union and the source of life."

our Relief Director in Poland, had arranged in the eighteen different towns and villages selected as centers of distribution. Most of the bales had already been unpacked, their contents carefully reassorted and redivided into bundles based on the absolute needs of the families who had made applications for relief. Every case of need had been carefully investigated and every bundle had a tag bearing the name of the family to whom it had been assigned. Thus the distribution was prompt, efficient and in accordance with the need. I was present at several places where the distribution was going on. Out in the yard in front of one of the warehouses a hundred people were standing in line awaiting their turn to receive the bundle of gifts of love from American Baptists. Most of them were mothers, dressed in garments of such wretchedness as to be indescribable. Some of them had brought their children, poor little waifs, whose thin legs and shrunken faces told vividly of the hardships which the war had spread across the plains of Poland. Here and there in the crowd were men who came for their bundles doubtless because their wives were ill or because they themselves were out of employment. Here was an assemblage of humanity who for six years or more, indeed since the beginning of the war, had lived through a woe and a misery that no pen can describe, that no mind can comprehend and that no imagination can conceive.

The next day I was taken in a car to a certain section of the city and the surrounding country where with my own eyes I saw a degree of poverty that was almost unbelievable. The ruined homes, buildings and churches reminded me vividly of the vast devastated region of France, for in Poland the armies had crossed and recrossed and the artillery had also laid waste a land that previously had been dotted here and there with small but picturesque Polish villages. I entered one home that had been built on the ruins laid waste by the artillery. It contained but a single room for living purposes and a mere shed where stood a dismantled weaving machine. The floor of the living room was of earth and the roof of straw, manure and mud. The walls were of rude boards and broken bricks and the only light came from a single window. In this room a man and his wife lived, ate, slept, cooked and washed. The furniture consisted of a bed of boards without spring or mattress, a crude table and two stools, and a small iron stove. There were two lids on the stove over one of which stood a pot in which the woman was cooking the noonday meal, a stew of aged potatoes and some roots which the man had dug out of the earth. The other lid held a pan of water being heated for washing a few pieces of clothing which doubtless had been worn as long as was humanly possible. With a heaviness of heart I realized that I was standing in the presence of poverty at the absolute lowest level of human destitution. The man had been out of work for a year and only a mere pittance of relief money kept him and his wife alive.

Suffering but Cheerful

On the top floor of another building I visited a home whose condition was more pitiful because of the children. In a small attic room I found two beds, a rude crib, a stove, three stools and a table. This single room was occupied by a man, his wife and three children, the youngest being less than a year old. The tiny stove gave insufficient heat, and fuel was scarce and expensive. The three children therefore spent most of their time in bed where a feather bed at least kept them warm although its condition was one of unwashed antiquity. The father had been out of work for months. Occasionally the mother found a day's employment in scrubbing or cleaning. These five people were being kept alive by relief money contributed by American Baptists. In all probability not one of these children had tasted milk for months and possibly years. With a cheerfulness that was inspiring they were bearing their burdens of misery, grateful to America for the assistance already given and for the gifts of clothing on the "Ship of Fellowship" of which they were to have a part. They were looking into the future with hope. Never have I seen a more wonderful illustration of the famous quotation that hope springs eternal in the human breast.

Thus the "Estonia" laden with gifts from American Baptists came to Poland like an angel of mercy born on the wings of the sea and brought some measure of relief to a people from whom the war had not yet exacted all its toll.

College and University Missions in Other Lands

A demonstration that our colleges are not hotbeds of luxury, selfishness, materialism and skepticism.

By KENNETH SCOTT LATOURETTE

THERE is much in the life of our American colleges to cause us grave concern, and many people have wondered whether Christian consecration and enthusiasm are not disappearing from our campuses. There is, however, another side to the picture, and one of its best parts is the growing practice of colleges and universities of assuming responsibility for some particular piece of foreign mission work. In addition to supplying more missionaries than ever before, our institutions of higher education are undertaking to provide the personnel or the funds or both for specific missionary projects.

A pioneer in this field was the Yale Foreign Missionary Society. This is an organization financed chiefly by Yale graduates and undergraduates and its staff is made up largely of Yale men. It has been in existence only about twenty years, and yet in that time it has built up one of the best of the Christian colleges in China and a medical school and a hospital that are second to none in Central China. The budget for 1921-1922 calls for the raising of over $60,000 from Yale men. Princeton has taken a large part in providing the staff of the Young Men's Christian Association in Peking and is as well supplying some Christian teachers for that city. "Bob" Gailey is a well known name in missionary circles in China, as it was in other days in football circles in this country, and with him as a center the New Jersey university is building up a group of men who are making a substantial contribution to the work of the church in the capital of the great Asiatic republic. Over twenty years ago a number of Oberlin graduates were killed in the Boxer outbreak. In the province in which they suffered martyrdom the students and alumni of their alma mater have for some years past been carrying on work, chiefly educational, in the name of the college, a living and beneficent witness to the courage and forgiving love of the Christian spirit. The Williams College Christian Association is in part supporting the Young Men's Christian Association in Soochow, Grinnell has projected a "Grinnell in China," and medical work has been carried on first in Canton and then in Shanghai by the graduates of the University of Pennsylvania. Among our Baptist institutions, Denison has assumed a close relation to the West China mission of our foreign mission society, undertaking so far as possible to supply the candidates that may be needed for our work there and assuming part—at present a small part—of the financial load. Brown is taking a special and tangible interest in the excellent work that is being done by one of her own sons, Prof. D. H. Kulp, of the staff of the Shanghai Baptist College.

These are only a few and the more prominent of the projects in non-Christian lands that are being definitely undertaken by students and alumni of our colleges and universities. Many a college Christian association is pledging alone or jointly with some other association or associations the support of a Young Men's or Young Women's Christian Association secretary, and others have taken the responsibility for the salary of one of their alumni who is a member of some mission. Often this interest wanes as the students who began it graduate, or as the man who is supported becomes either an unknown or a mythical figure to student generations who were not with him on the campus. The number is steadily increasing, however, of university missions that are beyond the pioneer stage and have an assured future.

The value of such undertakings can scarcely be exaggerated. They are to their respective campuses a definite and tangible evidence of missionary work and a center of interest in the project of giving the Christian Gospel to the world. They are an international bond which undergraduates can see and which tend distinctly to broaden the outlook of our campuses. They are good for the countries to which they go. They are making a substantial contribution to the missionary forces in numbers, money and ability, and they are an unescapable demonstration to the world, especially to the non-Christian world, that our institutions of higher learning are not exclusively or primarily hotbeds of luxury, selfishness, materialism and scepticism. It is to be hoped that the numbers of such university and college missions will be greatly increased, both among our Baptist schools and among those of other denominations.

Yale University.

A Christian Center at Waseda

IN Tokyo, Japan, there are nearly 40,000 university students. Since there is as yet no Christian university for men in Japan, hundreds of Christians from all over the Empire enter these great educational centers. Our missionaries feel that they must conserve the work done by the churches and must also influence and win to the Christian life students who are as yet without religious convictions of any kind. At the invitation of Waseda University the Baptist mission, under Dr. Benninghoff opened a hostel in 1908. This has grown into a permanent plant for social and religious work among the students. With the dedication on Jan. 29 of Scott Hall, given in memory of her husband by Mrs. John Edwin Scott, of Pasadena, Cal., a vastly enlarged work has been made possible. Scott Hall is conveniently located within easy reach of the principal buildings of Waseda University and of the Middle School which is associated with the university. These two institutions have some 15,000 students. The new building is more attractive than any of the buildings of the university itself, and is the only building connected with the university which is adapted to be a social center for student life. It is in every way admirably adapted to its purpose of reaching the student body with the Christian message. The dedication exercises were attended by the president and other officers of the university who in their addresses expressed their cordial approval of the work which Dr. Benninghoff is doing. In this enterprise the Baptists of America have a most extraordinary opportunity to exercise a Christian influence in the very heart of a great Oriental university.

Appeal and Answer in the New World Movement

Valiant giving at home answers the plea of those who hold the thin red line abroad. Shall April 30 show the supply equal to the need?

"So Shines a Good Deed"

$50 Memory Gift to Gauhati Hospital

ILLINOIS women are making their contributions to the Continuation Campaign in the form of memory gifts. One such memory gift of especial interest, since it goes to show how far a life of righteousness throws its beams, comes from Mrs. W. F. Sylla, one of the oldest and most honored members of the First Church at Elgin. Mrs. Sylla writes:

"Intimately connected with the formation of our Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society was the inspiration given by the return to her father's home in Elgin, of Mrs. Jane W. Barker, a pioneer missionary to Assam in 1850. Twelve years before she had left America a bride; she returned a widow. Her husband, a victim of tuberculosis, had died on shipboard, and was buried off the African Coast. She came a broken-hearted woman with her five little children, ever hoping the time might come when she could return to her loved work. But her devotion to the cause to which she had dedicated her life shone brightly to inspire others. To her beautiful memory, this offering to the hospital at Gauhati, Assam, one of her stations, is given in loving remembrance."

"We Can Hold The Thin Line But Little Longer"

NO greater plea for the claims of the New World Movement campaign at this moment of denominational crisis could be made than the one voiced in a letter received by Dr. John Y. Aitchison at headquarters this week. The writer of this letter is Rev. A. S. Carman, of the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary in Chicago. The letter reads:

"I am sending to you for the Foreign Mission Society a remarkable gift of $200 which our missionary at Tshumbiri on the Congo, Paul Metzger, has sent to me as chairman of the board of missions of the Second Church, Chicago. Here is an extract from Paul Metzger's letter, which accompanied the check:

"We are not flush, our only income is from the Society, and living costs more than before the war. But I would not like to be a party to seeing the work crippled.

"Is there no one in the seminary for the Congo? We are in terrible shape. There are only eight men out here under sixty years of age, and three over sixty, with four men's furloughs due this year, and no prospect of new men or old men to return. We can hold this thin line but little longer, I fear. Pray for poor Congo. The Prophet movement is tearing our hearts out."

"He wished the money credited to certain individuals of our church, who, he thought, had made up the extra $200 added to the missionary salary to meet high cost of living, or, if this was not practical, to have it sent to the Foreign Society as a direct contribution to the deficit on the $15,000,000 goal. The latter seems the only practicable thing, though we understand that all such gifts are credited to the church (in this case, our Second Church) to which the donor belongs.

"Our church has been deeply affected by this self-sacrificing gift, and our missionary gifts for the first eleven months of the year (something over $21,000) exceed those of the entire twelve months last year. We are making special effort in April for gifts toward the big goal.

"It is notable that he and our other missionaries do not think of the peril to their income, but only of the crippling of the work."

World Wide Guild Sets High Standard

IF grown-up members of the denomination throughout the Northern Baptist Convention will follow the pace set by the World Wide Guild associations in the final days of the campaign, the $15,000,000 is assured.

Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, secretary of the Long Island Association of the World Wide Guild, reports that this association is the banner association with eleven new chapters this year. As instances of their generosity in the New World Movement campaign she cites the following cases:

The World Wide Guild of the First Spanish Church was asked for $7 and sent in $32.

The Grace Church World Wide Guild was asked for $30 and sent in $140.

The World Wide Guild of the Baptist Temple was asked for $25 and sent in $110.

A Question We Must Answer by April 30

WHAT better reason can Northern Baptists find for doing their utmost in their $15,000,000 campaign than is contained in the message received by Dr. John Y. Aitchison from Rev. C. L. Flanders in Dolores, Colo., on April 11:

"One of the most touching experiences of my thirty-year ministry came yesterday when a young man walked forty miles to me, the nearest minister, to talk about his soul and ask baptism. The colporter in that section was dismissed for lack of funds. Will the Northern Baptists compel the other people in that section to go that distance for religious service, or shall the devil take the bunch?"

The Resignation of Dr. Heath

By J. Y. AITCHISON

AT the meeting of the Administrative Committee of the General Board of Promotion held in New York on April 4, Dr. Hugh A. Heath presented his resignation as secretary of the Department of Conventions and Conferences. The resignation was accepted with deep regret to take effect on May 1. On that date Dr. Heath will return to Massachusetts to take up again the secretaryship of the Massachusetts Baptist Convention, which position he held when he came to the Board of Promotion.

Dr. Heath was one of the first men elected to a position of responsibility when the General Board of Promotion was organized three years ago. He brought to his new task a rich experience as pastor and leader in missionary affairs. He had held three important pastorates, including the First Church of Wakefield, Mass., and for six years he had directed the missionary activities of the Baptists of that state.

It was not an easy position to which Dr. Heath was called by the Board of Promotion. More than any other man perhaps, it has fallen to his lot to make the new contacts, to win the confidence of the people and harmonize the interests of thirty-six states with a national program, a task which had never been attempted before. By his rare tact and wisdom he has won friends everywhere. By his friendly spirit and frank, open manner he has commended the new Baptist program to our people. His going is a great loss to the cooperative interests of our denomination.

As he returns to Massachusetts, Dr. Heath will carry with him the friendship and goodwill of all our state officers, as well as the affection and confidence of all his comrades at national headquarters.

Doing the Impossible

A timely message from Dr. Jowett, suggestive for Northern Baptists.

"The things which are impossible with men are possible with God." Luke 18:27.

We have not to travel far before we meet the impossible. We soon reach the end of the short road of "the possible," and then the impossible looms before us! We can compel a man to pay his income tax; it is impossible to compel him to be generous. . . . We can refurbish a man's mind; we cannot give him the mind of Christ. We may give him good manners; we cannot make him a good man.

And so we touch our "impossible" almost at a stride. The "impossibles" stare upon us on every side. How then? It is only in God and in the power of his holy grace that the impossible thing can be realized.

In the Lord Jesus miracles may happen every day; they are happening every day. But in our pathetic folly we go on trying to mend the broken earthenware, when the mighty God would recreate the vessel.

We rely upon the ministry of good fellowship when we can do nothing without the communion of the Holy Ghost. . . .

The world is always arrested when it sees impossibles being accomplished. In God the impossible becomes the possible!

"In God and the power of His grace." That is the secret. It fits the need of Northern Baptists at this hour. In that power alone there is yet time by a mighty lift in these last days of April to wrest a victory for God out of seemingly adverse circumstances.

Are you following the path of the possible with its inevitable defeat? Or will you accept the power of the impossible with its assured victory?

"WITH GOD ALL THINGS ARE POSSIBLE"

At a Methodist Conference

A Baptist bishop attends the New England Conference. It jolted him out of his provincial feeling. But, "one reflects with enthusiasm upon the liberty in our Baptist Churches."

By W. QUAY ROSSELLE

THE New England Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church has just held its annual meeting in the city where I work. I have had the privilege of "sitting in" at a number of the sessions. It has been a most interesting experience for me. How provincial we tend to become! Living almost exclusively within the horizon of our own denominational thought and emotion we so isolate ourselves that we become more or less oblivious to the other great bodies of Christian people. This conference has jolted me out of my provincial feelings with a good deal of shock. May I claim space enough to set down here a few of the impressions I have received?

1. The first one I have already indicated. We ought to seek to know more about the whole church of God. A few years ago I had a letter from the pastor of a large Lutheran church in Pittsburgh asking me for copies of some published sermons of mine, notice of which he said he had read in the Watchman-Examiner. When later I met that man and asked him how it came about that he was a reader of a Baptist paper he told me that he subscribed to a weekly paper of each of the principal denominations, and moreover that he read them all carefully. He also told me that he had been in attendance at our Northern Baptist Convention which had lately been held in the city of Cleveland. It was his habit to attend the conventions of other denominations so far as it was possible. He was a loyal Lutheran, but wished to know what the whole church was doing. I am sure that there is great wisdom in that pastor's habit. We should all likely greatly profit by following his example.

The Cause of Papal Insomnia

2. The second thing that impressed me was the evidence of the marvelous efficiency of this great organization. The church as a whole has an amazing grasp upon all of its resources. This particular conference is divided into four districts, each one in charge of a superintendent. The reports of these superintendents showed how closely every detail of the church's program is followed down into the various organizations of the local churches. Each pastor has to report and each is held responsible for getting the whole program accomplished in his church. His standing and progress in the church is determined by the degree in which he makes good. The reports of the district superintendents showed a statesmanlike administration of the work that is the despair of our more careless and loose way of doing things. The various general societies of the church were all presented with masterful skill and they revealed a volume of work that is simply bewildering. The immense number of schools, baby folds, orphanages, homes for the aged, hospitals and every other conceivable institution through which the church can render service mightily impressed me. One speaker spoke of their church polity as being incomparably the best in Protestantism and declared that it is the only one "that gives our friend on the Tiber insomnia." From the standpoint of efficient administration of an immense organized service ramifying through the whole earth he is doubtless right.

3. Another thing that I noted was the oratorical power of many of the speakers. There were four bishops present during the time of the conference sessions, and all of them spoke with a passion and a grasp of their facts that were simply amazing. Bishop Hughes, whose residence is in this city, was present throughout the conference though not presiding over it. He is an orator of unsurpassed power. Bishop Stuntz, of Omaha, gave a missionary address which I considered one of the most powerful I ever heard fall from the lips of man. It showed the great hold that Methodist activities are getting upon the whole earth. Bishop McConnell, the presiding bishop, is one of the scholars of the church and, like his colleagues, is an orator of great power. How wise this church has been in calling to places of leadership its ablest men, and how wise it is in following them with unflinching loyalty. Apparently every department of the work of the denomination is in charge of a man of masterful ability.

4. Very prominent among my impressions is the educational efficiency of this great church. Every Methodist minister who has come into the ranks within the last generation at least has had adequate training for the work. Unless a man has had the course in one of the standard seminaries of the church he must take the excellent four-year course of study required for full ordination. And it is a real course of study. And it must be studied, not merely read. It is a course too that brings the young men into contact with the best thought of the modern scholars of the church. Think of it! the course includes W. N. Clark's "Outlines of Christian Theology." The course provides for a thorough training in the social aspects of the Christian religion, including text books by both Ward and Rauschenbusch. A man who has gone through these four years of study and has successfully passed the examinations is well prepared to front the modern world with the gospel message. Men with the short-cut and superficial training given in the Bible training schools that have sprung up everywhere cannot get into the Methodist Episcopal church, and I for one say, Thank God. This educational efficiency as much as anything else is responsible for the great efficiency of this denomination, and as a result of it the church is today free from the troubles which the fundamentalist controversy is causing in other quarters.

Attitude Toward Modern Thought

5. Allied to the above impression is the one made upon me by the attitude of the church toward modern thought. A quarter of a century ago hot controversy was heard over Boston University School of Theology. Professor Bowne and Mitchell were being traduced and abused scandalously. At last Professor Mitchell withdrew and took a professorship in Tufts College where he has continued to serve with distinguished ability, honored and loved by all who know him. Bowne stood by his post till he was translated and now he is the pride of the denomination, the ablest intellect it has produced. Boston University, only fifty years old, has 10,000 students now, and the school of theology, which by the way requires college graduation, is the largest seminary in the country with that standard, and it has today more students than the theological seminaries of all New England of all other denominations together. The school has produced nearly a dozen of the ablest bishops of the church, all of them, I believe, trained under Bowne.

6. Finally there was the impression of an obtrusive officialdom that to one trained in our Baptist independence would seem unpalatable. There may be peril in the very thing which has brought about efficiency. So much is prescribed for the local church and the local pastor that there would seem to be little room left for initiative. Perhaps the work is too much standardized. At least one reflects with some satisfaction upon the liberty we have in our Baptist churches to do what seems wise in the local church. But the best justification of our freedom will be an efficiency surpassing that of other forms of polity. Have we demonstrated the superiority of our plan in that way?

An Opportunity for Service

By BRUCE KINNEY

I have recently attended a number of conferences upon our Indian work in various parts of the country. Again and yet again it has been born in upon me that there is a great field for service that is comparatively little known to our people. I refer to that of teaching in our government Indian schools and of the work of field matron in the government service.

A government official was recently asked why more careful selection was not made of definitely Christian men and women for these places. His reply was that recently there were so few applications to the civil service for these positions that there was no possibility of selection. If these applicants could pass the regular qualifications they must be taken. This is not to imply that these men and women are not devoted. Teachers in some of the schools can qualify who have no more than a high-school education and perhaps for some places with less than that. Matrons are not required to have even that much but should have had some training or experience in practical nursing.

Are there not some men and women who have the real missionary spirit but who could not qualify for foreign missionary service and whom our home mission society could not send into the field because of lack of funds who would undertake this real service for the Indians? If such wish to apply direct to the government they should write to the Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C., for particulars and requirements. If they think I could give them information address 2859 Cherry St., Denver, Colo.

The Ordination of Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson

By ORVILLE COATS

THE reports of the ordination of Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson on Monday evening, March 27, 1922 at the First Baptist Church of San Jose, Calif., seem to require some further statements in the interest of all concerned. It is quite true, as stated in a report of the meeting in the San Jose Mercury-Herald, that "the ministers and delegates of the Northern California churches were greatly impressed by Mrs. McPherson's straightforward manner and exceeding knowledge of the Bible." The implication, however, that the ordination, which took place at the evening service, meant the regular and official enforcement of all of Mrs. McPherson's teachings, and of her healing ministry by the Baptist denomination, requires definite and official correction.

As moderator of the council I am taking the liberty to make some statements which ought to be known by the public. According to Baptist practice it is the custom for a church to invite the pastors and two or more delegates from neighboring Baptist churches, usually of the local association of which the inviting church is a member, and also such other churches or individuals as the church may desire, "to sit in counsel with us, to consider the advisability of setting apart to the gospel ministry" some specified person. According to the church records, read at the opening session, it had been at first proposed to invite to the council only Baptist churches holding what is called the "full gospel" views, commonly known as "pentecostal." It was afterward decided to invite all the Baptist churches of the San Jose association and also certain other churches in Northern California holding these views. In all frankness it must be said that all indications suggested the purpose on the part of the First Baptist "full gospel" church of San Jose to pre-empt the issue, and to disregard, if need be, the findings of the council. All of which found ample corroboration during the meeting.

Mrs. McPherson was rushed into membership in the local church on a telegraphic communication; the decision to receive her into membership; to call a council; to ordain her to the Baptist ministry, was made by a hastily convened meeting of the church, all in a single day, March 20. The invitation to the council was dated March 21, and the council was called to meet after six days, on March 27. The haste appeared unseemly in view of the serious nature of the action contemplated.

It is true that Mrs. McPherson made a very happy impression, especially upon the unreserved portions of the auditorium and galleries which were filled with her adherents whose applause was restrained only after a second request from the chair. This is not saying that she did not make a similar impression upon the council. Mrs. McPherson's statement of Christian experience was clear and acceptable to all. Her description of her "call to the ministry" seemed almost as acceptable as the other. It was however brought out that Mrs. McPherson did not and does not feel called to the pastorate but to the work of an evangelist. It is to be distinctly understood that there is nothing in the heart of the writer, nor in the hearts of those opposing her ordination to the Baptist ministry, whether members of the council or denominational representatives, antagonistic to her purely evangelistic work. The statements of doctrinal belief which followed, while acceptable in many essential features, did not command the full approval of the council—the resolution to express satisfaction being 27 to 18. The principal points of non-acceptance were the "pentecostal" theories of the "baptism of the Holy Spirit" and "speaking with tongues." Mrs. McPherson expressed herself as definitely out of sympathy with the extravagances and fanaticism of the so-called "tarry meetings," differing upon this point from the pastor of the First Church and possibly others who make much of these gatherings. The subject of the "healing ministry" was discussed in the private session of the council, which for two hours gave careful consideration to all aspects of the case. Half a dozen prominent denominational representatives were present and were invited to sit with the council, participate in the proceedings and vote. These gentlemen, with one exception, a minor official, declined to vote on the ground that it would be contrary to Baptist usage to do so. In the private session, five of these denominational leaders earnestly advised against the ordination but refrained from voting. Upon the resolution to "recommend that the church proceed with the ordination" the vote was a tie, 21 to 21, a failure to recommend. It should be said that of the fourteen ministers of the San Jose association, ten voted against the ordination and four for it. As the function of a Baptist council is purely advisory, this completed its work and it adjourned.

The writer of this story is pastor of the First Church, New Monterey, Calif., and moderator of the San Jose Association and of the Council. Mrs. McPherson is quoted in the San Francisco Chronicle as saying, "Some of the Baptists are not just sure what I'm going to do and are a bit afraid to take the responsibility for me but they can't get around the fact that I am an ordained minister of the Baptist church, qualified to fill a pulpit of the church whether it be in San Jose or Bangkok, Siam." Dr. Hill, president of the Berkeley Divinity School, and Mr. Coats feel therefore that the truth in the matter should be spread as widely as the misapprehension will go.—The Editors.

In the evening the church proceeded to the ordination of Mrs. McPherson without the recommendation of the council. In doing this the church was clearly within its rights as an independent body, Baptists recognizing no authority outside of the local church. It is, however, almost without precedent in historic Baptist usage for a church to act contrary to or without the approval of a council. Under the circumstances it will be seen that the ordination of Mrs. McPherson was not the action of the Baptist denomination, nor did it have the approval of a majority of the Baptist churches invited to sit in council. According to Baptist usage therefore, Mrs. McPherson is a minister of the First Baptist Church of San Jose only. According to Baptist views and customs there is no possible way for anybody to receive the indorsement or ordination of the denomination. All that is possible is the indorsement of a local church and the moral weight which the approval and commendation of the men engaged in the ordination service carries with it.

The views of Mrs. McPherson upon the "baptism of the Holy Spirit" and "speaking with tongues" are not, historically, according to Baptist interpretations of the New Testament. Her healing ministry is, to say the least, under serious question. The features of the so-called "tarry meetings" exposes the movement which she represents, even though she now qualifies her approval of them, to the strongest objection. The examination showed that the candidate had the most meagre acquaintance with the historic faith of the Baptists. She has been a licensed exhorter of the Methodist church and gave no evidence of any doctrinal change of views to warrant her affiliation with the Baptist denomination. Mrs. McPherson says that her Los Angeles tabernacle represents an undenominational movement.

This communication has no other purpose than to remove any misapprehensions which may have arisen in the minds of the churches and of the public as to the denominational standing of Mrs. McPherson.

Dr. Foster at Colgate

By ALFRED E. ALTON

A SERIES of religious meetings of great interest and helpfulness was conducted recently at Colgate University by Dr. Allyn K. Foster, secretary of the Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention. In clear-cut, forceful statements this gifted preacher presented the gospel message to crowded congregations of students and faculty members. Of appealing interest to the students were the preachments following each other in logical order day by day throughout the week in which Dr. Foster with scholarly precision outlined the harmony of truth in religion and science, and the Bible has taken a new meaning to many as the word of God as a result of this religious campaign.

In addition to the gatherings held in the college chapel which attracted the attendance of practically the entire student body, Dr. Foster was a welcome visitor in the various fraternity houses, where he had opportunities to continue his teachings at close range with smaller groups of students. He was invited by professors to speak also in class rooms, and had particularly attentive hearings in the large classes in the departments of biblical literature, chemistry, geology and sociology in the college, and in several of the classes in the theological seminary. Many students sought personal interviews with Dr. Foster in the periods set apart for that purpose.

During his visit to Colgate he was entertained at a dinner given by the Baptist Education Society to men in the university who are students for the ministry. There were seventy men in attendance at this dinner. Dean Vichert presided, and after an address by Dr. Antonio Mangano, head of the Italian department of the seminary, Dr. Foster spoke on "The Lure of the Christian Ministry." College songs helped to make the meeting a happy one, and a spirit of good fellowship was prevalent in which all participated heartily. Although it was nearly eleven o'clock when this meeting closed, a committee was awaiting Dr. Foster to conduct him to a session of the Chemistry Club, held in the laboratory, and the young scientists, with their professors, listened eagerly, and applauded heartily, the sermon preached to them in their laboratory.

Another interesting feature of Dr. Foster's visit was the meeting of the Baptist Brotherhood in the village church. In this organization many of the students as well as citizens of the community have membership. Drawing interestingly from his experiences of two years of service in the war, Dr. Foster spoke to the men on prayer.

The final meeting of the week was held in the chapel the night before the university closed for the Easter recess. The purpose of this meeting was conference and prayer, and it was participated in by students and professors.

The university Y. M. C. A., under whose auspices the meetings were held, has arranged a program for conserving the helpful results of the campaign.

give himself to general work and especially to evangelism. He will begin his first campaign in The Great Assembly Hall of London, England, where he has been for fourteen seasons, during the month of July, and will remain in London for similar work during August and perhaps part of September. About Oct. 1 he will return to America for other campaigns here. Mail addressed to him at 7849 Normal Ave., Chicago, Ill., will always reach him.

There has come to us from the First Church, Asbury Park, N. J., Rev. David A. MacMurray, pastor, a beautiful souvenir of the services of dedication of the parsonage held Dec. 27, 1921. The parsonage was dedicated to the memory of Miss Lottie A. Grenelle, deceased daughter of Deacon and Mrs. L. Oscar Grenelle, who was a greatly loved worker in the church and a leader in the movement which gave the church the beautiful parsonage adjoining the church edifice.

Rev. Tillman R. Braddy, for some months pastor of the church at Glasgow, Mont., has been conducting special services recently in Nashua and Oswego. Because of the opportunities presented by such work in the state, he resigned his pastorate on April 2 and expects to devote his entire time to evangelistic work after May 1. Some fifteen persons were baptized in the Glasgow church on Easter Sunday.

Rev. E. P. Johnson, pastor of the churches at Lake Lillian and Sparta, Minn. for many years a pastor in North Dakota and in different places in South Dakota, died suddenly at the hospital on Saturday, April 8. The funeral services were held at the Norwegian Church in Minneapolis, the first church with which he united years ago. Mr. Johnson was an earnest worker and gave good service in various places where he was pastor.

Miss Helen M. Rawlings sailed from Seattle, Wash., on April 14, for Hangchow, China, where she is the head of the kindergarten and normal department in the Hangchow Union Girls' High and Normal School. The kindergarten idea was an innovation in China seven years ago when the department was established, but already it has been proved a great success. Not only the children themselves, but scores of Chinese homes have benefited by the training. A Mother's Club growing out of the kindergarten work has been organized, with a great gain in the health and conduct of the children as a result. Moreover, the youngsters are proving the best of small evangelists. They carry the story of the Christ of whom they have heard in the kindergarten into their homes, and through them in many cases their mothers have been led to God.

All eyes are turned toward Battle Creek, Mich., because Central District of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society is to hold its annual meeting there. Time: May 3, 4 and 5. Place: First Baptist Church. Fine program. Addresses by national officers, district officers and home and foreign missionaries; pageant by Battle Creek young women; also, a Central District banquet. Sessions begin at 2:30 p.m., Wednesday, May 3. Delegates send names at once for entertainment to Mrs. G. D. Cooley, 39 Walnut Ave., Battle Creek, Mich.

A telegram from Dr. John Marvin Dean, Pasadena Calif., reads: "First Baptist Church, Pasadena, has secured to date $24,000 as special Easter offering toward threatened Baptist deficit. Most of this amount in moderate and small pledges. Money still coming in. Pray for us."

Rev. W. S. Davis at Allur, South India, reports that although there has been great opposition from the non-cooperation movement in India during the past year, this has been the best year of his twenty-nine years of service. He has had the pleasure of seeing 113 persons converted.

The Open Forum

THE JOY AND FELLOWSHIP OF COOPERATION IN SERVICE

The Northern Baptist Convention is not a tribunal to dictate or even recommend a "creed," "confession of faith" or "statement of doctrine" for the Baptist churches. It is a voluntary federation of Baptist churches to conserve the resources of the denomination in cooperative world service, in the interests of the kingdom of our blessed Lord and Master, Jesus Christ, in a world suffering and crying for its need of such service.

I have been in "good standing" in Baptist church membership sixty-four years. For fifty-three years I have been trying to preach the everlasting Gospel of the Son of God. I have emphasized the fundamental truths of the faith. I have tried "earnestly to contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints": that is, I have held to the "fundamentals" and "faith" according to my own interpretation of the Word.

I cannot, and never could, agree with all the interpretations and applications of the so-called Fundamentalists. I cannot, and never could, agree with all the interpretations and applications of the so-called Liberals, but in the joy and fellowship of a common cooperative service in the name of our one Lord and Master, I have loved them all.

Some of the men whom I have loved most dearly in service during these fifty-three years could not accept my statement of doctrine; neither could I accept theirs, but we genuinely and sweetly loved each other, and were held together in the joy and fellowship of service.

Many of these fellow-laborers have gone home to their reward; and there is no doubt about the Master's approval of their service. A few, however, remain with me here a little longer, and we love each other still, more deeply and tenderly as the shadows lengthen, although I have not converted them to the acceptance of my doctrinal statements.

It has grieved my heart to receive from a committee, claiming to represent officially a group of Baptist brethren, an official communication asking to have the "confession of faith" enclosed therewith adopted by the local church. This communication with its urgent request has been sent, I presume, to all the pastors, ministers and church clerks within the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention. So far that may be all right; any group of ministers or any individuals may consistently do that.

But, strange Baptist procedure, this communication asks the churches to appoint delegates to the Northern Baptist Convention pledged to support the adoption of this "confession of faith" as the standard of faith for the denomination. It is this recommendation that grieves me. I hope and pray that every pastor will carefully consider and decline to take any such action. If it were a political convention it would look like "packing the convention." Brethren, I pray you in the interests of harmony and cooperation in service don't do it.

In the Watchman-Examiner of February 16 brother Edwin O. Colbeck gives good advice to the Anti-Fundamentalists in which he says, "Don't think you can run the Baptist denomination by 'party politics'." I emphasize don't try to "pack" the Northern Baptist Convention.

If it is necessary to have a uniform confession of faith or statement of doctrine for the churches, issued by the Northern Baptist Convention (I do not think it is necessary, but if it is) let it be done by orderly procedure. Let the convention appoint a representative committee to prepare a draft of such statement to be presented at a subsequent meeting of the convention for consideration, amendment, adoption or rejection.

But O ye Baptist Fathers! think of a group of brethren within the denomination, agreeing partially on a certain group of doctrines, formulating, simply among themselves a "confession of faith," finished beyond amendment, and putting it before the convention for adoption by delegates pledged in advance.

Brethren, in the experience of fifty-three years of service I pray you to halt. Come together in Indianapolis to consider together the calls for service in this poor, needy, bleeding world. Study, discuss in love, pray over measures and methods of service. Forget the differences in doctrinal statements. Do this one big thing. You will then experience the fullness of the Spirit. You will be thrilled with the joy of service. You will enlarge your souls toward each other in love and joy in this fellowship of cooperative service.

In THE BAPTIST of February 18 is a suggestion of one signing himself "J. A. Weddell of Marietta, Ohio." It is an inspiration. It opens another door for the joy and love in this fellowship of service. I do not know Brother Weddell. The nearest I come to it is the fact that I supplied the Baptist pulpit in Marietta one Sunday many years ago. He may be a Fundamentalist of the Fundamentalists or he may be a Liberal of the Liberals. That matters not to me in this service. I love him already because he has brought to me joy in this fellowship. He says, and sets the pace, let us give extra one week's salary. It is so simple and direct a service of real sacrifice that any person might have suggested it, but I did not think of it. But now, here goes my check for a full one week's salary to the Board of Promotion, with joy and love in this fellowship with Brother Weddell, and the many others who will follow.

As Brother Weddell says the dear wife says "Yes"; so in my case she put the subscription on the "five-year program" in the New World Movement higher than I thought we could afford. I, however, approved her standard, and I am sure that now from her place in glory she approves this "supplement" to her subscription.

I cannot afford to go to the Convention in Indianapolis, but I am already sharing in the joy of the victory coming to the denomination joined in love and fellowship in cooperative service. Come on, brethren, and sisters too, not only the pastors, but from the pews as well, we'll lift the debt. The service is blessed in its love and fellowship.

ANOTHER PLEA FOR CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP

In the Open Forum of March 11 is an article by Geo. C. Alborn with which I most heartily agree. He rightly says: "Tithing is not Christian stewardship. Jewish stewardship it was and is; * * * but Christian stewardship it is not and never has been." He rightly says that we should give according to our prosperity.

The Jews in the Old Testament times were an agricultural people, with admirable laws which prevented land monopoly (which is one of the greatest evils of today), and thereby secured to those people a pretty general equality in their property holdings. Bear in mind, too, that the tenth which they paid to the Lord included what in our day would be in the main our direct and indirect taxes. Today our incomes greatly differ in amounts, and if we insist upon a tenth being given to the Lord's work we may be doing a grave injustice to the poor. To illustrate: If one man has an annual income of $4,000 and another $1,000 and each pays a tenth the first has $3,600 to live upon, and the second $900. The ordinary necessities of life are the same in both cases. So that one is very much more burdened than the other. If a general rule for a tenth were made in our churches many hundreds of church members I fear would leave us. On this subject Prof. Rauschenbusch, of Rochester, in his book "Christianity and the Social Crisis" well says: "This commercial method of calculation has inflicted a grave wrong on the poorer portion of our churches. If any average wage-earner in the churches has actually given a tenth of his income he deserves profound respect. It is heroic giving for him. And if we have allowed the impression to prevail that the giving of a tenth by all was equal giving for all we have unwittingly inflicted a grievous injustice on the poorer church members."

Let us remember that we are not now under law but under grace.

God Bless Our Geography!

WHAT a curiously narrow motto it is on which we have brought ourselves up: God bless our home! For there is always, of course, a house next door. And probably the most selfish of us hopes that God may indeed bless that house, too, if only for the practical reason that fire and disease and even burglars have such contagious qualities. By the same token, if the house next door, then why not wish a blessing also on the house-next-door to the house next door? And on the house next beyond that? Then on and on to the end of the block—across curbing and gutters to the other side of the street? And eventually to the very end of town? (Which spread of Christian blessing is city missions, nothing more nor less.)

But shall a little meadow and a pasture or two stop our neighborliness from vaulting over several miles to the next town? Of course not! We would not be called provincial for the world, any of us; so God bless our home city widens itself into God bless our county. (And this is state convention work.)

Then because one cannot consistently stop in this mental tour of spiritual blessing-bearing, state boundaries fade away until the entire country becomes a unit in its need of us. (Home missions, you see.)

But dare we let little drops of water and little grains of sand form a mighty ocean to divide the world in half: half of it to be blessed, half to be neglected? Ah, no, we hold the ocean in our hand as a very little thing and fare forth into the whole wide world to stretch our motto everywhere. (And this is foreign missions.)

Just words? The Saviour did not think so when he started his New World Movement nearly 1900 years ago—the gospel record reports him very clearly on this point: "Ye shall be my witnesses first in Jerusalem (city missions) and in Judea (state missions) and in Samaria (home missions) and unto the uttermost parts of the earth" (foreign missions).

If there is any one motto which Baptists need to hang over their mantels today it is "God bless our geography." For the old motto has come true: God has already blessed our home—blessed it by the hallowing of his seventh day and the nurture of little children in the love and service of the Lord; blessed it with the conveniences and luxuries of a Christian civilization; blessed it with the safety of Christian law-abiding neighbors and the education of great books; blessed it with the thousand and one benefits of science and medicine and sanitation. In ways like these God has blessed our homes so abundantly that we are too used to it;

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

we take it for granted. So much for granted that it hardly occurs to us to pass it on! Yet it was shortly after the first Easter that the risen Lord dwelt longest on his New World Movement program: "Ye shall be my witnesses in your home town, in your state, in your own country, then—everywhere."

Again it is shortly after Easter: may God bless our geography! Let us take it down from the shelf and dust it off. Like Miss MacKenzie's poem on this page let the sight of the map transport us up all the rivers that are painted blue, across all the ranges that are painted gray. And, being Baptists, we have either a treat in store or a strange awakening. For how ghastly it would be if we discovered that like men in the days of Columbus we had medieval minds, that as far as we are concerned we lived on a flat earth with jumping-off places at the edge of the horizon line! And such a narrow horizon line! Yet there positively are people who cannot think territory beyond a given point: interested just so far on the map—then plop! nothingness! The horizon line of Jesus Christ on Easter day was all-inclusive: "Go—witness—all nations."

Any Baptist who has ever read the Survey can have positive thrills over any map: places that otherwise might seem mere colored patches begin throbbing with activities (or lack of them!). Down there in Central America, for instance, right in the fattest part of that neck-like isthmus (which a delightful child once called "America's Adam's apple"!) are three little states called Nicaragua, Honduras and San Salvador. And would you believe it? They are ours! Yours and mine. For all other denominations have allotted them to us as our share of that part of the world to evangelize and educate and doctor. No Presbyterian will overlap our efforts. No Methodist will be just around the corner. Not a church or a school or a hospital will go up until a Baptist builds them. Real little boys and real little girls are down there this very minute waiting eagerly for Baptist money to build long-promised schools. Real men and real women are dying this minute, unsaved, undoctored—still wondering ignorantly about life. God help us bless this portion of Baptist geography before April 30, 1922!

You dislike the tropics? Then come north to Kodiak, Alaska. Islands are never simply freckles on the face of the sea, they are peopled by persons; and there never were persons so personal as those little orphans on Wood Island whom Baptists will "mother and father" into coming Alaskans of influence. Provided, of course, that by April 30, 1922, our pocketbooks have blessed that orphanage corner of God's geography.

Alaska too cold? Then off across the ocean's painted blue to India, where a patch of territory in the center of that triangular peninsula is also ours—with 6,000,000 persons waiting in the dense superstition of heathendom for the very messages with which God has already blessed your home and mine. Oh, those 6,000,000 gentle brown people! As you look at your map, can you not picture them starting out on pilgrimages seeking God, if haply they may find him? Can you not visualize the oleander garlands they are vainly hanging round the necks of sacred temple cows? God help our bank accounts to bless this section of Baptist geography by April 30, 1922!

There is no space to animate the map in more detail, although in a thousand places where your eye may rest—north, south, each, or west—know that there is a little Baptist segment of God's army hard at work; and if from greed or negligence or from a medieval mind we do not span that distance by April 30, then one by one those workers may have to be withdrawn; and before the entire world a dwindling Baptist geography will be flaunted. The people who walk in darkness will walk on and on and on—but it will still be light with us in our God-blessed homes!

There is no time to cross-stitch quaint worsted mottoes before the end of April, 1922, but there is still time to write your name on a Continuation Campaign pledge-card that all Christendom and all heathendom may know the motto you live by: "God bless our geography—through me!"

The Venture

By JEAN KENYON MACKENZIE

*I NEVER see a map but I'm away
On all errands that I long to do,
Up all the rivers that are painted blue,
And all the ranges that are painted gray.*

*And into those pale spaces where they say:
"Unknown." Oh, what they never knew
I would be knowing—were it not for you
I would be off tomorrow with the day!*

*Then, since I am at anchor at your door,
Befriend the wistful stranger; make me free*

*Of all your little country and its store
Of unknown things and wonders—spread for me*

The secrets of your beauty and your mind.*

Prize-Winners for March Contest

IT has been the greatest fun in the world to sit in the window and watch the postman coming down the street, wondering whether he has contest stories in his hands! How surprised he would be if he knew that the long blue envelope was from Eliot Doane, of Detroit, with such a fine story about a dollar; or that the long white envelope came from Sarah Castle, of Alexandria, Ohio, with another splendid story about a dollar (and indeed more than one dollar, as you shall soon see!); then there was the long buff envelope from Ruth Mitchell, of Salt Lake City, with a lovely story; and another long yellowish envelope from Leslie Sage, of Philadelphia. It almost seemed as if I should have to ask the postman himself to choose the two which gave the best sequel to Bob Spencer's story, but finally it became clearer and clearer that these were actually the winners, and by the time you read their stories they will have received their book prizes.

The Watch That Made the Dollar Famous

(First boys' prize, Eliot Doane, Detroit, age 12.)

Bob Spencer looked at his four quarters that morning and said, "You won't have to be ashamed of yourselves any longer." So the quarters sang that song written on their foreheads "In God we trust," and Bob answered "So do I." Then he set out to prove it, and the quarters kept very quiet then to see what he would do with them. The first thing he did was to go to church where one of these four-minute speakers told about the Continuation Campaign. She said suppose Baptists do not give their dollars then this and that might happen. Bob felt sorry for his quarters then. But she went on to say that 27,000,000 children in the United States were not in any Sunday school and so weren't learning about the Bible. "That's awful," said Bob and decided that was a job for his quarters to help.

Then in the lady's second minute, she told about the foreigners in big cities who do not understand how to get on in America because they are ignorant, and Bob thought he would like his quarters to work there. But in the lady's last two minutes she said that over in China there is only one doctor for 400,000 people, and that means that half the Chinamen get sick and die because one doctor couldn't possibly reach so many people. "Just suppose there was only one doctor in Detroit," said Bob, and at lunch he asked his uncle, who was the best doctor in town, how many patients he had on his books. "Oh, 500 maybe, but of course they're not all sick at once," he said, but Bob's Aunt Mary said "I think you have at least 1,000 patients, so he answered, "Maybe I have. They seem like 5,000 sometimes."

Bob thought it over and saw that his uncle never could manage 400,000 people at once, even if only half of them were sick. So he decided he wanted his dollar to go to support a bed in a mission hospital for one week. A lot can happen in a week of seven days, and Bob hoped some heathen boy would lie in that bed who would learn for the first time that little message which his quarters kept whispering, "In God we trust." It was watching his dollar at work in that hospital which made it famous in Bob's eyes.

The Watch That Made the Dollar Famous

(First girls' prize, Sarah F. Castle, Alexandria, Ohio. Age 11.)

That day Bob Spencer told his mother about the talk his four quarters had had that night.

"I never thought much about this Continuation Campaign," observed Bob. "Tell me about it, please."

Mother told him all about it, the starving children, the children with no schools, the children with no hospitals and all his quarters could do for them.

Bob took his quarters out of his pocket and very thoughtfully looked at them. "Seems though one dollar isn't enough," he said. "I wish I had a whole lot."

Just then his father walked in. "What's all this I hear about the Continuation Campaign?" he asked. Bob explained. "I'll tell you what," said father. "You invest your money in some chickens. I'll let you use the big lot behind the house. You take care of them and when they weigh enough I'll sell them for you. See?" Bob nodded.

"What will you feed them?" his mother wanted to know.

"Well," said father, "you can give him the kitchen and table scraps and, son, if you will mow the lawn every week I'll give you money to buy chick feed. Do you agree?"

"Sure," said Bob. "When do I get the chickens?"

"I'll see about that tomorrow," replied father. Bob got his chickens. When they were old enough his father sold them for $5.50, and Bob was delighted.

"Well, son, what are you going to do with your money?" asked father one night a week after Bob had sold his chickens and he, his father and mother were sitting around the fireplace.

"I'm going to spend it for the Continuation Campaign," replied Bob.

"Yes! we know that, but what's it going for, missions or Bibles?" It was his mother who spoke this time.

"I'll show you what good your money will do," said father. "Bring me THE BAPTIST, son."

Bob brought THE BAPTIST and father read some of the things $1 could do to help this big world. "It suggests five things," observed father when he had finished reading.

"That's lucky," said mother, "one for each dollar to do."

"Yes," said Bob as he looked at his money, "now the first dollar goes to support every Baptist missionary, mission school, mission hospital, mission orphanage, mission boat, mission nurse and mission teacher for one whole second and a half. This dollar has a lot to do!" Bob stopped for breath.

"That's fine," replied mother.

"The next dollar," began Bob, "is going to buy twenty-five copies of John's Gospel to give to some heathen persons who never heard about Jesus. The third dollar will do its part by sending out a Bible woman for one week. The fourth dollar will keep a village school open for six busy days. The fifth dollar will support a bed in a mission hospital for one week, and the fifty cents will be for whatever those Continuation Campaigners think is best." So instead of watching one dollar, Bob watched five whole dollars and fifty cents go around the world doing good.

Suppose!

Suppose that some Young Reserve named Mary, Ruth, or Helen said: "Mother, instead of a new hair ribbon could I please give the money to the Continuation Campaign? It's got to be paid in by April 30, mother!" (I think their mothers would nod a delighted "Yes!" Don't you agree?)

Suppose that some Young Reserve named Tom, Dick, or Harry said: "Dad, instead of a new necktie, could I please give the money to the Continuation Campaign? It's got to be paid in by April 30, dad!" (I think their fathers would nod a delighted "Yes!" Don't you agree?)

Suppose YOU try it! Suppose you see this week how much you can earn yourself, so that all around the world the heathen people will learn to say what our silver quarters and dimes and dollars say: "In God we trust." The money must be paid in by April 30, so there's not a minute to lose. After you have paid it won't you write me a little account of how you earned it? And I will print every letter in our columns. One last suggestion: a lovely letter has just come from Miss Meynes of Washington telling how her Crusader Company earned $5 by giving the valentine party suggested in the Feb. 4 issue of THE BAPTIST. There's no reason why that party can't be gotten up in a big hurry in April!

A Real Baptist Riddle

MY first studies the Survey over and over, memorizing, fixing facts in her mind, etc.

My second is a shining metal from which all cans (except Americans, Mexicans, Africans, etc.) are made!

My third sounds like you, for it is always in the midst of fun and truth, but never in gloom or deceit.

My fourth is another way of saying "one of the."

My fifth is what the selfish Young Reserve may do if he or she sees a canvasser coming and pretends not to notice her!

My whole is something every Baptist woman is tremendously interested in just now.

BETTER SABBATH KEEPING.
CONSECRATION MEETING

Jer. 17:19-27.

It is not necessary to discuss the pros and cons of the Sabbath question. The passage as given above unquestionably refers to the Jewish Sabbath. The Christian Sunday is observed as the first day of the week and not the seventh. In I Cor. 16:2 we read: "Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store." From this we would conclude that the "first day" was established as a day of worship, and as such it has come down to us.

1. In the good old days. Well do I remember how I was frowned upon for whistling and playing marbles on Sunday. Sunday was usually looked upon as a day to look sad, go to church, eat big dinners, and the balance of the time to sit around and suffer from indigestion. Of course, mother did not sit around for she had to prepare dinner for anywhere from twenty-five to thirty people. Father seemed to have no compunctions of conscience as to how many he invited home with us. It never entered his mind that mother would be a tired and over-worked woman at the close of the Lord's Day.

2. In our day. What do we see? Well, a good many things that our fathers never dreamed of. Automobiles, the trolley, and all sorts of conveyances make it possible for people to spend their Sundays elsewhere than at church. The theatre, the dance hall and the amusement park entertain thousands on the Lord's Day, and a lot of them are church folks.

Many young people attend Sunday school and church worship in the morning, and in the evening attend dances of one sort or another. Many church men who attend regularly the morning worship, spend their afternoons on the golf course. Are these things wrong? If so, how shall we go about righting them?

3. Sunday as a day of rest. Continuous work, week in and week out, wears upon the human organism, as well as upon lower animals. Employers have found it economical for the employees to have regular periods of rest. From the point of view of health and happiness alone, the day should be observed.

4. Sunday as a day of worship. Certainly all of us feel the need of joining with others at least one day in seven for the worship of our God. We need the help and strength which come from such fellowship. Such fellowships are absolutely vital to the individual who would maintain a robust faith. Just how many times one should go to worship on Sunday is an open question. Many feel they have done enough when they have attended one service.

5. Not a "Continental Sunday." As in many other cases, many of our people have gone to excesses in the observance of Sunday. It is the only day that many have off from the grinding toil of the week and they feel that they have a right to do as they please, so the day is often used as an opportunity to engage in the gross amusements running for commercial purposes. The foreigner with his variety of beliefs and oftentimes no belief, uses the day for all sorts of affairs. What are we to do? The young people and our churches must answer the question? There is no dodging it.

6. A sane Sunday. A discussion of this point would reveal as many opinions as folks taking part in the discussion. What constitutes a proper observance of the Lord's Day? Going to church? If so, how many times? A quiet day at the home with the family? An auto ride out into the country for fresh air and sunshine, or a little picnic luncheon at the park? Shall we render some useful service?

Every day is as a Sabbath unto the Lord. The Christian must act like a Christian whether on Sunday or on the week day. A vital thing is that of loyalty to the lordship of Jesus Christ. When the principles of the Master are the dominating principles of the individual life of the Christian, he will have but little difficulty deciding the question as to what he should do on Sunday.

Here and There

The Assembly is the name of a sixteen-page bulletin published by the Baptist young people of Miami Association of Ohio. Mr. Wm. Schwemlein is managing editor.

The Association Rally will be held at Lincoln Park Church on April 25. The Lincoln Park Union will present the pageant "The Striking of America's Hour."

Reduced rates have been granted by all the passenger associations for the Baptist Young People's Union of America Convention, meeting in St. Paul, Minn., with the exception of the Canadian Association. Identification certificates must be used for the purchase of round-trip tickets at the reduced rate. Secure same from B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., or 408 Humboldt Bank Bldg., San Francisco, Calif.

The Trans-Continental Passenger Association announces summer excursion fares from western points to St. Paul. These fares are lower than those on the general convention basis as outlined above. For example: To St. Paul from San Francisco, $87.50; Los Angeles, $87.50; San Diego, $87.50; Portland, $72; Seattle, $72; Tacoma, $72; Vancouver, B. C., $72; Victoria, $72; Spokane $67.

Parties planning to attend the convention at St. Paul should consult local ticket agents several weeks ahead to be sure that tickets will be on hand.

The Michigan Baptist State Convention will be held at Jackson, May 12-16. The Young People's session will begin on Friday and extend through Sunday. The B. Y. P. U. banquet will take place on Saturday evening, May 13. General Secretary White will deliver three addresses before the Young People's sessions.

Detroit (Mich.) City B. Y. P. U. is planning a boat ride for June 16. This will be a sort of pre-convention "pep" affair for St. Paul. Proceeds of the affair will be used in sending delegates to the convention.

Attention of Chicago people is being called to Boy's Week which will be observed May 19-25. Chairman Mack is carrying on an extensive publicity campaign in behalf of "our" boys and should have "our" heartiest support.

An All Chicago Young People's Rally was held on Thursday evening, April 6, at Moody Tabernacle. Gypsy Smith Jr. was the speaker.

Chicago and down-state young people expect to send 500 delegates to the great St. Paul Convention.

The B. Y. P. U. Bulletin, published by Pittsburgh young people, is a very attractive sheet setting forth the many activities of the young life of Pittsburgh and vicinity. Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, will be the speaker for the spring rally to be held at Sandusky Street Church, April 21.

At the March meeting of the Toronto, Ont., young people, eighteen unions were represented. "How a B. Y. P. U. Could Best Help the Church and Pastor" was discussed by Mr. Merrill. He emphasized the fact that the B. Y. P. U. should be training young people for service in the church. "We should rejoice when we see our members stepping out to take offices in the church organization."

The young people of the First Baptist Church B. Y. P. U., Miami, Fla., edit two pages of the church bulletin under the heading "B. Y. P. U. Spizz." Quite undignified, I hear some one remark. Of course, it is really unfortunate that young people cannot always be as dignified as their elders.

Have you written to B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., for a very attractive four-page bulletin of the St. Paul Convention? Plan to spend a few days with the young folks at St. Paul. Already something like 5,000 have registered. The latest goal is 10,000.

The young people of Southern Illinois Association are planning a rally at Murphysboro, May 6-7. The rally will be a booster for the summer assembly to be held at Shurtleff College and the B. Y. P. U. of America Convention meeting in St. Paul.

The B. Y. P. U. News of First Baptist Church, Fort Wayne, Ind., carries some interesting items of what happened twenty-one years ago in the union. One item reads: "Report from light committee accepted." Another: "Moved and seconded that our society pledge themselves to pay $50 toward paving Jefferson Street."

The Fort Wayne Association of young people has pledged $2,500 toward the Franklin College Campaign Fund.

A Tri-City B. Y. P. U. (Moscow, Idaho; Pullman and Colfax, Wash.) has been formed to meet the needs of the young people in the cities named. Plans are on for boosting the work of the young people, also the summer assembly. Mr. Tracy H. Duerfeldt is one of the leaders of this new organization.

Minnesota young people, under the leadership of Mr. A. J. Hansen are planning a state-wide meeting of great interest, the same to be held on Wednesday, preceding the opening of the International Convention in St. Paul, Thursday, June 29.

The St. Louis Standard of Excellence as published in The Baptist Herald sets up a number of very worthy goals. The unions working to reach this standard will certainly not be among those just marking time.

Ontario and Quebec young people are pressing the claims of Bible study, tithing, and life service. The prospects are bright for a great convention in May at London.

Two thousand five hundred Baptist tithers in 1922 is the goal set by Nebraska young people. This number secured would mean a decided change in Nebraska's contributions to kingdom activities. People who tithe are usually found in the front ranks of givers in our churches.

Stewardship Program

A. The Church

I. Introduction of the Unified Budget System.

Whereby the church assumes the expenses of the church school and Young People's groups, placing these in the other regular expenses of the church, i. e. pastor's salary, heat, light.

The every member canvass policy carried through the entire constituency of the church school and Young People's groups, i. e. into homes of cradle-rol members, to members of society, guild, scouts, etc. All the constituency of church, school and Young People's groups supporting all of the financial interests of the church, both local expenses and beneficence.

II. Practical training in stewardship.

By making regular reports (quarterly if possible) to all of the constituency with full explanation to younger people especially, i. e., meaning of various items of expense, significance of various subjects of beneficence.

By calling young folk into the fellowship of responsibility, i. e., every-member-canvass solicitors, attendance of meetings of standing committee and boards.

Young people represented on all special committees of church.

By introducing denominational periodicals and standard religious books into the homes.

B. The Church School

I. Organized as part of the church; i. e., officers elected by the church. Definite report made to the church.

II. Participation in organized life of the church, as indicated in A I and II.

III. Maintenance of a comprehensive stewardship program, as regular feature of instructional work, including:

(a) Graded instruction.

(b) Leadership training, i. e. teacher training classes, classes on evangelism, stewardship of money, etc., correspondence courses, reading clubs.

(c) Denominational literature, i. e. lessons, periodicals.

(d) School offering made a worthy part of opening period of worship, i. e.

similar to taking of church offering.

(e) Baptist Tither's League in school, department organized class, etc.

(f) Assuming, as a school, definite responsibilities. 1. Features of church expenses i. e., purchase of new hymnals, blackboards. Assuming items, such as lighting, heating, a bill for repairs. 2. For beneficence: the "loose" or special offering each Sunday going to some accredited object. 3. Participation in service i. e., by furnishing canvassers.

(g) Missionary or beneficent objects same as those of church.

(h) With full explanation of those objects. By superintendent departmental leaders, teachers, missionary bulletin board.

(i) Five minute stewardship talks during period of worship, i. e., stewardship of time, reading, recreation, money.

(j) Use of annual of state convention and of Northern Baptist Convention in program or discussion.

(k) Vocational guidance. Talks by Christian professional men, craftsmen, business men, on Christian significance of their callings. Emphasis on secondary school, college, professional school.

Religious Education

The Church and the Sunday School

By SAMUEL G. NEIL

"The Coming School of the Church" is the prophetic title of a fine little book by Dr. W. E. Chalmers, the secretary of Religious Education. There is no doubt that the school is moving toward the church and the church toward the school. The closer they come in all practical aims and purposes the brighter will be the pathway of our children and youth and the more assured the perpetuity and prosperity of the church.

The Sunday school is by far the most important agency by means of which the church seeks to do its work among the young. Hence it is of the utmost importance that the proper relation of the school to the church should be understood and maintained. Unhappily, in many cases too little attention is given to this matter. So long as the Sunday school is fairly well-manned and managed, and gains a reasonable number of scholars, things are regarded as satisfactory. An ill-defined, easy-go-lucky state of affairs necessarily results. Few teachers realize that their work has been solemnly delegated to them by the church. Church members, as a rule, are oblivious of the fact that they are personally responsible for the well-being of the school. Scholars attend their classes Sunday after Sunday and are only aware of "the church" as a remote, aloof body of people, very stiff and dignified. It would never occur to any one of them that the earnest, prayerful, and loving hope and desire of every church member is that he should, by and by, become a member of the church too. In fact, some teachers fail to realize that the school exists not only to instruct children in "simple Bible teaching," nor even solely to lead them to the Saviour, but also to fit them for church membership, and to help them to desire church membership. Yet the Sunday school is the agency by which the church seeks to teach the children religion, to win them to Christ, and to make them church people. Any church that really grips this principle and realizes that the Sunday school exists for the church, will seek to embody this principle in the constitution of its Sunday school. For a principle is never really accepted until it is institutionalized. It is all very well for pastors and deacons and Sunday-school superintendents to hold correct views as to the true relation of church and school, and to state those views from time to time by word of mouth. But such statements are quite ineffective if they are contradicted by the practices of church and school. This is another case in which "actions speak louder than words."

The school is an agency of the church.

Some people might at first deny this. The school has its own organization, funds, committees, meetings and what not. It might conceivably exist apart from the church—in some places it appears to do so. Well, the measure of the aloofness of church and school is a measure of the failure of them both. The school is the creation of the church, it draws its support from the church, financial and personal, and receives its gospel and commission from Jesus Christ through the church. Christ founded the church; the church founded the school. Any sort of "independence," let alone rivalry, between them, is a denial of the real fact, and injurious to all concerned.

The constitution of the school, therefore, should express this true relation to the church. The appointment of a superintendent, officers, and teachers, should be made, or at least confirmed by the church. Definite church recognition services should be held in acknowledgment of this. It is a good thing to have a special church meeting at which new teachers should be solemnly dedicated by the church to their great work, and once a year a church fellowship meeting should be arranged at which the reports of the Sunday school should be laid before all the church members for prayer and discussion.

The interest of the school is the proper concern of the church. This seems too simple and elementary a thing to be enforced. And yet we fear that in many quarters it is only held theoretically. A few enthusiasts are allowed to carry on the school work without either encouragement or supervision on the part of the church itself. Of course, it is obvious that if these enthusiasts are thus left alone in the work they will by and by get the notion that inquiry on the part of the church is "interference." But if the church first of all feels and displays a real interest in the school, its approaches will soon be understood and heartily welcomed.

Pastors, deacons, trustees, and church members should take the utmost personal interest in the school and in all its plans and programs. It would even be a good thing for a joint-session of the board of deacons and trustees and the teachers' meeting occasionally to be held.

One of the chief objects of the school is to make the scholars understand and love the church, and desire to be worthy to become church members. To this end it should be the duty of every teacher to give suitable instruction, according to the age of his pupils, in the history, nature, and purpose of the church. It ought to be impossible for any teacher to feel that he has done his duty to his scholars unless he has taught them this. But many teachers are lamentably ignorant on this very point. All teachers should therefore be

ISAIAH'S IDEAL FOR A WORLD AT STRIFE
Isaiah 2:2-4; 11:1-9. Golden Text: Isaiah 2:5.

Setting

The epical, lyrical, dramatic writing of Isaiah has made its appeal to great minds through all the ages. It is the outpouring of a stirred and fearless soul with a vision. For the present day, as for his own time, Isaiah has given the solution of political and social questions. The selections for consideration are brief; they should serve as an incentive to further study.

Lesson

"In the latter days the mountain of Jehovah's house shall be established on the top of the mountains and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it." The "latter days" have a different significance to the prophet of every age as it is into the future the seer must always look. To those of the Old Testament the term was equivalent to "Messianic times." "The mountain of Jehovah's house" was Mount Moriah where the temple was built. In the ideal state its power shall be magnetic, drawing all nations unto it seeking to learn of God. Nations shall go to God as their arbiter and he will judge between them so that there shall no longer be occasion for war or need of warring implements. Then shall they "beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning-hooks." The turning part of the oriental plow could easily be made from a sword and the iron end of the spear serve for a pruning-hook. They are not to be thrown aside as waste; rather they shall be made to serve a purpose in the progressive conditions of a peaceful country. From Isaiah 2 the prophecy turns to Isaiah 11 to the coming of the Messiah and his rule. "Out of the stock of Jesse (father of David) there shall come forth a shoot, and a branch out of his roots shall bear fruit," upon whom the spirit of Jehovah shall rest, who shall be just and righteous in all his judgments. Righteousness and faithfulness shall girdle him. Under the rule of the Prince of Peace comes the world-famous picture: "The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, the leopard lie down with the kid, the calf and the fatling and the young lion together." All enemies shall be at peace and there shall be no fear even of the things which have always been feared—"for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of Jehovah."

Leading Thoughts

1. "Seek peace and pursue it."
2. The tide of peace cannot sweep over a nation until it has flooded the hearts of the individuals that comprise the nation.
3. Individual responsibility for national conditions cannot be evaded.

Our Own Folks

Wisconsin News and Notes

By ROBERT W. SHAW

Death of L. G. Catchpole

Rev. L. G. Catchpole, for forty-eight years one of Wisconsin's best known Baptist ministers, recently passed away in California where he had been spending the winter. He was converted at the age of sixteen, was educated at Northwestern College; and at Shurtleff took his theological work. He served as pastor at LaSalle and Richmond, Ill. In 1873 he removed to Wisconsin and, with the exception of a couple of years spent in Minnesota, all of the rest of his ministerial work has been in this state. He served as pastor at Waterloo, Marshall, York, New London, Weyauwega, Black River Falls, and Melrose. He organized the church at Warrens and was its pastor for some time.

He served Wayland Academy as financial secretary twice. He was responsible for raising $50,000 for the institution and securing the Warrens Cottage from Mr. Barber. In 1902 he began work with the Children's Home Association in this state and continued with it until his death. The funeral services were held in Janesville, April 4. The pastor, Rev. R. G. Pierson, Dr. A. LeGrand, Dr. D. W. Hurlburt and others participated in the services; interment at Black River Falls.

Lenten Services

For the first time in the history of the city of Milwaukee, the Catholic, Lutheran and Protestant forces cooperated in a Good Friday service. Many of the theaters closed until after three o'clock and the stores planned to close from noon until three. Many factories closed at noon to give the people a chance to attend the church services. Of course some Baptists object to such a program, but a great many cooperated and profited by this united effort.

Some Notes

Harris M. Barbour has accepted a call to the Baptist church at Lake Geneva. He has been a teacher at the Seventh Day College in this state and has supplied some of our churches. We welcome him to our brotherhood. He is a son of Clarence Barbour, of Rochester Seminary.

John M. Carlson, of Almond has been holding meetings at Glen Flora and Ladysmith. A number have accepted Christ, and the meetings have been a blessing to the churches.

Paul MacKinney has resigned his work at Augusta. He has been there for two and a half years.

M. Doherty has resigned his work with the Mauston and New Lisbon churches.

Robert Gordon, of Fond du Lac, recently made an appeal for fifty new members by Easter. April 4 the church had its annual Father and Son's banquet. Rev. Robert W. Shaw, of Milwaukee, was the speaker of the evening.

Stevens Point Church is in the midst of special meetings. John M. Linden is leading the forces.

The church at Appleton is getting ready to put up a modern Sunday-school plant. This has been greatly needed for a long time, and now that it is to be realized the church is moving forward with zest.

Silver Lake Church is planning on putting up a community building. It has secured a building from the Great Lakes Naval Station and will remove it to a site adjacent to its present property.

Milwaukee City Union

Beginning May 1, the Milwaukee Baptist Union expects to qualify as a standard city missionary society under Class B. It has taken out the incorporation papers and has secured Dr. D. W. Hurlburt as city missionary. Recently the plans of work were revised and from now on the work will be done under various departments.

The new Woodlawn Avenue mission is prospering and expects to dedicate a new building April 23. This is the first work of expansion in the city work and will prove a profitable stimulus to the forward movement of Baptists in this city.

Baptists in the Polish Republic

By K. W. STRZELEC

There are two Baptist conferences which existed before the war, both formed from German-speaking churches. One is in former Russian Poland, the other in the former German Polish province. I will give figures for both conferences, quoting the Polish and Ruthenian, so far as I have the figures, apart, because it is an entirely new work—people who do not understand German and consider themselves natives of the country.

The very difficult and not reorganized communication system in the Polish provinces bordering Soviet Russia, has prevented me from getting in touch with all places to gather good statistics. Also, the imagination of Russian farmer preachers is great. Some of them can hardly read, others not at all. They do not care for figures, and some think, basing upon 2 Samuel 24, that it is a great sin to count God's people. This makes difficulty in gathering dependable statistics. I am sending you figures from the various letters which I have received, and from personal inquiry. I am sure those relating to the German-speaking churches are nearly dependable, those relating to the Polish and Ruthenian less dependable; but I am positive that there is not exaggeration in the figures in either.

German Speaking Churches in Poland

Organized churches, 31; buildings, (churches and chapels), 38; ordained ministers, 30; unordained missionaries and volunteer workers, 106; preaching stations, 91; membership in 1920, 6,605; baptisms in 1921, 510; other additions, 200; losses, 160; gains, 657; total membership, 7,155; Sunday schools, 82; teachers, 264; scholars, 2,519.

According to the remarks of the statistician, Mr. Kupsch, the contribution for all purposes for the year 1921 will be more than four times as large as that of 1920, but the buying power would be smaller.

This is because the Polish mark has fallen greatly in value; in January, 1921, it was 500 Polish marks for a dollar; in July of the same year, 6,500; February, 1922, it is 3,400 marks for an American dollar.

Polish Conference

(To be duly organized in May, 1922.)

Of this conference, only five churches existed before the war; the others have marvelously sprung up since the great war. Only five of the following churches have their own meeting houses, thirteen have rented uncomfortable rooms for services, the rest gather in private houses. The churches are Polish and Ruthenian.

Organized churches, 14; buildings (churches and chapels), 5; ordained ministers, 16; unordained preachers, 38; preaching stations, 97; membership (in 1920), 430; baptisms (in 1921), 487; other additions (converts coming back from Soviet Russia), 242; total membership, 1,159.

In this conference are only nine Sunday schools, about 400 scholars. The expense statistics are not available.

Altogether in Poland there are forty-five organized Baptist churches, forty-three church buildings, thirty-six ordained preachers, 144 laity preachers, 188 preaching stations and 8,314 members with about 20,000 population.

Before the war, 70 per cent of the German-speaking churches were self-supporting. The war's destruction has brought with it poverty, so that today the ordained pastors are receiving some addition to the salary which they receive from their congregation. The addition comes, for the German-speaking brethren in Poland, from the German conference in the United States. The A. B. F. M. S. is supporting nine Polish and Ruthenian missionaries.

Burma

By J. H. COPE

"He came, he saw and he conquered." I do not mean Babe Ruth or Jack Dempsey but the Prince of Wales. Everywhere he received a welcome and the people fell in love with him. Of course the government took pains to have those who would cause trouble locked up for the time being but they were in a hopeless minority. The newspaper reporters could show ours in America a few things. Talk about details! They even gave the name of the locomotive engineer which took the Prince to Mandalay and the conductors. The visit has undoubtedly done good.

Non-cooperation in India seems to be languishing in jails for the most part. In Calcutta the prisons are overflowing and they have had to turn other buildings into use as lockups. The government has forbidden unlawful assemblies and the people continue to assemble with the result that their leaders are becoming increasingly the guests of the government. What the end is to be none can predict but the violent outbreaks, such as the Moplah uprising, seem to be less in numbers than formerly.

The other day we all received letters asking to state which form of work, the educational or evangelistic, ought to be "retrenched" if such a thing is necessary. And in most cases it will have to be the latter. Contracts for school must be fulfilled. It is hard to find one's work crippled when there are in most stations more opportunities than ever before.

A Buddhist hpongyi appeared at the seminary last month in his robes. He declared he had about decided to become a Christian. But he wanted to study for a year first, offering to provide his own living, reside outside of the seminary and carry on the class-room work. At the end of the year he would strip his sacred robes and become a Christian. The seminary felt it could not be done and the application was refused. It is interesting however in that it shows a peculiar determination to become a Christian at the same time holding to the old forms as long as possible.

In a world which is suffering from famine the announcement of a new area would scarcely be noticed. And yet in Burma among some of the hill people there is a serious condition. The Karens of the Toungoo district have a severe shortage of crops. Mr. Weeks estimates there are two-thirds of the Christians in want. Fortunately the government has instituted government work which will soon act as a means of tiding over the people. In the Lushai Hills, which border Burma on the west, there is such a serious condition that people are in hundreds, if not thousands, migrating to other places for the time being, many of them coming to Burma.

This month and next see the exodus of missionaries for furloughs. About a dozen thus leave every year tired and in cases unwell to return in a year and a half recovered, full of enthusiasm and the work carries on. Every one is sorry to see them go and just as happy to see them return once more.

Twelve Months At Shanghai College

By HENRY HUIZINGA

It has been a year of unprecedented growth at Shanghai College in faculty, in students and in buildings. Within four years we have more than doubled our number of both students and teachers. We now have 456 students, of whom 184 are in the college and 272 in the academy department. The campus consists of fifty acres on the bank of the Hwangpoo river and has an estimated value of over $1,000,000. Ocean-going vessels to Shanghai from all parts of the world pass right by our doors and their passengers see this magnificent exhibition of American Baptists' thoughtful generosity for the benefit of China's millions. We may well be proud of this great educational agency maintained jointly by Northern and Southern Baptists through their respective Foreign Mission Boards.

The aim of the college is to train Christian leaders for definite tasks. Every student who enters joins a group where he receives the special training he requires for his life-work along the lines best suited to his chosen vocation. These groups at present are religion, social sciences, natural sciences, education, business and Chinese literature. Most of the students are fairly evenly divided among the first five groups, the natural sciences claiming forty men, the social sciences thirty-one, business twenty-nine, education twenty-eight, religion twenty and Chinese literature eight. These figures give approximately the vocations to which the students are looking forward. The college has graduated seventy-four men, of whom thirty-one are teaching, sixteen are in religious work, eight are in business and the others are still studying, twelve of them in American colleges and universities. Coeducation was started last year with five women students. This year we have nine. Lack of dormitory facilities for women students has prevented a larger growth but the announcement of a generous gift of $50,000 from an unknown donor for a new woman's building was received with enthusiasm here and assures us of ample facilities for this department.

That this college is first of all a Christian institution, standing for the evangelizing of China, is never for a moment forgotten and is apparent in all our work. Through personal work by both teachers, and students, through class-room instruction and preaching, the Christian message is presented and the claims of Jesus Christ urged upon all. During the past year about forty have accepted the Christian religion and have been baptized. The majority of them were from non-Christian homes and some of the young men have had to face a great deal of opposition and opprobrium from those who are near and dear. At present there are 173 non-Christians in the whole institution and 283 Christians. It is an encouraging fact that most of the non-Christians are in the lower classes and it has been the experience of the college that the men become Christians as they advance to higher classes and become acquainted with Christian truth. Thus in the two highest classes in college there are only five non-Christians out of sixty-two men.

The faculty of Shanghai college consists of twenty-five foreigners, mostly American, and twenty-three Chinese, of whom five have studied in America. At least seventeen of the professors have done from three to five years post-graduate work in some of the foremost universities of America in special preparation for their work and are representative men and women in their departments.

The year has been distinguished by the presence of two noted men on the faculty. Dr. James Q. Dealey, professor of social and political science in Brown University, was with us during the spring term and gave four regular courses in that department. As a member of the Royal Society of Arts of London and of the Institute Internationale de Sociologie de Paris and as the author of many excellent books on various aspects of sociological subjects, Professor Dealey has a world-wide reputation for profound scholarship. He was lionized by the students, his classes were crowded and his services were also much in demand in Shanghai and in neighboring cities where he went to deliver special lectures. In the fall term we were equally fortunate to have with us Dr. E. M. Poteat who was for many years the president of Furman University and later the secretary of stewardship of the Board of Promotion. Doctor Poteat is a strong man on the platform and the students were always greatly interested in his chapel talks and sermons. He taught regular courses in Biblical literature, ethics and public speaking. He has also visited neighboring cities and given many special lectures on religious subjects. He has been prevailed on to prolong his stay for another year as a member of the staff of Shanghai College with considerable freedom to go about China to the great centers and preach the gospel.

I have had a real and vital part in all the work of Shanghai College. Although the work of any one person is of necessity restricted and sometimes insignificant, yet his part in it counts in all the vast work and influence of the institution as a whole. During the year my teaching has covered courses in English, mathematics, astronomy and New Testament. In astronomy I have found a larger audience than my own class by means of a series of articles which appeared monthly for two years in the China Press and in the South China Morning Post at Hongkong and in some American papers. In Sunday school I have had a class of twenty-two boys who are juniors in college and all Christians except one. We have done a great deal to win that one but so far we have not succeeded. He is not bitter against Christianity but he clings to his old Confucian ideas.

Mounds Park Sanitarium Association Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the Mounds Park Sanitarium and Hospital Association was held in the sanitarium, St. Paul, in January. Dr. Robert Earl, president of the association from its beginning, presided. After the usual preliminaries, the financial statements of the secretary and treasurer for the year, including the work of the Mounds Park Sanitarium, Midway Hospital, and Merriam Park Hospital were read and unanimously adopted, which show the assets to be $362,700, liabilities $179,700, and total number of patients during the year 2,936.

The president and vice-president, Drs. Robert and George Earl, presented plans for consideration and adoption, looking toward the enlargement of the purpose, scope, and work of the association, outlining the needs of an association that will represent the denomination in doing the medical work and caring for the sick throughout the entire Northwest. Requests having come from adjoining cities and states asking that consideration be given to increased needs, the articles of incorporation and by-laws of the association were changed so that the name of the association is now The Northern Baptist Hospital Association, in which a member of any regular Baptist church may acquire membership upon the payment of $100. It was voted that the Board of Directors be increased from twelve to thirty members, including representatives from all Baptist churches, English and foreign speaking, namely: Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, and German. A board of directors was elected composed of nine pastors, nine laymen, and twelve executive workers.

The Association now owns three sites, one a whole city block with five buildings on it, where the Mounds Park Sanitarium and three adjacent buildings are located; one with one building, where the Midway Hospital is located; and another where the Merriam Park Hospital is located. In addition the association has acquired a site of several acres of ground strategically located in the Midway district between St. Paul and Minneapolis on University Avenue, upon which it proposes to build in the near future a large and adequately equipped hospital with ample provisions to take care of the needs of the denomination throughout the entire northwestern territory.

The officers for the year were elected as follows: President, Dr. George Earl; vice-president, Rev. Frank Peterson; chairman board of directors, Dr. Robert Earl; secretary and treasurer, G. Arvid Hagstrom; and members of the executive committee, Charles Skoogluu and C. P. Dahlby.

As there is no other outstanding Baptist charity in this entire Northwest and considering that the Mounds Park Sanitarium and Hospital Association, which was established by Swedish Baptists and maintained by them during the past twelve years, has ministered to patients from the entire country as well as ministers and missionaries from the whole denomination, and having now secured an ample and well located site for the enlargement of this institution, the attention of the denomination is called to this object as one worthy of conscientious and financial consideration.

Boston Letter

By CHARLES H. WATSON

Professor T. R. Glover in Boston

The great Cambridge professor of history has been here to deliver his course of lectures at the Lowell Institute, on the development of religion. His books on "Jesus in History," "Jesus in the Experience," and "The Pilgrim," had given him quite a vogue among appreciative readers, and had awakened a deal of confidence in his authority. Certainly his lectures justified all expectations. The first impression of Professor Glover is one of almost youthfulness and vigor, a sort of modern athlete. The later impression is of an intellectual athlete, with a surprising range of exact information, and unusually individualistic method of interpretation and power of statement. In accuracy of observation he is a sort of genius. What comes to you in his discourse is like the overflow of a great reservoir. Every view presented has relation to sources. He evidently reads, sees, knows his materials, at first hand.

At Newton Also

It was a decided hit to secure Professor Glover as the Stephen Greene Lecturer at Newton. Contact with such a man proved a priceless privilege to a company of theological students. He took the Apostle Paul as his theme, placed him in his oriental setting and contact with idolatry, and made his teaching and his zeal understandable. It was an intensive address. For over an hour it held us with a grip that did not relax for a moment. We had vivid illustration of the difference between an able literalism, and the authority of knowledge and power. We were proud of so outstanding a Baptist, and recalled his father, Richard Glover of Bristol, that superb leader of our British brethren, and preacher by divine right.

Before this letter will get into print the next Stephen Greene Lecture will have been delivered by Dr. James Moffatt, the great translator. What an inspiration for young theologues to touch such men!

Getting Into Position

Uncertainty and confusion, with much questioning, has been the daily pabulum of our Baptist people for some time. The promise of something different, and more truly expressive of our common spirit is therefore very welcome. The announced agreement of representative leaders of our two wings, evangelical and fundamental, pointing to a united and Christian plan of action at Indianapolis, brightens all hearts with hope. We may as well expect differences, for always are they with us. There is something amusing in the modern alarm over two wings on the bird as though it were a surprising development. All denominational birds are rigged that way that do any flying. They simply have to work together for progress. The likelihood that we are reaching such unity and freedom fills all of our hearts with encouragement.

The Ill Wind

Yes, we have it, but it blows some good. One thing in the development of the World Movement was its accompanying sweep of so many of our most useful pastors into secretaryships. It gave us disquietude. Now that some of the best of them are coming back to the old job of blessing a church, we are correspondingly comforted. They will return with new efficiency, and some churches too much at ease will be speeding their circulation and getting progressively vigorous. Think of a secretary like William Reid coming back to a church after the glowing and inspiring period of his activity in two armies—the service for country, and the army of the Lord. Only a church that is ready to push and to achieve will covet such a leader. And there are others also, like him, that will be available now on fields afflicted with dormancy. By the way, why shouldn't that coined word make a good mate for President Harding's "Normalcy"?

Annual Meeting

The April meeting of the Social Union was the picturesque annual meeting. Usually it is full of movement, diversity of interest, good-natured expectation, curiosity as to who the presidential lightning will strike, besides fetching music and eloquence. President Bailey retired with characteristic sense and humor. He has made a popular chief and has scored some great meetings. Now he proudly wears the badge of an illustrious "has been"! The ex-presidents of the Social Union are our elder statesmen. They are unanimously wise and benignant as befits their eminence. Soon we shall have "Newton Night" with Dr. H. E. Fosdick as the orator.

The new president is Dr. DeWitt G. Wilcox, the beloved physician of Newton Center. He came to the lofty place with modest surprise, and in his brief acknowledgment of the honor, made a good impression.

The Easter Harvest

Doubtless the next "Boston Letter" will have to record large additions to the churches. Many churches have had evangelists, and many have worked to a plan for ingathering. It is a beautifully appropriate time for the great Baptist symbol, and its glorious emphasis upon the new life in which we believe.

Ordinations

We are hearing about ordinations in these days of disturbed equilibrium. Like Jordan they are sometimes a hard road to travel. The vote of "unanimous satisfaction" with the candidate's views of scripture doctrine is not so common. Sometimes he slips through by a majority vote, which, though we are democratic, forbids any hilarity. Occasionally he leaps headlong into such appalling orthodoxy that we wonder what will become of him after he has learned some things. Sometimes he refuses to learn anything, and leaves behind him a wake of wrecked churches. Anyhow ordination councils are reflecting current differences and debates. A doubtful candidate may go through with flying colors, and an undoubted minister may have to squeeze through under a suspicion. After a recent modern council, one of our strongest and best ministers exclaimed: "No council would ever ordain me now—I couldn't satisfy them. Glad I got through early."

Tremont Temple

Easter Sunday the new pastor begins. It would have been a great day without the free publicity which the Unitarian editor gave. But that has helped to make necessary the admission of people by ticket on Sunday night.

Recently the Ford Hall Forum gave a night to Editor Dieffenbach, and had Pastor Freda of the Clarendon St. Church answer him, who put some pertinent questions which the editor did not answer. The editor said nothing new; while Pastor Freda very good naturedly, yet pungently and conclusively, corrected some of the old things that he had said.

The last phase of the discussion will be held in Channing Hall on April 24, behind closed doors, only Unitarian ministers being admitted. There the editorial exploit into premillennialism will be surveyed and staked, and some plain speech come forth which THE BAPTIST would ache to print. And now may a sweet catholicity and spiritual freedom issue from it all, and abide among us!

Religious Education Through Play

A playground under American leadership is to be opened at Chengtu, China, this summer. Funds for this purpose are this week being forwarded by the Sacramento Church Federation Missionary Playgrounds Committee. Site, equipment and native worker are supplied by a non-Methodist in the federation, the American worker being furnished by the Chengtu Methodists.

This movement for "Exporting the American Playground" through missionary sources, one of some sixty units being stimulated by the World Recreation Survey, is a part of a program originally worked out for the Interchurch World Movement. The federation has undertaken to execute the plan as its part of the "carry on" of the Interchurch. To about 4000 missionary centers throughout the world it is distributing educational data embodying the best of America's recreational experience.

The American playground thus being given to mankind overseas is a unique development peculiar to the democracy of the Stars and Stripes. This fact was established by the World Recreation Survey in studies made of the recreation of most of the counties of Europe as well as several considerable areas of Asia, Africa and Latin America. It was found that there was beyond our national limits practically nothing at that time like either the American playground under direction, or the use of the public school as a social center.

For the spread of theories of moral education through play tested at the Sacramento Orphanage Farm, Chengtu occupies a highly strategic position. It is the meeting place of caravan roads from all over the interior of Asia, from that country which Kipling calls "the back of beyond," the land of oriental rugs, brick tea and lahassaries.

While the Chengtu experiment is a very modest one, federation members familiar with the Orient say that there are few distributors of news like travelers along caravan routes.

NEW YORK

WASHINGTON HEIGHTS CHURCH, New York City, held special services Holy Week. On Good Friday the usual service was held from 12 to 3 o'clock. The speakers were: Rev. Harold Pattison, pastor; Rev. C. K. Gilbert, Cathedral of St. John; Rev. C. S. Mills, Sec. ministerial board of Congregational churches; Rev. J. F. Newton, Church of the Divine Paternity; Rev. W. L. Sullivan, All Souls Church; Rev. Stanley White, Sec. Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions; Rev. W. I. Haven, Sec. American Bible Society. The church is adding to its membership at each communion.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the New York City Baptist Mission Society will be held at Park Avenue Church on the afternoon and evening of May 2. The Woman's Auxiliary will meet in the afternoon followed by the annual meeting of the Fresh Air Home Society; the annual meeting of the City Mission Society will be held in the evening. The annual meeting of the Baptist Church Extension Society of Brooklyn and Queens will be held at Emmanuel Church Tuesday, May 9. The Woman's Auxiliary will hold its meeting in the afternoon and the meeting of the society will be held in the evening. The full program will be announced later.

A CLASS IN CHURCH MEMBERSHIP, Calvary Church, Utica, Rev. F. L. Anderson, pastor, trained a group of children for uniting with the church by baptism on Easter. A book entitled "Church Membership," prepared by Rev. Ralph E. Stewart, of Buffalo, who is working in the evangelistic department of the New York State Convention, proved helpful in leading the class which is organized as the Children's Instruction Class. Pastor Anderson also instructs the children in tithing; each young person who joins the church joins as a tither. A group of thirty tithers is helping to keep the finances of this church in splendid condition in spite of the financial and business depression.

SUNDAY, APRIL 2, was the fifth anniversary of the coming of Dr. John M. Moore to Marcy Ave. Church, Brooklyn. After the evening service an informal reception was tendered him. The room was filled with those who came to express appreciation of the ministry of Dr. Moore and he was presented with a huge basket of flowers as a token of the loyalty and affection of the young people. During Dr. Moore's service at Marcy 434 new members have been received, a larger number than for any similar period, with one exception, in the last quarter of a century. Thirty-five others expressed a desire to unite with the church on Easter. Educational classes have been held this winter with a total attendance of over 1,000. The church is noted for work among young people. The Sunday-school attendance during March for those 13 years of age and above averaged over 250.

MASSACHUSETTS

REV. C. A. BURGESS recently baptized eleven, at the First Church, Rockland, one of them being Scout Master of the local troop of Boy Scouts. All departments of church work are well supported, and it is expected that this year's quota of pledges to the Baptist Forward Movement, will be met in full. Rev. and Mrs. Burgess have announced the engagement of their daughter, Hope, to Dr. J. W. Wilson, of Brown University. Miss Burgess is a senior at Brown and has been elected to both the Sigma Xi and Phi Beta Kappa Societies.

NEW JERSEY

AFTER A SERIOUS ILLNESS PASTOR POWELL, of Mt. Pleasant Church, Newark, is again attending to his duties. The church has received twenty new members since the new year. Harry Vom Bruck and his party are conducting an evangelistic campaign April 9-23. The W. W. G. gave the pageant "The Conquering Cross" April 4. Several requests have been received for a repetition. The Women's Guild recently held its annual meeting, electing officers and reporting the close of a successful year.

Annual Meeting Atlantic District

The annual meeting of the Atlantic District Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society and Woman's American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society will be held in Peddie Memorial Church, Newark, May 3-5.

The district board will meet Wednesday at 2 p. m. Wednesday evening a reception will be tendered officers and delegates in the church, corner Broad and Fulton streets. The theme of Thursday will be "Education." The W. W. G. banquet will be in the evening, with Miss Buchanan, of Trenton, as toast mistress. Friday will be given to evangelism, with a missionary banquet in the evening. Many notable missionary speakers will lend the inspiration of their presence and spoken word.

On Friday, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, will conduct an open forum on administration and policy and deliver an inspirational address in the evening. The sessions will close with a consecration service led by the president of the district, Mrs. H. H. Skerrett.

CONNECTICUT

FIRST CHURCH, OF EAST LYNNE, and friends remembered the birthday of their pastor, Rev. W. N. Reynolds, on April 9, by a reception in his honor at the church and a substantial purse of money.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. CHAS. A. DECKER, pastor of the Bellevue Church, Pittsburgh, is trying a new plan for conducting prayer meetings. For the last five weeks the meetings have been in charge of different organizations of the church and Sunday school, the president of each organization being the leader of the meeting. The meetings have been interesting, helpful, and well attended, and have revealed some excellent leaders among the church members.

First Church, Kane, Rev. D. L. Woods, pastor, had a successful evangelistic campaign, Feb. 19—March 12, under the direction of Rev. Frederic H. Baker, of Titusville, and song-leader C. W. McKeever of Pavilion, N. Y. As a result twenty-nine have been received into the church by baptism and four on experience and former baptism. Other candidates for membership are being received at frequent intervals and a fine junior congregation of children is in training for membership. On the past two Sunday evenings, the invitation given by the pastor brought out ten new inquirers.

MAINE

THE FRENCH BAPTIST CHURCH at Waterville is one of the most successful French Protestant churches in New England. It has an excellent plant with church vestry, Sunday-school and social rooms. The membership has steadily risen until it is about 175. There is an up-to-date Sunday school and all the departments of church work are strongly conducted. Over $2200 was pledged to the New World Movement. In all the work for the last year Rev. H. J. Tetreault has been the faithful leader. To the great regret of his people and his fellow-workers in the city and state, Mr. Tetreault has presented his resignation to take effect in April.

Church Treasurers, Attention!

Our fiscal year closes as of April 30th.

HOULTON: The work of Baptist churches is showing steady development. At First Church Pastor Speed is greeted by large congregations; the enlarged equipment of the church is all employed in its many activities. This church, while making expensive and necessary improvements to its building took its full share in the New World Movement. Sunday school averaged 283 in attendance during March and February. United Baptist Church has a large Sunday evening congregation. A mortgage of long standing was recently paid and burned. Here, too, is a large Sunday-school work. Pastor Hartley and his people are considering plans for enlarging the church building and increasing its equipment.

RICKER INSTITUTE is having a good year. The principal, Rev. E. H. Stover, is doing his utmost for the moral and spiritual as well as the intellectual training of the students. Rev. Henry C. Speed gives regular courses in Bible study which involve real work and receive credit with other courses. Of late he has been giving a course on the life of Christ to the Freshmen and another on the life and work of Paul to the Sophomores.

EASTON: About a year ago Rev. W. Walden, of New Brunswick, was invited to hold evangelistic services with the church in Gorham, which he did with encouraging and permanent results. While there a committee from Presque Isle, headed by Hon. B. F. Giberson, which was greatly interested in the rural districts of the county, invited him to undertake a summer evangelistic campaign in the districts that are practically unchurched. He accepted and, aided by his daughter, held meetings in five different school-houses which attracted large numbers of the farmers and led to many conversions. The committee assumed the expense and salary of the preacher and had reason for satisfaction in the fruitage of their effort at rural evangelism. In the autumn Mr. Walden responded to the urgent call of the Easton Church. The parsonage was repaired and improved and the Walden family have made it a center of social influence to the church and community.

MARS HILL: One of the live ministers of Maine is Rev. P. C. Clark of Mars Hill. Congregations are large and increasing. The Sunday school has doubled its membership. Mr. Clark is an enthusiast in his work for boys and they respond. A new baptistry has been installed and used, with a large number of baptisms Easter. The vestries of the church are now housing some of the public-school classes because of the recent burning of one of the school-houses.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

HASKINS CHURCH IS EVIDENCING increased interest in all phases of the work. Two weeks of special meetings resulted in several confessions of faith with baptism Easter morning. Prayer meetings are conducted as religious discussion hours. Sunday school is conducted with a view to religious education. Each class takes its turn in presenting the school hour program. This helps to create an extensive training class for future workers.

A CAMPAIGN OF VISITATION and prayer paved the way for a successful campaign in evangelism at Calvary Church, Akron. The pastor, R. W. Edmondson, was assisted by Rev. E. O. Smith of Chillicothe, who preached for ten days. Mr. Edmondson continued the services another week. There were sixteen accessions to the church, nearly all being adults. There has been 130 additions to the church during the present pastorate.

SUNDAY, APRIL 2, twelve persons were baptized at Monroeville First Church. These, with one exception, came as the result of a series of meetings in which the pastor, Rev. J. Frank Smith, was assisted by Rev. H. Y. Reed, of Dresden.

Rev. R. D. Wood, of Conneaut, has accepted a call to Glenville Church, Cleveland, his work there to begin April 20.

SINCE NOV. 1 attendance in the Sunday school of Second Church, Newark, Rev. T. Lasley, pastor, has increased 85 per cent and offerings have increased 240 per cent. A men's class has been organized and is making itself felt in both Sunday school and church. Much needed repairs have been made in the basement. Four members were added in March.

REV. ROBERT BRUCE SMITH celebrated the fourth anniversary of his pastorate of First Church, Springfield, Sunday, April 2. Ten candidates were baptized. There is a waiting list of about 75 candidates as a result of recent special services held by Dr. Smith. During the four years the membership has been increased by 450 additions. A debt incurred 12 years ago, when the church was built, has been paid off during the last four years and money raised to build an addition to the W. Pleasant Street chapel, which is financed by the church. The church congregation raised $50,000 toward the New World Movement. The annual reunion and reception for new members was held April 12. This affair was also in recognition of Dr. Smith's anniversary.

INDIANA

LOGANSFORD: This church celebrated its seventy-fifth anniversary with special meetings the week of April second. Pastor M. C. Tunison is greatly liked by his people.

TERRE HAUTE, FIRST: Rev. Roy B. Deer is leading this church in remarkable achievements. The work is having a wholesome effect upon the entire city. On a recent Sunday night the pastor baptized forty-nine.

CLAYTON AND FRIENDSHIP: This is the most recent parish in Indiana. The two churches are only five miles apart. They expect to settle a pastor soon. Some big things will happen under this new arrangement.

ADAMS: In February Rev. J. R. Quick held an evangelistic meeting which resulted in forty-nine baptisms and over seventy-five others uniting with the church. Adams expects to settle a pastor for full time work soon.

MUNCIE, FIRST: Scores of people are turned away every Sunday night. Col. Everson is a great pastor and some big things are in the air for this strong church.

New Buildings

Since the state convention in October there has been a remarkable advance in securing new church buildings. New buildings have been dedicated at Evansville, cost, $100,000; Roumanian, at Gary, cost over $9,000; Tabernacle, Indianapolis, cost $25,000; Liberty, cost $15,000; Denham, cost $4,500; and Mt. Gilead at a cost of $25,000.

Bloomfield recently pledged $15,000 for a new building. Thirty-First, Indianapolis, expects to begin on its $40,000 addition this summer. Emerson Ave., Indianapolis, recently opened its big gymnasium and will put up its school plant this summer. Metea dedicated its $25,000 building Easter Sunday. The New Hope church, which moved into Kolean, will dedicate its new edifice on April 30. Evangelist H. S. Morrill held a meeting at Bakers Creek and was held there to supervise the erection of a new building which will be dedicated on April 23. Greensburg has been having a great Sunday school—666 on a recent Sunday—so on April 9 it subscribed $16,500 for a new school building.

The state board of promotion has a consulting architect in the person of Mr. C. E. Bacon and thus is in shape to give churches expert assistance in the matter of new buildings.

Indianapolis and the entire state of Indiana will have wide open arms of welcome for the great Baptist hosts when they come to Indianapolis for the next annual convention.

MICHIGAN

THOUGH ONLY FOUR MONTHS on the field, Rev. Joseph H. Vatcher, formerly of Sauli Ste. Marie, Mich., has manifestly inspired the First Church, Port Huron, to a program of united work seldom before attempted in that church. The annual business meeting and banquet was one of the most enthusiastic occasions in the glowing history of this great people. The chapel has been so converted that the "kids" play basket-ball in it, and the young people are under a program to provide a permanent gymnasium. A creditable record on the New World Movement was made last year. The pastor announced a stiff program for the coming year, including 100 new members, a Bible school of 350, a gain of 100 per cent in prayer meeting attendance, a real brotherhood organization, evangelistic work, four young people preparing for special Christian service, a new parsonage, and 100 subscriptions for THE BAPTIST. On the spot he secured thirty subscriptions, and affirms he will get the rest soon. The Woman's Union has voted to get the parsonage. Watch Port Huron grow.—W. P. Lovett.

Kalamazoo College

In connection with the Continuation Campaign, the women of Michigan have been given the privilege of securing designated gifts for a new dormitory for women at Kalamazoo College as a specific. The campaign is being directed by Miss Florence E. Grant, of Birmingham. Already thousands of dollars have been subscribed and the outlook is encouraging for completely providing the funds necessary for this building within the next few weeks.

The college observed April 1-10 as spring vacation. Academic work during the past winter has been of an especially high character. Within the last few days announcement has been made that one of our young ladies has received a French government scholarship which pays transportation and all expenses in connection with a year's study in France. Only thirty-three of these scholarships are granted in the United States and there are always many applicants. One young lady has received a scholarship for Yale next year and two young men have received scholarships for Harvard for the coming year.

The basket ball team closed the season with the state championship and attended the national tournament. There they defeated two of the strongest teams and won second place in the national position.

A young lady from this college won the state championship in oratory and a young man representative secured third place. The college is easily the champion in debate. On a recent evening one of its teams debated Hillsdale, having the negative side of the subject, another of its teams had the affirmative side of the same subject, debating Olivet. At Kalamazoo it received the unanimous decision of the judges and at Olivet the decision two to one.

Commencement occurs June 21. It is anticipated that the college will close one of the best years of its history.

ILLINOIS

EAST PARK CHURCH, DECATUR: Ninety-six men attended a men's supper in the church Thursday, April 6. A brotherhood of sixty-seven members was organized. The work among the men is going fine—as with all the world. Rev. R. A. Rapson has been here five weeks.

New World Movement. For the year ending last May this church contributed about $17,500; this year over $21,000 has been secured, with the prospects of reaching at least $30,000 by May 1. Second Church formulated a program early in January which enlisted the cooperation of every agency in the church, with the gratifying results mentioned.

AT THE MEETING of the Chicago ministers on April 9, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, C. T. Holman; vice-president, C. M. Kessler; secretary, A. H. Gage; treasurer, W. Noble; chairman civics committee, M. P. Boynton; chairman committee on introductions, W. R. Jones; chairman credentials committee, A. D. Chaffee; chairman program committee, E. B. MINNESOTA

DR. GEO. E. BURLINGAME conducted special services at Woodland Park Church, St. Paul, April 2-9. He is preaching each evening April 11-23 in the evangelistic campaign which is on at Parker's Prairie.

REV. J. G. BRIGGS, the beloved pastor of the Woodland Park Church of St. Paul, was taken suddenly ill and has had an operation for a serious case of appendicitis, from which he is recovering.

THE EBENEZER MISSION, Minneapolis, has been reopened with good promise under leadership of William Granberg.

THE BAPTISTS OF MINNESOTA are hard at work securing mission funds. The laymen of the state are well organized. Henry P. Lovett of Minneapolis is chairman; the women are at work though they have been interrupted by various causes. Many of the leading pastors are not only leading their own churches but are visiting other fields in the interest of the cause. Doctors Frank Peterson, G. A. Hagstrom, G. N. Brink, of the Publication Society, J. H. Franklin, of New York, and F. P. Lynch, of Africa, Miss Naomi Fletcher, of the Woman's Home Mission Society, Miss Elsie Kappen, of the General Board of Promotion, Mrs. Ida M. Holder, of Bengal-Orissa, have all given great assistance. Dr. S. R. Vinton by his inimitable stereopticon lectures has aroused much interest, and Dr. W. H. Bowler has helped largely in organization matters.

THE WORK AMONG THE SWEDES in Clearwater and Beltrami counties has been richly blessed and many have witnessed a good confession before Christ.

KANSAS

IN RESPONSE to an invitation from Valley Center Church for a council to consider the propriety of ordaining its pastor, Rev. Walter R. Schmidt, to the full work of the ministry, representatives from several churches met at the Valley Center Church. Council was organized by electing Rev. W. A. Meyers moderator and Rev. J. M. Robinson, clerk. Rev. J. B. Smith, of First Church, Wichita, was appointed to conduct the examination. The church accepted the report of the council and requested that it proceed with the ordination. The council assembled in the evening and proceeded to carry out the following program: Ordination sermon, Rev. J. W. Bayles; charge to the church, Rev. W. A. Ayers; charge to candidate, Rev. J. M. Robinson. Brother Schmidt has been with Valley Center Church one year. During this time the church has made substantial progress. It has raised sufficient funds to complete a building which is one of the best in the town.

OREGON

DECISION DAY WAS OBSERVED by the Bible School of "The White Temple," Portland on Sunday, April 2. The pastor, Dr. Thomas J. Villers, spoke on the question, "What then shall I do with Jesus, who is called Christ"? It was a deeply affecting scene, as fathers and mothers, young men and women, and children, kept coming down the aisles until 125 were standing with the pastor, confessing Christ as Saviour. Among this number were four Chinese—two boys and two young ladies.

Linfield College

Linfield College, McMinnville, Oregon, had a mortgage-burning ceremony, March 17, during the regular chapel service. For the first time in the history of the institution it is entirely out of debt. During President Riley's administration of sixteen years the indebtedness has hovered about the $30,000 mark.

The annual catalog of Rochester Theological Seminary shows that twelve graduates and former students of Linfield College are enrolled in the different classes. This is a larger representation than from any other institution. A recent canvass showed that forty-two members of the student body are volunteers for missionary service, and that about seventy-five are looking forward to definite Christian service.

Faculty and students greatly appreciated addresses by Dr. Arthur S. Phelps of Los Angeles, Dr. Lucian Winters, medical missionary from China, and Dr. James Asa White, general secretary of the B. Y. P. U. Association. Besides these, prominent pastors of the Northwest have given inspirational messages to the college at the regular chapel hours.

The local church and college are glad to have among them families of missionaries, who are home on furlough. Charles Rutherford and family arrived from India a few months ago. Everett Burket and family came from China the middle of March and are visiting with Mrs. Burket's parents, Rev. and Mrs. George Campbell, who were in China for many years. Mr. Rutherford, Mr. Burket and Mrs. Burket are graduates of Linfield College. Frank Manley, also a graduate and home on furlough from India, passed through McMinnville recently and renewed acquaintances on the campus. His brother, Dr. Charles Manley a former instructor in the college, will arrive with his family in a few weeks from India.

The state board of promotion of the state reached an important decision at a recent meeting held in Portland. The program of this board in connection with the New World Movement calls for the collection of $107,830.66 on the pledges already made and the securing of an additional $78,999.89 in cash before May 1, 1922. After due consideration, the members of the board present, with other denominational leaders, voted unanimously to designate $50,000 of this latter sum for the Isabel M. Grover Hall. This building will be a dormitory for young women and will be erected as a memorial for the late Professor Isabel M. Grover whose entire student and teaching days were spent in McMinnville, now Linfield, College.

EAST WASHINGTON

THE YAKIMA VALLEY BAPTIST ASSOCIATION met April 3 at Ellensburg, a county seat and normal-school town. Pastor B. A. Hylton, Rev. T. A. Leger, of Prosser, Rev. J. J. Tickner, of Kittitas, and Rev. Wesley E. Smith of Cle Elum are new men in the association. A recognition council for the new church at Buena was held at an interval in the association and the church was welcomed into fellowship as was the Second Baptist Church (Negro) of Ellensburg. Moderator L. W. Terry marshalled the preachers, and Brother T. M. Jones of Cle Elum led the laymen in a lively debate upon the question "Resolved that the layman is more responsible for the progress of the kingdom than the preacher." Mrs. Henry Topping, of Yokohama, spoke winningly of the Japanese. Direct contact with the Americanization problem is indicated by the fact that in one school district of 1,000 pupils in the coal mining area 17 per cent only are of American parentage. Twenty-one nationalities contribute to the remaining 83 per cent. The chapel car "Messenger of Peace" in charge of Rev. and Mrs. Robt. Gray, has assisted in the organization of the Buena Church and in the erection of a new edifice in which the association will meet next year.

COLORADO

GREELEY: Under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary Society, a School of Missions was recently conducted for eight weeks. On the first evening, Mrs. W. T. Elmore, of Lincoln, Nebr., of the Union Colleges of the Orient, gave an address. Each evening, the ladies served a luncheon preceding the study. While all were still seated around the tables a devotional service was conducted, following which was the separation into classes for adults, young men, young women, juniors and primaries. There were about 125 enrolled and the enthusiasm was maintained to the end. As a climax, the class of young women, W. W. G. girls, presented the missionary drama, "Two Masters," which appeared in THE BAPTIST some months ago. They are to repeat it at a church service. They have also been invited to give it in neighboring towns. Recently, the church had as its guest a grandson of Adoniram Judson, Rev. A. C. Hanna, who brought messages of power. The pastor, Rev. D. I. Coon, has been doing work under the promotion board, having been a district director.

A recent communication from Pres. John Alexander Frey, of the Baptist Theological Seminary in Riga, indicates that considerable difficulty is being experienced in the denomination, owing to the Pentecostal movement. It seems that several students have been compelled to leave the seminary owing to pressure on the part of their parents who are making preparations to escape from the terror of the Anti-Christ and are selecting Brazil as the place of hiding, identifying this with the wilderness mentioned in the book of Revelation. Pres. Frey also writes that new students have been admitted to take the places of those who left, so that the work of the seminary goes on with unabated vigor and enthusiasm.

expected themselves to receive instruction in these matters. The pastor is, of course, the proper person to give such instruction, and every year a class for teachers should be held, which all new teachers should be expected to attend.

Another great task awaiting us is that of furnishing for our young people an adequate education in Christian faith and practice. One fruitful cause of our present failure is that, for the want of careful instruction, we are allowing our young people to grow up with the vaguest possible conceptions of Christian truth and conduct. The confusion of thought at present existing among them, both as to what they believe and as to why they believe it, would be almost incredible if its prevalence were not beyond contradiction. The lamentable fact is that the large majority of young people in our Sunday schools to-day possess no first-hand, intelligent hold of Christianity—either of what it teaches, or of what its acceptance involves in practice, or of the firm and stable grounds on which both teaching and practice have been founded. We are losing numbers of men and women who, once within the sphere of the Sunday-school's influence, and rich in the latent possibilities of their character, are, chiefly for the want of proper and timely instruction, forsaking even the ethical ideals of the Christian faith. Our evangelism must be accompanied by a training that will render our young people, whose hearts have been won for Christ, intelligent and competent guardians of the deposit entrusted to them. The treasures of wisdom and knowledge that are in Christ Jesus call for such exponents.

Which is the Better Advertisement? And Why?

Probably your answer to the first question will be correct.

But are you sure WHY one is better than the other?

Some time, knowing why may mean the difference between success and failure in a service, a sermon, a campaign, a financial appeal, or an evangelistic effort. There is a psychological law involved. The psychology of advertising is not mere theory.

Advertising, however, is only a fraction of the Church Publicity program, although its fundamental principles are valid for every form of printed preaching.

The Correspondence Course in Religious Publicity conducted by Rev. Charles A. McAlpine covers the subject comprehensively and practically. These lessons are based on lectures delivered at the Rochester and Colgate Theological Seminaries.

President Barbour says: Practically every phase of religious publicity has been covered, and in a manner so clear, so concise, and so suggestive that the results cannot fail to be highly beneficial.

Dean Vickert says: You certainly made us all feel the importance of getting before the public what the churches have to offer and that there is a wise and effective way of doing this.

Our Book Shelf

Daniel's Half Week Now Closing and Our Glorious Hope, by J. J. Ross, pastor Second Baptist Church, Chicago. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. Price first volume, $1; second, $1.25.

The two books are just published. The author intimates that one supplements the other on subjects closely related. This review accedes to the suggestion. The busy pastor of Second Church came from Canada to the States only a few years ago. Since his arrival he has ministered to a large and prosperous church and has prepared four popular books for publication; he is a professor in the Northern Baptist Seminary and appears constantly as a lecturer at Winona and religious conventions. In book and lecture he specializes as an expositor in biblical literature and in discussing problems of living interest in modern religious life and thought. He represents conservative views, but is far from being an antiquary or reactionary. In his critical biblical expositions he does not aim for a technical examination of manuscript and texts, though he often considers terms in their original sources. The authorized and revised versions, preferably the latter, are accepted as sufficiently authoritative. He is not indifferent to the views of eminent scholars on disputed texts and interpretations, but does not quote them extensively to approve or dissent from them. The volume on "Daniel's Half-Week" is based on Daniel 9:24-27. According to the author the period of "seventy weeks" represents the time from the Babylon captivity to the second coming of Christ. The first half of the seventieth week is from the birth to the death of Jesus and the second half represents the Christ-dispensation, including his second epiphany closing the "age of grace." The cryptic prophesies of Daniel reveal the plans of God in human history, especially in their relations to the Jews and the Christ-dispensation. Our space does not permit a further analysis of the work. The views and conclusions of the writer are left to the judgment of the reader. As a literature it is the ablest from the pen of the popular author. In spirit it is ironic toward opposite views; doctrinal rather than controversial. While the view of the writer is never uncertain he is not dogmatic but constructive. He does not notice the critics who maintain that the cryptic prophesies of Daniel may be codal symbols convenient in exilic conditions, referring to local and temporary events. Those critics would aver that the author himself admits difficulties which create differences among scholars and suggest uncertainties, and that interpretations, however erudite, are not necessarily proofs, nor are inferences conclusive evidence; but criticisms are for the controversialist and are foreign to the purpose of this review. After reading the book "from cover to cover" we confess a great satisfaction with and profit from its contents. Its expositions are sometimes ingenious, but always ingenuous; its historical surveys are as interesting as they are informing; its loyalty to the inspired Word is invigorating and its optimism is inspiring.

The volume "Our Glorious Hope" is a complement to the foregoing one and is wholly given to discussing the second coming of Christ. A few features of the book are conspicuous. The sole authority of the writer is the Bible, either version. Occasionally he seeks shades of definitions from the original Greek when he is exegetical and critical. There is no flavor of controversy or polemics; it is a consistently constructive discussion for instruction and inspiration. Without comment on the views of the author we record him the credit of presenting one of the most readable, lucid and interesting treatises on this subject it has been our fortune to see. It has none of the pious rhapsodies and visionary flamboyancy which sometimes mark discussions of this sacred theme, but it is a systematized, clean-cut and comprehensive work that grips attention and instructs the reader whether or not he agrees with the presentations. The introduction of Prof. A. T. Robertson gives a keynote to the discussion. The contents summarized are: Chapter 1, a negative definition of the subject—what it is not; Chapter 2, an explanation of the nature of "hope" as presented in the Scriptures by prophet, apostle and Jesus himself; Chapter 3, the warrant for the "hope." The last two chapters discuss the content and influence of the Great Expectation and power over those who cherish it. The interpretations of the author will be criticized by some. For instance, in discussing the "signs of his coming" in Matthew 24, referring to the disturbances of the heavenly bodies, sun, moon and stars, instead of regarding these figures as hyperboles common to the Hebrew seer-poet when describing unusual events, he interprets them as quasi literal. We agree with the writer that eschatological events cannot be presented in precise terminologies nor in terms of time and space; much is done if the sequence of events can be reasonably conserved. The last two chapters are a fit climax to the treatise. Chapter 4 presents the "content" of the "glorious hope," with a glow and rapture that is justifiable. The last chapter considers the influence of the "hope" on the lives of Christians and in stimulating consecration and zeal of the church. The author writes: "There are three classes of people who become alarmed by the preaching and teaching of our Lord's second coming—the false professors of Christianity, the idle Christians and those who constitute the godless social order." We venture this comment: If presentations of the subject by some of its over-zealous friends were made with the ability and in the spirit of this author no "alarm" would ensue, and even if the presentation were not fully accepted as it is here given, it is so interesting, instructive and aglow with inspiration to work and wait for his coming that all who "love his appearance" will welcome these inspiring books.

"It Is to Laugh"

Hostess: "It was most amusing last night. I'd no idea your husband was such a brilliant after-dinner speaker."

Visitor: "Ah, but you should hear him before breakfast!" Punch.

Boy to his Dad: "Dad, can you sign your name with your eyes shut?"

His Dad: "Certainly."
Boy: "Well, then, shut your eyes and sign my report card."

A station master was suddenly alarmed by hearing a terrific crashing on the platform.

Rushing out of his office, he was just in time to see a train disappearing around the curve, while among a number of overturned cream cans at the extreme end of the platform there sprawled a batless and disheveled young man.

"What's the matter? Was he trying to catch the train?" asked the bewildered station master of a small boy who was standing near by, gaping in wonderment.

"He did catch it," exclaimed the boy, "but it got away again."

There is something distinctly engaging about the statistics that follow, in the answer purported to have been made by a Jewish employer to a Christian employee who had dared to ask for a raise.

Said the Jew: "You're not worth it. There are 365 days in a year, and as this is Leap year there are 366. You only work eight hours a day, a third of twenty-four hours, so you only work 122 days. You don't work on Sundays, so that's another fifty-two days off, and leaves seventy. I give you a fortnight's holiday; that's another fourteen days off, and only leaves fifty-six. There are four legal holidays, that reduces it to fifty-two. You don't work on Saturday, as it is our Sunday. There are fifty-two Saturdays. Deduct these and the answer is nothing. No raise for you. Why, you don't work here at all."

THE SONG BOOK WITHOUT A PEER

"I was delighted to go through the book, page by page, spending several hours with the material therein, and I want to congratulate you upon the splendid service which you have rendered in behalf of the Sunday School and Young People's Organizations. Your book has my hearty endorsement, and I shall do all within my power to push it, as the best hymn book embodying those principles of worship which shall revolutionize both our Sunday School and Young People's Organization, and imbue them with a greater spirit than they have at the present time." OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

THE MEDIOCRE STUDENT OF MUSIC

Let us consider the mediocre pupil. Sooner or later his teachers must come to know his limitations. He may love music, but he will never develop mastery of technique, or brilliancy of interpretation, or ability to compose. He may nevertheless derive some enjoyment from music, and if he has learned simple, melodious, tune-ful—"pretty,"—pieces, he may be able to give some pleasure to his family and his friends. As a mere business proposition, his parents may reasonably expect some such return on their investment. Too often, however, this pupil is kept drilling on scales and chromatics and sonatas, and other useful musical essentials until, if he is an intelligent young person, he realizes that he can never hope to master them. Then he joins the ranks of the discouraged. But to a degree this state of affairs may be prevented if such pupils are taught good simple music within the range of their abilities. Many, indeed, are the teachers who recognize this fact and act accordingly. But the practice needs to be more widespread. The good teacher knows that a discouraged pupil reflects discredit on his professional ability; he must strive to keep the pupil interested, though he remains, alas! uninteresting.

And one remedy is the consideration of individual abilities as well as individual reasons for the pursuit of musical studies. Not the laying down of certain sets of exercises and scales which must be followed by every pupil, talented and untalented alike, not the thought always of the needs of the concert stage, will bring the best results, but a realization that many are able or even wish to learn only the simpler things, and a proper provision for the needs of the less talented, will doubtless help to lessen discouragement and disinterestedness among music pupils. Let them develop to the limit what skill they may possess, but do not expect the impossible of them. Recognize as early as possible their limitations and strive to teach them no more than they are capable of learning. Perhaps we shall hear less often the remark "Oh, yes, I studied music for some time but I never play any more" when teachers more generally realize that even the mediocre musician finds, and may even provide, musical recreation in musical re-creation. And if in his student days he is permitted to learn the best of the simpler music, he may longer enjoy his meager ability—perhaps a poor thing, but his own, and, since it contributes to the joy of living, something to be treasured.—The Musical Leader.

MUSIC REVIEW

From Carl Fischer, New York.

Rejoice, RejoiceLester ($60)
Greater Love Hath No Man . . .Lester ($60)

Two recently issued extracts from the well-known and successful cantata by this composer, "The Triumph of the Greater Love." The first-named is a very brilliant, but not difficult, duet for soprano and alto, with an effective accompaniment, and showy voice parts. It is especially suitable for the Easter morning service; but would be fitting wherever a joyous duo is desirable. The other title is a melodious sacred song, for Lent or Memorial or general use. It is published in two keys, for high and for low voice; the range is not extensive, it is singable and devotional; a valuable addition to the rather small array of effective and intrinsically worth while music for such occasions.

From J. Fischer & Bro., New York.

Awake, My Soul, AriseWitter ($50)
An Easter AlleluiaGaines ($60)

Good new issues of Easter music have not been very plentiful this season, for some unknown reason. Above are listed two exceptions. The first is a vigorous solo, music with a thrilling sweep and ecstatic climax, just the thing for the Easter service offertory. As usual, it is published in two keys for the convenience of the singing fraternity. The "Alleluia" is a fine setting of a stirring text for two voices with organ accompaniment. It is a very individual number, dramatic in its first section, rising to a high level of inspirational melody at the glittering climax. I have an idea that this title appears on many service lists this Eastertide!

From The White-Smith Co., Boston, Mass.

Hear thou, weary traveller . . .Huerter ($60)

A new sacred song which should be of high value to all singers interested in novelties for use in church service. The reverent and inspiring poem is by Maude H. Lyman, and is no small factor in determining the value of the song. Mr. Huerter is too much of a veteran in the field of song writing to allow traps for innocent singers to mar his work—the writing is sane, musically and appealing. The range called for is moderate, and the accompaniment is effective and well-set for either piano or organ. The song closes with a rousing climax which comes naturally without any sense of strain or artificiality.

CHILDREN'S SONGS

The Willis Music Company, Cincinnati, O.

Songs of the Seasons.

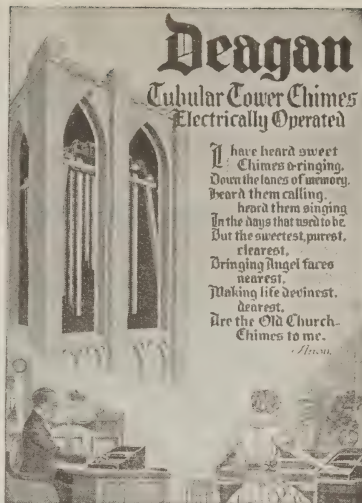

Published by Ruth S. Porter, Crafton, Pa.

Songs for Little Folks.

One of the most precious memories of childhood is the song time, just at twilight, when brothers and sisters gathered around the piano and sang, just before mother shepherd them all off to bed. One can hardly overestimate the culture value of home singing—hymn singing, too.

Two charming little books of children's songs have been published recently which just fill the need for tuneful, moving, simple music that is childlike, but not childish. "Songs for Little Folks" and "Songs of the Season" are books in which two sisters, Miss Olif Stephens and Mrs. Ruth Stephens Porter, have collaborated, one writing the words and the other the music. There is a whimsical note about the verses that is perfectly reflected in the music. The child mind will rejoice to find itself reflected in these lovely songs.

More and more music appreciation is being fostered by community choruses, or bona fide choral societies which began as community choruses. To know something of the great masters, and to have explained the real purpose and intent of great music, constitute a short cut for singing organizations to improve their interpretation and to strengthen their sincerity.

Tower Chimes are the Memorial Sublime

Their location becomes a landmark; the sublimity of their music is in harmony with man's feelings of reverence—an outpouring of musical solemnity and worship.

Just the more touch of a finger upon the electric keyboard in the organist's console, or the minister's study, brings forth the full power of the magnificent, sweet yet sonorous tones of Deagan Chimes.

What more fitting memorial, what greater philanthropy could be bestowed upon any community than the installation of a set of Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes? May we send you more complete information?

An Open Letter to Northern Baptists

from the Finance Committee of the Northern Baptist Convention*

The Finance Committee of the Northern Baptist Convention makes the following statements concerning the financial situation which now confronts our denomination:

1. The budgets of all organizations participating in the New World Movement, including the budget of the General Board of Promotion, amount to $12,500,000 for the current year. A budget for this amount was recommended by the Finance Committee and approved by the Convention at Des Moines.
2. The amount due on pledges this year, viz., $11,800,000, together with the estimated income from matured annuities, legacies, and income on invested funds of $800,000, make a total expectancy for the year of $12,600,000. It was on the basis of this expectancy that the total combined operating budgets of $12,500,000 for the year were approved.
3. It was contemplated at Des Moines, when these budgets were approved, that new pledges and cash to care for the extra needs of the denomination this year would be secured during the year from churches which had not previously participated in the movement in a large way. These needs have been explained by the Northern Baptist Laymen's Council. To meet them calls for full payment of the amount due on pledges and new cash subscriptions by April 30th aggregating $6,737,561.
4. At its annual meeting in Indianapolis last November, the General Board of Promotion took action which makes it possible for all contributors who desire to designate their gifts to any given organization or group of organizations to do so, with the assurance that such gifts will be paid in full in addition to the pro-rata share paid to the organization, or group of organizations, from all undesignated gifts. This makes it possible for all our people to co-operate heartily and generously in supporting those features of the work in which they are most interested.
5. The Finance Committee wishes to call attention to the fact that the obligations which the denomination is now being asked to pay by April 30th, cover, first of all, full provision for all operating budgets, aggregating $12,500,000 and also provision for the amount required to take care of certain non-recurring obligations. These obligations constitute a debt of honor which the denomination must meet.
6. Your Finance Committee believes it would be a great misfortune to the denomination in all its missionary, philanthropic and educational work to be obliged, right in the midst of its forward movement program, to curtail its work. A policy of curtailment, beyond that of reducing all expenditures to the lowest point consistent with efficiency, would greatly discourage our workers in all fields and would inevitably react unfavorably upon the work of all our churches at home.
7. Through a full and hearty recognition of our stewardship as a people to whom have been committed obligations for world service, we are abundantly able to meet these needs by April 30th, 1922.

of Brown University

An Outside View

By Bishop FRANCIS J. McCONNELL of the Methodist Church

THE above articles are the first of a notable series beginning publication in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY on "The Future of the Denominations." This discussion of fundamental questions will deal with the basic structure of the church and will lead up to no less searching an inquiry than this: Is the church as we now have it a competent organ of religion as we now conceive it? Other articles will appear on:

The Future of the Methodists

Inside View, by DR. ERNEST F. TITTLE, minister of Methodism's Cathedral church at Evanston, Chicago.

Outside View, by DR. WILLIAM E. BARTON, a Congregationalist, moderator of the Congregational National Council.

The Future of the Congregationalists

Inside View, by DR. ALBERT PARKER FITCH, professor of the History of Religion, Amherst College.

Outside View, by DR. LYNN HAROLD HOUGH, a Methodist, minister Central church, Detroit.

The Future of the Episcopalians

Inside View, by DR. SAMUEL McCOMB, dean of Cambridge Divinity School.

Outside View, by DR. PETER AINSLIE, a Disciple, president Association for the Promotion of Christian Unity.

The Future of the Presbyterians

Inside View, by DR. CLELAND M. McAFEE, professor in McCormick Theological Seminary.

Outside View, by DR. ORVIS F. JORDAN, a Disciple, minister First church, Evanston.

The Future of the Disciples of Christ

Inside View, by DR. W. E. GARRISON, dean Disciples Divinity House, The University of Chicago.

Outside View, by DR. JOSEPH FORT NEWTON, minister Church of the Divine Paternity, New York, City.

Other Denominations—UNITARIAN, LUTHERAN, ROMAN CATHOLIC, FRIENDS, and still others—will be included in later announcements. The examination will be carried to the very foundations of the denominational system. Pro and con, the relation of denominationalism to Christianity will be considered, introduced by two articles:

"An Apologetic for the Denomination"

By BISHOP THOMAS NICHOLSON, of the Methodist church.

"The Denomination as a Hindrance to Religion"

By DR. OZORA S. DAVIS, president Chicago Theological Seminary.

A fine list of subscribers together with a check for $86 just received from the First Church, Topeka, Kan. This list was sent in by J. F. Kaho, vocational counselor of the Topeka Public Schools and chairman of the education committee of the First Church. It is encouraging to see the growing recognition of the value of the denominational periodicals in building a denominationally intelligent church. Pastor, what can you do with a church which is ignorant of the history, accomplishments and plans of the denomination to which it belongs? If you do not have a committee on education why not have the church appoint one at once?

Killam's Kollum

Autocratic Democrats

How much we all like authority! Most of us believe in democracy as a slogan and in autocracy as a method. Autocracy gets results. It stifles criticism. It cannot make mistakes for the will of the autocrat is law. We have known ministers, deacons, trustees and committees elected by popular vote and supposedly responsible to the local church who so magnified their offices that they became in effect dictators. They could bridge no modifications of their plans even by the body which gave them existence. Democracy created an autocracy and knew not what it was doing. It is sometimes worth while to call our over-lords to an accounting. THE BAPTIST is for the destruction of czarism in both church and state.

Good Work

Harry S. Shaffer, of Springfield, Ill., a member of one of the smaller churches, a few days ago sent a list of ten subscribers to THE BAPTIST, nine of which were new. All that is necessary is an interested person who will put the same thought into the task of selling the denominational journals that he puts into any other job where salesmanship is required.

A Doubtful Asset

We invited into our pulpit upon one occasion a brother from a rescue mission. He spent the first five or ten minutes of his time apologizing because he did not have as bad a story of a wasted life to tell about as some of his co-workers. Since when did the story of a wasted and broken life become necessary as a preparation for preaching the gospel? Let us thank God that he can and does save some men and women who have been in the very gutter but on the other hand let us guard against the slightest feeling that the sowing of wild oats is essential to success in the ministry. A roll call of Christian workers will reveal the fact that the majority of them accepted Christ in the days of their youth before the evil days came. THE BAPTIST is giving a large place to the boys and girls, the young men and young women in its pages.

Roger Williams Would Approve

One of the churches in Providence, through Missions, sent a list of nineteen subscriptions to THE BAPTIST, seventeen of which were new. We appreciate the cooperation of Missions. It may be of interest to our readers to know that THE BAPTIST has sent to Missions since Jan. 1, 2,237 annual subscriptions or an average of 150 per week. It might be worse.

Fresh from the Field

The Missionary Conference called at the La Salle Hotel, Chicago, May 3 and 4, to consider the advisability of resuming the activities of the Laymen's Missionary Movement will convene at luncheon, May 3. The conference will be called to order by Mr. George H. Stineback, vice-president of the Howard Severance Company, publishers of Chicago, and chairman of the committee on arrangements. Dr. William S. Abernethy of Washington, D. C., President Harding's pastor, will be the speaker. The afternoon and evening and the following morning will be given to frank discussion. At a general luncheon Thursday noon, a larger number of laymen of Chicago will be present, the speaker being Dr. James L. Barton of Boston, general secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Among the prominent leaders who will be present are: President J. C. Acheson, Pittsburgh; Dr. Herbert S. Johnson, Boston; Dr. William E. Lampe, Philadelphia; Mr. D. D. Spellman, Detroit, and Mr. W. C. Coleman, Wichita, Kansas. The conference is being limited to a comparatively small number and is self-entertaining.

The corner stone of the addition to the First Church, Evanston, Ill., was laid the afternoon of April 9. The invocation was offered by Rev. Arthur Rogers, of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, Evanston. The principal address was given by President Harry Pratt Judson, of the University of Chicago; words of appreciation from the city were spoken by President Walter Dill Scott of Northwestern University. The corner stone was laid by Benjamin Greene Pierson, aged twelve, the grandson of Dr. B. A. Greene, pastor of the church from 1897 to 1909. The closing prayer was offered by Rev. Francis C. Stifler, of the Wilmette Church.

Central District of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society is to hold its annual meeting at First Church, Battle Creek, Mich., May 3-5. Fine program. Addresses by national officers, district officers and home and foreign missionaries; pageant by Battle Creek young women; also, a Central District banquet. Sessions begin at 2:30 p.m., Wednesday, May 3. Delegates send names at once for entertainment to Mrs. G. D. Cooley, 39 Walnut Ave., Battle Creek, Mich.

After several weeks of consideration of the matter, and upon the urgent request of friends who sought to have him place his name before the voters of the Sixth Congressional District of Michigan, composed of Ingham, Livingston, Oakland, Genesee and part of Wayne Counties, on April 3, Director Grant M. Hudson formally announced his candidacy for Congress to, succeed Congressman Patrick H. Kelley. Mr. Hudson is eminently qualified for this important office, from long experience in public affairs. He was a member of the Michigan Legislature in 1905-7, and the special session of 1906, which enacted important railroad legislation and general primary laws; was state superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, 1913 and 1919; and served for a brief term on the State Industrial Accident Board before being called by his denomination to the present position of general director of the Michigan Baptist Convention. Mr. Hudson's work for the past fifteen years has made him familiar with all parts of the state. He knows Michigan thoroughly and knows intimately the Sixth District. Immediately that Mr. Hudson's announcement was made, letters were received from pastors and friends not only from the district, but from every part of the state, expressing their regret at the possibility of losing him from the leadership of the state work, but assuring him of their interest and hearty support.

The First Church of Prescott, Ariz. on Easter received six into the church by baptism, and four from sister Baptist churches. The church has paid almost $3,000 to date on its New World Movement pledges, and is going to make a determined effort, in spite of the continued financial depression, to pay up all arrears. The pastor, E. J. Dunlap, tendered his resignation, to take effect June 1, to re-enter his former field of evangelism and Bible teaching. Mr. Dunlap will spend the summer in his home state of Pennsylvania, taking whatever meetings he has time for there, and will then probably locate permanently on the Pacific Coast.

The Carleton College Mission drive directed by Mr. James Robertson, president of the Y. M. C. A., and Miss Margaret Scheman, president of the Y. W. C. A., is again successful and the $1,500 is assured for educational work at Fenchow-fu, Shansi, China. This sum means no little sacrifice on the part of many students in these days of financial depression. There are twenty-six Carleton graduates serving on foreign mission fields or at home on furloughs.

Alberto Barocio, member of the Consultative Department of the Mexican Government, working as advisor on engineering questions and Professor of Sanitary Engineering and Hydraulic Machinery at Mexico's National University, College of Engineering, Mexico City, was a guest at the Home Mission rooms while en route as special representative of the Mexican Government to the International Railroad Congress which will meet in Rome on April 18. After the Congress is over he will go to Paris to study some lighthouse problems for the Mexican Government. While a student at the university he spent some time working as secretary in the office of Rev. George H. Brewer, general missionary in Mexico. He is a progressive young man of the type upon which Mexico in the coming years will depend to lead her out of her social and economic difficulties. He is an active Christian and member of the First Baptist Church of Mexico City.

The New York Baptist Social Union will hold its 312th meeting at the Park Avenue Church, 64th Street and Park Avenue, on Thursday, May 11, seven o'clock. Mr. Arthur E. Bestor, president of the Chautauqua Institution, recently returned from an extended tour of the Eastern Mediterranean, will speak on the Near East and America. Tickets at $2 each may be secured from Mr. Chester H. Stevens, Room 97, 140 West 42d Street, New York City; telephone Bryant 3969. Reception and inspection of the building from six to seven o'clock.

The Baptist Church of La Salle, Ill., at a meeting on March 28, voted "that the existing pastorate of the church be dissolved." This action, taken without a negative vote, followed presentation of a resolution expressing the belief of the church that such action was for the best interests of all concerned. The pastor, Rev. W. J. R. Simmons, had previously been asked for his resignation, but had refused to accede to the request. Mr. Simmons has been in La Salle for some three years. His preaching and general attitude has for months been the cause of friction in the church, inasmuch as many of the members did not sympathize with his views, and the matter was finally brought to a head by his action in bringing into his pulpit, against the wish of the church, of a so-called "ex-monk" who made a violent attack upon the morals of Catholic priests and orders. La Salle is preeminently Catholic and this action stirred community feeling to the breaking point. The La Salle Church is now anxious to settle a man who is a thoroughgoing Baptist and in sympathy with the denominational program. Delegates to the convention at Des Moines last June will remember Mr. Simmons as one of the men who were conspicuous at one of the most exciting meetings of that gathering.

The Memorial Church, Johnstown, Pa., at a recent business meeting decided to erect a modern church plant to house the church and Sunday school. The Memorial Church, which is a union of the First and Main Street churches, owns two downtown sites and plans to erect a plant in keeping with the needs of the city and this great denomination. R. A. Gibson is chairman of the building committee, and the secretary is Ewart L. Roberts, 201 Stonycreek St.

The following telegram has been received from Dr. J. Y. Aitchison under date of April 21, 1922: "Have received contribution half million dollars. Designated object included New World Movement. Applying fifteen million. Announcement of gift is made as encouragement to those who are working with us to raise fifteen million by May 1. Decided upward turn during last few days. We must go on to victory."

The average Sunday morning attendance at the Baptist Temple, Rochester, N. Y., for a period of five months ending March 31 was 717, while the average Sunday-evening attendance for the same period was 1,368. The auditorium seats but 1,200. As the pastor says, "It pays to advertise."

God Is Not Far

*G*OD is not far from any one of us;
The wild flower by the wayside speaks His love;
Each blithesome bird bears tidings from above;
Sunshine and shower His tender mercies prove,
And men know not His voice.

*God is not far from any one of us;
He speaks to us in every glad sunrise;
His glory floods us from the noonday skies;
The stars declare His love when daylight dies,
And men know not His voice.*

*God is not far from any one of us;
He watches o'er His children day and night;
On every darkened soul He sheds His light;
Each burdened heart He cheers, and lends
His might
To all who know His voice.*

Partners with Christ

THE Lord Jesus has not placed his disciples in an inferior position. He does not call us servants; rather does he give to us the holy name of friends, for he has opened his heart to us on all those things which the Father has committed to him. Moreover, he has shown the highest kind of friendship by committing to us the carrying through of his program. He has no other plan in mind. If the task he inaugurated is completed, it will be because we or other people like us complete it. He is depending on us.

There is such a thing as a fellowship of the heart of Christ. He admits us into the secret places of his friendship. As the disciples whom he had sent out two by two into all the villages came back and talked over with him the things they had seen and done, so we may commune with him of everything which comes into the circle of our interests. Nothing that is of concern to us is foreign to him. He invites us to open our hearts and in turn he opens all the treasures of his mind and his heart to those whom he calls his friends.

There is also a fellowship of the Master's vision. He saw in the distance a new world in which righteousness dwells. He did not hesitate to speak of the kingdom of heaven and to teach us to pray that it may come and that God's will may be done upon the earth even as it is done in heaven. Obviously he would not have us pray for it unless we are willing also to plan and to work for it. But first he takes us up into the heights with him and shows us all the kingdoms of the world, teaches us that they belong to God, and not to Satan, and lets us dream of the glory which the land and sea may not claim but which shall be shed upon the earth when the new day comes.

A fellowship of prayer is made manifest when one catches this vision. For how can one venture and achieve unless first of all he has related himself, as the Master did, simply, humbly and powerfully with the Father to whom nothing is impossible and in whose presence and service is to be found the perfect bliss.

Mention is made in the New Testament of a fellowship of suffering, the intimation being given that in some way the disciple may fill out that which is lacking in the sufferings of Christ, becoming the inheritor, as it were, of Jesus' passion for men and of his willingness, yes even his constant desire, to give himself for men. Suffering and redemption are always closely related, and one is touching on holy matters when he speaks of partaking with Christ in such things. And yet there can be no question that as this becomes a fellowship of service, Jesus designated just such a thing for his friends, "As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you."

Jesus Christ was among men as one who served. He did not seek the high place except as one came to that through service. He did not look for exaltation except as the humble shall be exalted. The divinest place in all the world to him was the place in which needy men could be met by the service which it was his privilege to render. And this tradition of service he passed along to his disciples. When after his death they were scattered, they went everywhere preaching the gospel. Hardship and even death was welcomed by them. Dangers were despised if only they could bear their witness to the Lord whom they loved and to the new life and hope which he had brought to the world.

Shall we not believe that these men and women who were nearest in time rightly interpreted Jesus? Must we not think that the eager joy with which they gave themselves was a reflection of his spirit? And shall we not know, therefore, that as we reach out, whether in our own land or in other lands, with the message of Christ we have become partners with him in the finest and truest sense?

In our great modern task of evangelizing the world, Jesus has done his full share. Nothing remains for him to accomplish except what is to be done through his partners. And we Northern Baptists, among others, are his partners. We have felt this to such an extent that we have dotted the world with our mission stations and with our missionaries. We have prayed also and given. Just recently we have been emphasizing this latter matter of giving. The world war has greatly upset affairs all over the world, and brought new burdens upon the earthly partners in this great kingdom enterprise. Shall they resent this? Ought they not rather to rejoice in a new chance to show their devotion to their Lord. If he calls for our money in such sums as we have not given it in the past, shall we not gladly lay it at his feet? Certainly if we feel that he is depending upon us absolutely to meet the exigencies of the present hour the New World Movement will not fail for lack of what we can do and give.

In the few days which remain before the financial year of the Convention ends, it will be well for us to keep before us these three words—"Partners with Christ." He has mightily honored us by taking us into his fellowship. We shall certainly do our best not to fail him.

Editorial Comment

THE ELEVENTH HOUR

It is the eleventh hour and the fifty-ninth minute and almost the fifty-ninth second in the attempt of the New World Movement to come to the end of its fiscal year with debts paid and a reasonable hope for the future.

The period of discussion is now past. Action is the demand of the hour. Deeds will tell our love for the Lord far better than words.

Individuals who have not yet paid their pledges or who wish to make a thank-offering will do so at once. Churches which are delinquent have now the immediate duty and privilege of making good. The Lord stands by the treasury and looks with delight or sadness on the gifts cast in by his people. The time is short.

Our leaders have not been raising a false alarm. They are stirred to the depths of their soul by the possibilities which face them if the churches fail in this great crisis. They must not fail.

Brethren, let us all pray. Let us beseech our God who does so often impossible things to manifest his power among us once more. And let us labor with him in the task, even though this means sacrifice on a scale to which we are not accustomed. Let us work on and pray through. Then, whatever the outcome may be, we shall be able to stand in the presence of our Lord with clean hands and a true heart and do gladly the next thing he bids us.

THE PRACTICE OF THE FATHERS

The following is taken from The Continent, one of the most interesting of the Presbyterian papers published in this country. Baptists in view of present agitations will certainly be interested:

"No doctrinal test for admission to Methodist church membership, will be one of the biggest issues carried into the next Methodist Episcopal General Conference two years hence. Careful efforts to educate the clergy and laity of the denomination on this point are already afoot with the hope that a majority of delegates will be already convinced before the conference meets. If the movement succeeds, it will put Methodists on the same ground with Presbyterians in the matter of receiving members who confess their first faith. Applicants before a Presbyterian session confront no requirements except the summons to acknowledge Jesus Christ as Lord and Master. The same thing was true in Methodism up until 1864. But a new question was then introduced into the ritual for reception of members—the question whether the incoming member believed in the articles of religion of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Now it seems clear to a host of Methodists that the earlier fathers of the church were right and this innovation was wrong. It will certainly be a pleasure to Presbyterians to have Methodists come around again to the simple principle that it ought not to be harder to get into a church than it is to get into the kingdom of God. And it is certain that the good Lord doesn't withhold regenerating grace until people have adopted 'articles of religion.'"

The implication would seem to be that doctrinal instruction should largely be given after people have been received into the church rather than before. What do our Baptists think about this? Do our churches do well to demand more than credible evidence of the new birth and a sincere desire and determination to follow the Lord Jesus? Can we demand anything more than this of the multitudes of children who were received into our churches at Easter time? How many of us who, in our childhood, "assented" to articles of faith knew what we were doing? But we did know that we loved the Lord Jesus. We shall be greatly interested in the discussions when this matter gets to the General Conference.

THAT CONFERENCE PRAYER

Mingled motives doubtless are to be found in the criticism of the prayer offered by Dr. Abernethy at the opening of the Washington Conference. The fact that the name of Christ was not mentioned led to charges that the prayer had been censored, which was denied by Secretary Hughes, and to charges of lack of faithfulness against Dr. Abernethy. Just what the politicians had in mind we do not know; the extreme religionists who have forced their way into print we understand better. But we simply refuse to get excited. It is far more important that the prayer be in the spirit of Jesus than that his name shall often occur in it. Whatever critical individuals may do, we are sure that he will understand. And every reading of the prayer confirms us in the opinion that in it there breathes a spirit of love and devotion which are honoring to the name that is above every name.

A MINISTER'S ADVICE PRIVILEGED

Rev. W. S. Crandall of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., told a young woman who was about to be married of certain cripples and insane people in the family of the prospective bridegroom with the result that she changed her mind and did not marry the young man. The result was a suit for $5,000 for damages. The jury which heard the case refused to allow the claim, having decided that it was a part of a minister's duty to advise the members of his flock in such important life matters. Such a decision is both common-sense and desirable for the community. Slander may never be allowed, but the world would have come to a peculiar pass if it were decided that ministers and social workers could not point out to the people whom they serve dangers in contemplated courses of action.

THE KNIGHTS AND PELLETIER

Joseph C. Pelletier was, by unanimous vote of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, two of the justices of which are Catholics, removed from his position as prosecuting attorney in the city of Boston. During the long trial in which charges of extortion, corruption and conspiracy were made, the cry of religious bigotry which some men invariably raise in their own defense, was often heard. An echo of it is now making itself heard in the ranks of the Knights of Columbus of which Mr. Pelletier is supreme grand advocate. He is a candidate for reelection. One group in the order regards him as a victim of religious bigotry, while another thinks that his record shows him entirely unfit for the office he holds. The outcome will interest many besides Catholics. Among men who believe that a Catholic can do no wrong, the issue is naturally prejudged. But those who know that human frailty is confined to no one body are inclined to think that the Massachusetts Court did not act hastily or without adequate reason. Incidentally the reputation of the Knights of Columbus among those outside its ranks is likely to be a good deal affected by the action which is finally taken in this case. A defeat will help to prevent men caught in violation of the law from shielding themselves under the wings of some church.

THIS IS REAL GIVING

A pastor in Pennsylvania calls our attention to what he regards as a striking illustration of sacrificial giving. We will allow him to put the statement in his own words:

"It is a rural pastor and his wife. They have given two sons to the Baptist ministry. They have also given the remainder of a large family to some sort of good work. All their lives they have lived on a very, very small income; and yet have backed their children for a full and thorough education. Their pride has been that they have not been able to invest in much of anything but their children. During the war they had a little they had got together, which they invested in Liberty bonds. They carry no insurance. This is their account for last year—that is, the year closing April 1, 1922:

"Salary, including use of parsonage and extras, $1,294. Income from Liberty bonds, $150; income from literary work, $247; total income, $1,691.

"In addition to $150 invested in a certain orphaned boy—which amount is not counted—their investment in the Lord's work is as follows: Church improvement, $150; N. W. M. and church expenses, $89; incidental benevolences, about $75; evangelistic campaign, $5; printing bills for the church work, $6; gas and car wear in purely church work, $75; total, $400.

"Total income, $1,691. Total invested in benevolent work, $550."

This is by no means an isolated, though a striking case. Many pastors have shown similar devotion. And there have been laymen also who have measured up to the Lord's standard. And yet, when we find cases like this, we cannot help referring them to such of our laymen as occasionally exhort the pastors to exhibit the grace of generosity.

SMEARED WITH THE DOLLAR MARK

As the baseball season opens once more, and talk of holdouts fades away, and we are becoming more concerned with the performances of individual players than with the fabulous salaries they receive, salaries which in many cases are many times greater than those earned by our most useful citizens and public men, we are inclined to recommend the following paragraphs which appeared in Henry Ford's Dearborn Independent:

"From one end of the country to the other, the leading newspapers are giving columns of free space to the publication of articles designed to lull the suspicions and arouse the interest of the baseball public, so the private pocketbooks of owners of baseball teams may be lined again. Persons acquainted with the operation of the press would never accuse newspapers of being eleemosynary institutions; yet every year the great newspapers give free millions of dollars' worth of advertising space to professional baseball, while the amateur games, in which boys and men play on the sand-lots after school and work, receive a scant line or no attention at all.

"Professional baseball is a cold, hard business, in which the players are workingmen, compelled to labor daily at a routine employment, bound by fast rules, enforced by hard taskmasters, and hired by men who cast aside aged young men with a ruthlessness no other private employer would dare to exercise.

"School and sand-lot baseball, on the other hand, has the right to be known as America's national game. It is inspired by youth's natural ambition and energy and dedicated to health and sportsmanship.

"Athletic sports have had their highest development in America. But here, too, they have been capitalized in the most vicious manner. It is time to take the dollar sign off."

TURKEY LANDS ON TOP

If the agreement of so-called European statesmen stands, Turkey will win almost as much through defeat in the war as would have been hers in the case of victory. The conference of ministers which met in Paris proposes that Turkey shall hold Constantinople and a good section of Thrace, that Smyrna shall be restored to her and that the territory occupied by the Armenians shall be under her control. In other words, the unspeakable Turk will remain in Europe and be in a position where he can constantly embroil European politics.

What is the trouble? Just the old rivalry between Britain and France and Italy. If these powers, at the close of the war, had agreed on a policy the Turks would have been as docile as a flock of sheep. The moment the Turk discovered that he could continue to play the one nation against the other, just as of old, trouble was certain. And trouble means reaction and massacre. If there is anything perfectly clear it is that a new type of statesmanship is needed in Europe.

Men died to put an end to the sick man of Europe. The selfish ambitions of so-called Christian nations keep alive what is today one of the great open sores of the world.

HOW SHALL THEY EAT IF THEY CANNOT PLANT?

A recent cablegram received by the Near East Relief in New York City has these sentences:

"All village inhabitants expressed concern about securing seed and grain for spring planting. Hope is expressed that the Armenian government would obtain seed, particularly barley. The headman of the largest village said: 'If we can secure seed we shall be on our feet by midsummer. If we don't get seed, we are doomed to death.'"

If helping people to help themselves is the most fruitful kind of charity, the spring would seem to have opened an unusual opportunity to the American people.

Across Cactus Land

Children are growing up in rude huts, without school, without books, without Christ. How may we lead them into the larger life which is every man's just heritage?

By S. C. JACKSON

"TAKE the news of conditions in Mexico to our Christian sisters in America, and they will do the rest," say the Mexican women. Do we deserve such a tribute? Mexico seems such a remote, cornucopia-like place to us poor shut-ins behind office desks, kitchen stoves, or nursery cribs. We studied its history perhaps in high-school days, and remember it in connection with the autocratic Cortez and the Spanish conquest. All of us, at any rate, know it today as an unhappy state, racked by bloodshed, internal disorder and political confusion.

Mrs. George W. Coleman and Mrs. Katherine S. Westfall, the president and the executive secretary of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, have just returned from a trip to this greatly misunderstood land of Mexico, and such a thrilling tale of home mission achievement as they have to tell! Since it is not possible for all our Baptist constituency interested in the work to drop in at headquarters in New York for a friendly visit with them, perhaps the next best thing would be the report of a first-hand interview.

Northern Mexico, according to the returned travelers, is much like the desert of Arizona, with its long stretches of uncultivated land and little villages, its mountains in the distance, and its sunset skies, red and gold with the long grey and purple shadows over all. In the morning the sun comes up like a great vermillion ball, and at noon-day the sky is like a deep blue canopy. But the little huts along the road where the people live like animals, and great black-eyed children run barefoot, ragged and dirty, wring the heart and detract from one's enjoyment of the great outdoors. These children are growing up in huts made of scraps of corrugated iron, wood, straw and leaves, without schools, without books, and without Christ. How may we lead them into the larger life which is every man's just heritage?

At San Luis Potosi quite a crowd of bull-fighters trooped into the train, attracting considerable attention. The stations are picturesque with their many peddlers, fairly tripping over each other in an effort to display drawn work and curios, while always there rings on the air the famous cry of the Mexican vender, "Chile con carne, chile con carne!"

The far-famed Cathedral of Mexico, which cost $1,500,000, and whose altars and services are valued at as much again, presents an interesting study in contrasts. The beauty of the interior, the blank look on the faces of the worshipers, the hundreds of glowing candles—so impotent to help the surrounding misery—the confessional where the priest was dispensing pardon, but not the means of conquering sin—and yet nowhere the living Christ.

In Guadalupe, a dusty, dirty ride from Mexico City, is located our small day school, held in the church which has been divided by screens into two rooms. Guadalupe is the very heart and stronghold of Roman Catholicism in Mexico, and the center, as well, of all that is vile and corrupt. No one dares to walk the streets at night, for then vice and murder in grim company stalk the town. The wide streets are filled with peddlers selling candles, rosaries and souvenirs, and on feast days all sorts of gambling and drunkenness are in evidence. Our little church is holding up the light of the true gospel in a dark place. The school is called "The Star of Bethlehem," and there are fifty-four pupils enrolled. Nowhere on our whole field has there been greater persecution than in Guadalupe. The children are bright-faced, intelligent looking little Mexicans, and their work gives evidence of excellent teaching.

Primary School

We have recently rented a new building for our primary school in Mexico City, about six blocks from the church where Rev. Cavazos serves as pastor, and Dr. A. B. Rudd, of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, has an office. The school building has four rooms, a tiny patio, and quarters for the caretaker. It is painted a bright pink, as are so many of the houses in Mexico City, with doors, windows, and trimmings of a deeper shade of rose. The school is to be opened as soon as furniture can be secured, with Miss Carlotta Albornoz, a well-trained woman and a teacher of experience, in charge, and Miss Josephine Pliego as an assistant.

The size and beauty of the governor's mansion which we have rented for several years in Puebla, bursts on the newcomer as a surprise. Its corner location, facing the passerby, makes it most desirable; the teachers have large and comfortable quarters with simple and appropriate furniture; and the large inner patio, makes a delightful playground for the children at recess time. At present there are 125 day pupils, and ten boarding pupils, the latter in the normal and missionary training department. Miss Mabel Young is in charge of the school, and the other teachers include Miss May Gilbert, Miss Doris Frederickson and Miss Rudd. Every room was visited while the classes were in progress, and in the afternoon a "fiesta," or special program, was presented for the entertainment of the "Americanos." Dialogues, exercises and songs were the order of the day, and a native dance in costume by a small boy and a coquettish damsel was very amusing.

Our quaint little San Antonio Mission, known by the natives as "Martires de Tecubaya," is located in the slum district of Puebla. The neighborhood is extremely bad but the building, though old, was immaculately clean, in striking contrast to its surroundings. Seventy-five children, all of whom come from poor homes, went through an effective little program arranged by three native teachers. "These little missions hold the key to the future of Mexico," said Dr. Fowler. They need to be multiplied by the hundreds throughout Cactus Land.

Schools are the Seed

Monterey is distinguished in the eyes of Baptists by reason of the church there. It was organized by James Hickey in 1864—the first evangelical church in Mexico. It has a membership of 350 persons, and is entirely self-supporting—the first church in Mexico to reach this goal. The church has an excellent location opposite the market place and is a substantial stone building. But it is entirely too small for its active membership, and $10,000, American gold, has already been collected toward a new building.

Our school in Monterey is over forty years old, and is housed in a sadly inadequate rented building. Its 197 pupils fairly swarm over, like the liveliest kind of beehive. It deserves better quarters—and that, soon!

The problem in Mexico is the same which confronts us throughout Latin America—one of leadership. The work of evangelizing Mexico must be done by Mexicans themselves. And even this brief tour of inspection revealed the fact that everywhere our schools are proving the seed-corn from which new workers are springing.

As a result of Mrs. Coleman's and Mrs. Westfall's trip, the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society has been able to secure the beautiful and adequate governor's mansion in Puebla which has housed our school there since 1918 but whose lease was soon to expire. The property is valued at $75,000, although the Society secured it for considerably less, and its purchase has been made possible by designated gifts outside the operating budget of the society.

A new hour has struck for Mexico; the day of her awakening is at hand. She has thrown off the Spanish yoke, and is now endeavoring to throw off the yoke of Rome. Shall we not assist her to secure her emancipation?

A Present Help

By MARIE HOLMES

IT was the end of the dry season. The roads were thick with the dust of five rainless months. We had left Satribari about 5 A. M., with the first fourteen miles of our journey in a Ford, then tramped eleven miles along shadeless, dusty roads in the hottest part of the day, had another lift of twenty-four miles in the Ford, were delayed by a loose piston-rod bearing, and reached the end of the trunk road at dusk with a march of five miles yet to do, most of it through a forest reserve of such dense growth that in places, even at mid-day, there is the shade of dusk. A good bit of our way through the forest was marked by no path other than the stony bed of a little stream.

In the party there were teachers and five girls aged fourteen to seventeen years—girls who had been used to jungle and forests from childhood, though ordinarily villagers do not go through forests at night. A few miles outside the forest some one had pointed out the place where, a month before, a tiger had killed two men while they were burning the high jungle grass. The chauffeur was to have remained with the car in the village at the beginning of the forest but by mistake the coolies had carried his blankets, etc., along with our camp things which had gone earlier in the day, so the driver had to come along with us. This he was loath to do, as he was a city-bred boy and greatly exercised by the tiger story. Every few minutes he inquired how much farther we had to go; was all the way dense like the bit we were in? He had never known there were such forest jungles and pathless ways. The chauffeur is a Hindu.

Songful Courage

Singing hymns, we kept up courage as we trudged the several miles of forest. Then we entered a cleared space, beautiful in the light of a full moon. Suddenly we came upon a place where two paths crossed. The two girls who were most familiar with this section debated which path led to the village we were seeking. The girls decided to take the upper path. After following this path it disappeared in jungle grass and the girls confessed they did not know where we were.

In the fear of having to spend hours out in the night or of having to retrace our steps through the forest, the girls lent themselves to the panicky feeling that had been fostered by the chauffeur's fears.

Then we remembered whose we are and upon whose service we were journeying, so we knelt there in the moonlight and asked Him who guided Israel by a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, to direct us in the way of his choosing. "While they are yet speaking I will hear." As we were rising from our knees, before we were yet upon our feet, the sharp report of a gun came from the front of us and to the right. After one dazed minute, of slow conception we realized that the report was the gun signal with which the keeper of stores for the Christian Association announces the closing of shop for the night, that we had but to go back to the crossing, take the path leading down to the right and we would reach our desired haven—the village of Kampaduli, where the Kamrup Christian Association was in session. We were conscious neither of weariness nor hunger, but followed the path singing with hearts and voices, "He Leadeth Me," "What a Wonderful Saviour," "What a Friend We Have In Jesus."

As we neared the village I dropped to the back of the line and remarked to the Hindu chauffeur in whose pantheon there are more than 300,000,000 gods but not one a "very present help in trouble," "There is no other god that can deliver after this sort."

Baptists and the Press

Why should Baptists be behind all other great denominations in the matter of advertising?

By J. H. HOLLINGSWORTH

THE writer has been a Baptist pastor for forty-five years, and is still preaching, marrying people, and burying the dead. He has always believed in printer's ink, and has endeavored to practice what he believed. After graduating from Newton he became pastor of one of the large churches in the state of New York. Churches of all denominations there were very conservative, and advertising subjects for sermons had not even been dreamed of. The new pastor, however, nothing daunted, launched out with elaborate First Baptist Church notes in both city papers. These notes were made fun of by both outsiders and insiders. Some one suggested to one of the deacon's wives that she have her name recorded in the First Baptist Church notes; so she complained dreadfully about those "pesky" notes, and wanted them discontinued. Despite much complaint and ridicule, the notes appeared in leaded type every week. The pews of the First Baptist meeting-house were soon filled and chairs were much in evidence to accommodate the throngs that came to witness the weekly baptisms. It goes without saying that in less than two years other church notes began to appear. At the end of that pastorate, consisting of six years, there were Methodist, Presbyterian, Lutheran and, in fact, almost all kinds of church notes. Even the pastor of another Baptist church who had come out in an open letter in opposition to the notes finally fell into line. All this did not occur, however, until the First Church got such momentum that it easily led in that city in every good work, and it holds that enviable position today. These observations lead up to what the writer wishes to emphasize.

Printer's Ink

We as Baptists are not leading in the matter of printer's ink, as we should be. To thousands in the world we are practically an unknown denomination. Many who know our name know but little about what we are doing. Why not arise and sound the trumpet, not for vain glory but for the glory of God and the good of humanity? Here are some things worthy of world-wide consideration. The president of the United States, who occupies the most exalted position in the world, is a Baptist; so is the secretary of state, and other members of the cabinet, to say nothing about the governor of Ohio, who is with us in denominational relations. We have the largest university in the United States, and our other schools are not a whit behind the very best. Our missionary endeavor at home and in foreign lands is second to none. Our history in this respect is enriched by such illustrious names as Judson, Carey, Clough, and a host of others, both men and women, whose names we love to honor.

The history of Baptists in the United States is eternally allied with the history of our loved country. Roger Williams stands head and shoulders above all legislators of the past, he being the apostle of religious liberty. In the early history of our country Baptists and Quakers were whipped, but, thank God, their names are entwined as beautiful garlands in the history of our native land. In the aggregate our denomination is the richest in the world today; and per capita we are raising more money for missionary endeavor than many of the more pretentious denominations.

When Methodist conferences are held, their proceedings are highly advertised, not by a few inches, but often a half column is occupied in our great dailies. The Episcopalians are still greater trumpeters than the Methodists, especially was this true during the time of J. Pierpont Morgan who put up much of the cash for space in the big papers. And last, but by no means least, there are the Catholics, who can beat the world stirring up a tempest, and attracting attention to themselves with advertisements and with surplised pageantry. All this helps to put momentum into pedobaptist ranks, and renders their work less difficult.

Why should Baptists be behind all the great denominations in the matter of advertising? With all due modesty considered, this scribe is of the opinion that what our loved denomination accomplishes is worth while, and should be so placed on record that mortals could read as they run. During the meetings at Des Moines little was known of what was being accomplished. From this time on let it be known that the Northern Baptist Convention at its late meeting elected a woman for president and that she is the first lady of the Baptist denomination. The writer knows whereof he is speaking for he has been entertained in her home. She knows how to keep house, as well as she knows how to preside over great mixed assemblies. Concluding this article the writer wishes to put himself on record as favoring an efficient press committee for every Baptist meeting of importance from this time on.

The Best Method for Souls

ONE of the liveliest departments of the Missionary Review of the World is that called "Best Methods," which is conducted by Mrs. E. C. Cronk, of Richmond, Va. In the March number, in discussing "The Best Method for Souls," she says: "Unless we are finding men and leading them to Christ, even as we plan missionary programs and project missionary advance, we are indeed become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. There is something of hollowness in the intense missionary fervor which dictates outlines on "World Evangelization" to a stenographer who is not a Christian and who has never heard a word of interest in her personal salvation from the lips that dictate missionary plans and outlines to her each day." Then, among others, she gives this story:

The Awakening of One Society

There was a certain missionary society which had always labored under the delusion that its only obligation was to send the Gospel, by representatives whom it carefully chose and commissioned, to masses of people who lived far away in the darkness of non-Christian lands.

One day a new member came into the society. She was intensely interested in the far-away people but she was equally interested in those just around the corner. Soul-winning, regardless of geography, was her main concern in life. She was amazed to see a missionary society that seemed to think its entire responsibility could be met by the payment of monthly dues. Very quietly, tactfully and lovingly she spoke of the personal responsibility and opportunity for pointing the way of salvation to those near by.

The discussion was taken up with interest. Three possibilities were suggested:

1. Personal conversation with friends or neighbors or any one with whom the members had contacts.

2. An effort on the part of every member of the missionary society to fill the vacant pews at the Sunday services by inviting unsaved friends and acquaintances to come with them to the church.

3. A search for boys and girls who were growing up without any religious training who might be brought into a catechetical class and there led to make an intelligent decision for Christ.

Some members of that society had never led a soul to Christ. They fairly gasped at the thought of their personal responsibility, but they went to work, beginning first of all with prayer. Soon the church services began to show an increase in interest and attendance. Members were there and with them were their friends. No one can remain persistently indifferent to a friend's genuine, continued interest in his soul. Men and women who were not Christians responded to the loving concern of their friends. Some of them felt they could not present the plan of salvation as they would like to themselves, but realized their opportunity to interest their friends in attending the church services where the gospel was preached.

The pastor's catechetical class which had formerly been made up of children of the congregation only, opened wide its doors to other children who came in response to the invitation of the mothers of their little friends and acquaintances. Even the boys and girls began to look around to find children who were not in any church and to invite them to come with them.

On Easter Sunday when the confirmation class was received, one woman turned to her friend. Tears rolled down her cheeks while happiness shone on her face. "Do you see that fine young fellow standing by my son? He is the first soul I have ever brought to my Lord though I've been a Christian for many years. When I began to look for some one I could bring, I thought of him. He was not in any church and was drifting. I talked with him and invited him to come with my boy, and study for himself God's way of salvation. I'm so happy that he is coming into the church today."

That young man is now a religious leader whose helpful influence over boys cannot be estimated.

Thus a certain missionary society began to do personal soul-winning work at home as well as to pay dues to send missionaries to win souls in lands far away.

The Other Side of the Church Supper

Even in these progressive days many women have no bank account. Can we not regard the serving of tables as an opportunity to make an over-and-above gift of themselves, expressive of an overflowing love for their Master?

By ONE WHO LIKES IT

JUST as in the normal home there is a natural and fair division of labor, a division which is usually automatic and practical, so in church life certain tasks naturally fall to the men, others to the women. There are many things in church work which men and women can do equally well; for example, teaching in the Sunday school. There are some things which can be done most easily and appropriately by the men, such as the care of the property, looking after repairs and taxes, and managing the funds. There are likewise some things which can be adequately and most easily carried out only by the women, and of some of these I am impelled to write.

Housekeepers of the Church

I have always felt that in addition to Sunday-school teaching and some other kinds of church work, like visiting, in which women excel, three special lines of work belong to the women. First, they should be the housekeepers of the church, taking upon themselves to see that the building is as clean, sanitary, orderly and beautiful as they wish their own homes to be. Second, they should be the hostesses of the church. By this, I mean that the social life should be largely in their hands. Third, they should be the mothers of the church, mothers in Israel, watching over, caring for and nurturing the young people and children, directing and encouraging their activities and training them along every line. Just as in the home, so in the church these three tasks must largely be performed by the women. Can any one of them be carried out without an expenditure of physical energy and vitality in the church any more than in the home? And can any woman doubt that just as a home is enriched because the mother in her ministrations pours out daily her very life in a physical way, so church life is enriched and deepened and broadened in proportion as devoted women pour out their strength in the same sort of house-keeping, home-making, mother-like efforts? Just as no boarding house can take the place of a home, just as the output of no community kitchen can compare with home cooked meals, as no restaurant can rival the flavor of the home-maker's cuisine, and as no institution can outshine the family, so no church can have the indispensable family feeling prominent, nor its social life well-developed, whose women are unequal to carrying out or unwilling to perform their peculiar part in making that social life. And so I plead for a true appreciation of this side of woman's work in the local church.

A long time ago Dr. D. W. Hulburt of Wisconsin in a short article in the old Standard most satisfactorily summed up the work of the Women's Union. In this outline of the work of the women he has this sentence: "Whatever women contribute in money to advance the kingdom, let them make an added contribution of time and energy. Let them unitedly make aprons or quilts or produce other useful articles and turn the product of their industry into money for the promotion of the kingdom at home and abroad." In this idea, it seems to me is the justification of the whole matter of sewing societies, church suppers and all the much criticized work of women, especially that which is intended to raise money. Some of us have gifts for such work, for cooking and serving as well as for sewing, and in exercising them we can express our love for and devotion to our Master. Nor is there any vital difference between sewing at the church and earning money for the Lord's work and doing the same kind of work at home and contributing a part or all of the proceeds to the same cause. Because a group of church women serve meals for pay, is the money tainted, any more than if they conducted a boarding house or restaurant and contributed from the resulting earnings? If there is any difference, the advantage seems to be on the side of the united effort of which Dr. Hulburt speaks, which does so much to cultivate the social life among the women themselves and gives opportunities to work in many of the younger women and girls. If the value given is a fair and just one the money is lawfully earned and may be properly used for any good cause. The church supper served to accommodate organizations should be a meal worth the money paid and offered upon such business-like terms as would be asked by any hotel. The church supper given for the sake of the social life of the church, on the other hand, may properly be served at cost because of the end in view. Neither meal should ever be a "feed" but a dignified example of modern culinary ideas where balanced rations have more prominence than overfeeding, and daintiness than huge portions bound to be wasted.

Furthermore, the serving of meals for large numbers in many communities must be done by the women of the churches if at all. Restaurants and hotels with facilities to serve many people at once are not to be found in most of our smaller towns, nor do caterers ply their trade in any but the larger cities. The serving of banquets and suppers meets a real community need, often adding greatly to interdenominational friendliness and comity. Many towns could never have the advantage and blessing of entertaining state conventions and other denominational meetings if the other churches did not help provide the meals. Such serving if properly managed is business enterprise well worthy of support.

Means to an End

And what a necessary adjunct of church life is such indispensable serving! We can invite our friends to spend the evening at our home in intellectual conversation, but it is a well known fact that wits sparkle more brilliantly and conversation flows more easily if a good supper precedes the evening. Nor do I consider that because I know how to cook and serve the supper, I am any less capable of contributing to the intellectual feast to follow. Until human nature changes and the physical side of our being is much less prominent than it is at present and than it was ever intended to be, we must take into account in every line of endeavor the stomachs as well as the minds of people with whom we work. The attitude of women at home and in church work today should be to put the serving of meals upon a sensible, reasonable, businesslike basis as a matter worth time and effort and thought, and most wisely to be used as a means to an end rather than as an end in itself.

The cleansing of the temple is often referred to as being authority for opposition to any earning of money in the church. Is not the obvious fact overlooked that those who were driven out of the temple were bargaining and selling for their own advantage, while the efforts of women today in church work are put forth in order to promote the work of the kingdom? Unfortunately, even in these progressive days many women have no bank account, some have never a cent to call their own or to give away. Can we not regard the serving of tables as an opportunity for women to make an over-and-above gift of themselves, expressive of an overflowing love for their Master? Not all of us can teach in the Sunday school and if we all wanted to there would be as great a superfluity of teachers as there is at present scarcity. It does not need all the women of the church to make out and carry out missionary programs. Let us hesitate before we condemn those whose talents and desires lie along other lines of endeavor and who find in cultivating the social life of the church a chance to make a contribution often as little appreciated as it is valuable.

Hallowed Be All Men

*L*OVER of souls, indeed, but lover of bodies too,
Seeing in human flesh the God shine through;
Hallowed by thy name, and, for the sake of thee,
Hallowed be all men, for thine they be.

Doer of deeds divine, thou the Father's Son,
In all thy children may thy will be done, Till—each works miracles on poor and sick and blind
Learning from thee, the art of being kind.

For thine is the glory of love and thine
the tender power,
Touching the barren heart to leaf and flower,
Till not the lilies alone, beneath thy gentle feet,
But human lives for thee grow pure and sweet.

And thine shall the kingdom be, thou Lord of love and pain
Conqueror over death by being slain.
And we, with lives like thine shall cry in the great day when Thou comest to claim thine own, "All Hail! Amen."

Some More Prohibition Facts

Dry people should be on the job every minute—talking, rooting, practising prohibition.

By HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

THERE are not wanting signs that the tide of lawlessness in regard to the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment is turning. Editorials in the daily press, a cartoon now and then, and articles in the magazines, seem to show that the man with his ear to the ground catches the far-away rumbling of the law of progress. At least there is no cause for discouragement.

The dry people want to be on the job every minute, protesting, writing to our legislators, interviewing our officers of the law and our mayors and aldermen, passing on every scrap of information we get, talking prohibition, rooting for prohibition, practising prohibition, until "we get there, in the morning," as the war song has it.

Here are a few encouraging facts gathered from here and there: Rock-ribbed, wet New Jersey has ratified the Eighteenth Amendment. "Straws show which way the wind blows."

Judge Landis, on the last day that he presided over a Federal Court, imposed a one year's jail sentence and a $1,000 fine for the sale of two glasses of whiskey.

The New York Times, which has been persistently and venomously wet, printed an editorial in which it commented on Mrs. Asquith as follows: "Perhaps somebody will now persuade the vivacious lady that there are in the United States several millions of young men and young women whom she has not seen, and that perhaps she was somewhat hasty in generalizing about them—that childish violation of law, just because it is law, is not characteristic of quite everybody in our younger generation—that a few, and even more, of them never did get drunk and do not now. Then her view of American Prohibition will be about that of other sensible people—that it is neither a complete success nor a complete failure, and that, such as it is, with all its faults and failures, the large majority of the country's inhabitants prefer it to any alternative in the way of repeal or mitigation that as yet has been proposed."

The 1921 report of the New York Charity Organization shows that intemperance accounted for only 8 per cent of the family troubles that came before that organization.

A recent item in the New York papers showed that the Essex Market Police Court opened and adjourned on February 13, 1922, without a single case on its calendar. The Essex Market Police Court is situated in the center of the congested district in New York. It is one of the oldest of the city's police courts. In former days no section contained more dives and houses of ill fame. The derelicts of rum gathered in when the court opened on a morning frequently exceeded one hundred. A judge of the old days once disposed of 100 cases in 100 minutes.

February 20, Chief Magistrate McAdoo gave out the figures of the Magistrates' Court of New York City, as follows: "The number of persons finger-printed last year (1921) exceeds by 12 per cent those of 1920. . . . Public intoxication cases increased from 5,691 to 6,278, or 10 per cent." This was pounced upon by the city papers and featured "Big Jump in Drunkenness." What the papers neglected to do was to compare the arrests for drunkenness with those of other years, before prohibition went into effect. The records of 1916 showed 16,665 such arrests, and those of 1917, 13,000.

The figures for crime for New York State were recently given out by the secretary of state. These showed that in 1917 there were 129,352 commitments for crime in the whole state; in 1921, 73,947.

New York and Boston are beginning to use stickers saying "Keep the Law." The Boston Family Welfare Society—formerly called Boston Associated Charities—reports that under license, in 1917, drink was a factor in 27 per cent of their cases. In 1921, under prohibition, only 2½ per cent of the cases handled by the Society were due to drink.

Evangeline Booth, commander of the Salvation Army in the United States, in a statement issued recently declared that since the enactment of the Volstead Act drunkenness among the poor has almost entirely disappeared. The announcement, she said, was based on facts reported by secretaries of the Salvation Army in all parts of the country to whom she sent a questionnaire regarding their observations in Salvation Army headquarters, shelters and hotels. The announcement said: "More than 2,000,000 beds were supplied by the Salvation Army last year, and it is on these 2,000,000 cases that our secretaries base their answers. In one hostelry it was reported that 120 men who have never been known to keep a dollar more than twenty-four hours, now have banking accounts of considerable size. In another hotel twenty-five men of the sort who before prohibition could not keep a dime, now have deposits from $100 to $500."

In refutation of the charge that drunkenness has increased since prohibition, Commander Booth cites the fact that the Salvation Army's annual "Boozers' Day," when drunken men and women were collected from the streets, fed, clothed and prayed with, has been abandoned and the day given over to entertaining the newsboys and poor youngsters of the city. "Because prohibition has cleared our park benches of drunkards, we are able to entertain 5,000 boys under fourteen years of age in New York City on this day, these boys being benefited because one of the greatest curses of humanity has been placed beyond the reach of men."

Appetizers

By MARGARET T. APLEGARTH

IT HARDLY pays to thrust a book into a child's hands, saying: "Here's a book about a very good man who died a little while ago, my dear, I want you to sit right down and read it." No one wants to be improved quite so obviously! Rather, give the book as a present, possibly as a reward. And in case you feel in your bones that there is going to be a stupendous lack of enthusiasm, try some simple device—fun for you in anticipation, and fun for the child in realization. Some such device as a five-cent ball of twine can furnish, for instance—a rainy day has come; thwarted hopes have produced an acute attack of ennui in Young Seven-to-Ten-Years-Old. But you already have your hero book laid by for just such a rainy day, so you secretly wrap it and tie it with twine. Then, instead of snapping the string from the ball, you hide the package and begin a circuitous perambulation of your house, unwinding the ball of twine after you as you go.

"Carefully follow and wind this twine
And the thing at the end of it shall be thine!"

Nothing intrigues the imagination and whets the appetite like suspense. The writer has often given missionary book-prizes to her Sunday-school scholars at a class party, and invariably this element of breathless curiosity has gone far toward investing the book itself with a double halo of desirability. There are a variety of such appetizers to win any age: for boys, a trail of numbered paper foot prints (traced from a pair of shoes and cut out ten at a time from layers of wrapping paper) with cryptic directions on each for locating the next foot print and eventually what must be done to gain the hidden treasure; or, mysterious orders written on colored papers and inserted at the end of each chapter, such as: "You are hereby ordered to write on this paper a full account of what interested you most in this chapter; after which, kindly hop on your left foot to your bed and take what you find under the right pillow," or "Draw on this paper a map of —, and locate Mr. —'s mission station, after which go and look," etc. For the younger boy the contents of a toy menagerle could one by one follow the true "Adventures with Four-Footed Folks," a remarkable set of animal stories collected by Belle Brain from the narrow escapes of great missionaries: there is an African village for sale at mission board rooms (dolls, huts, etc.) which might accompany Jean Mackenzie's splendid book "African Adventurers"; and Chinese or American Indian dolls will make little girls take extra enjoyment in "Red, Yellow and Black" by Sophie Lyon Fahs. A boy wanting a tool chest could earn the contents one at a time as he finishes the engrossing chapters about that great missionary mechanic, Alexander Mackay, which Mrs. Fahs has written under the title "Aganda's White Man of Work"—a book of books for all boys from eight to eighty!

Wherever the play instinct can be joined with facts the imagination paints indelible pictures. When the play age is outgrown, a girl in her teens who is beginning to take a keen interest in "fixing up" her room will welcome a missionary book covered with the same cretonne as is used for her window curtains.

"The Baptist World"

Thirteen Baptist families cost too much and they tread on each others' toes.

By D. G. WHITTINGHILL

IT will be remembered that the Baptist Congress in London in 1920 recommended the foundation of the Baptist World. As a member of the committee on literature I had the honor of moving the publication of a periodical with the above name. Since the time is drawing near for the two Baptist conventions in America to decide this matter, a few words to the Baptist public in favor of the publication may be in order. In the first place its immediate need is evident for the following reasons: It will greatly help us to occupy more quickly our great mission fields in Europe. The dissolution of autocratic governments, the rapid growth of democratic principles, the separation of church and state already proclaimed in several old and new states and the great spiritual needs of hungry multitudes make Europe an immense field for our propaganda. In this connection let it be remembered that the invading influence of the Vatican in the new states of Eastern Europe cannot be ignored by us without great harm. There is no adequate way at present to occupy these countries with our limited force of men and means except by the press. Its importance cannot easily be exaggerated. The immense influence of the Socialist and Clerical parties in Italy and other European countries is due almost entirely to the use of literature. Our experience in Italy with our review, Bilychnis has been most flattering. Today Baptists are better known, especially among the better classes, than any other denomination. By means of our books and four periodicals (including Bilychnis) we have acquired a great many influential friends who are numbered by the thousands. A great majority of these would never enter a Protestant church even if an opportunity presented itself, but our literature they willingly read. The fact that Pope Benedict put two of our reviews under ban as "dangerous" shows that our publications have considerable value.

Periodic Visit

It would be a bond of union between the various Baptist bodies of the world. Thirteen Baptist families are entirely too many for civilized Baptists to manage—they cost too much and they tread on each others' toes. There is already too much disposition now to make a distinction where there is no difference. Would not this organ enable us to know and love each other more? The visits of Baptist representatives to our brethren in Europe since the armistice have done much to unify and encourage us in the midst of great difficulties. If a few personal visits could do so much, why would not a periodic visit from a well-edited paper or magazine accomplish great good especially in Europe? We of Europe are subjected to all kinds of temptations where the very atmosphere is permeated with class ignorance, superstition, rationalism, rank infidelity and moral corruption. Even among so-called Christians, we have, besides various kinds of Catholics, "Holy Rollers," "Adventists," "Pentecostals," "Spiritualists," "Radicals" and "Bolsheviks," all of whom need to be kept "in the middle of the road" after their conversion. This enormous work cannot be done now by the few "missionaries," native pastors and limited number of local denominational papers at our disposal. We need a central organ to give the note which could serve as a kind of "clearing house" for the Baptists throughout the world. Such an organ ought to furnish us with information, inspire us with hope, and teach us progressively the essential doctrines of Christianity.

The character of the periodical:

(1) It should be a good-sized monthly like the Atlantic Monthly of Boston or the Outlook of New York.

(2) As the three great Baptist bodies of the world—the two conventions in America and the English Baptists—will necessarily have to finance the publication, it should be published in a neutral place like Washington or some European capital.

(3) The editorial work ought not to be done by one man. He should have a committee to assist him, with associate editors and correspondents in all the principal countries in the world and especially in Europe. (4) Its program ought to be well-planned and faithfully followed. The periodical should have a place in its columns for the discussion of the following topics: New Testament doctrines, distinctive Baptist principles, apologetics, church and Baptist history, Christian and theological education, Sunday schools, church finance, missions, social questions (such as alcoholism, personal purity, etc.), the politics and work of the Vatican (the greatest adversary of European Baptists), general news letters from accredited correspondents, sermons, book reviews, official communications from various Baptist bodies throughout the world, orphanages, hospitals, young people's work, and other matters of denominational interest.

There are some possible objections to the publication of the Baptist World which, to my mind, do not outweigh the advantages.

(1) The question of the language need not disturb the serious-minded. English is fast becoming the universal language. The London Conference was a proof that English is used practically by all educated people. At least nineteen-twentieths of the subscribers will be English-speaking.

(2) The cost would be considerable and the periodical would probably need subsidizing. What if it did? Could a more worthy cause be found? Missionary work is not supposed to be a money making enterprise, but it is pre-eminently soul saving. In new fields of labor such as we have lately assumed, no investment of money will bear quicker fruit than that spent for Christian literature.

(3) There will probably be some objection on the part of our state papers to this periodical. There is little reason for opposition. The state papers cannot do the work for the Baptist World. On the contrary, the state or local papers could use much matter furnished by the Baptist World central organ. This periodical would tend rather to increase than to diminish the circulation of the state papers which would be brought into touch with the rest of the world. Even if the state papers should suffer a little material loss at the outset, it would be a worthy sacrifice as it would help to create a more efficient Baptist literature for the salvation of the sons of men and a visible bond between the scattered Baptists of the world.

The Disciples of John the Baptist

By JACOB DAVID

AS one travels through Mesopotamia he meets many quaint religions, which are the descendants of the ancient religions of Babylonia. They have isolated themselves from the rest of the world, and it is a mystery how these people try to mask their practices and keep the world perfectly ignorant of their religious beliefs. Direct questions about their worship and deities are answered in vague terms simply to mislead the inquirer.

On my way to America I stopped thirty days in Basrah, Mesopotamia. I came in contact with one Silversmith, who knew a little English, and it was through him I was able to glean a few facts about this sect of John the Baptist, he himself, being one of their prominent members.

Their physiognomy, dialect, gesture and expression reveal the Jewish blood. They are about 10,000 in Basrah, Mahammara, and Nassarrah, and their chief occupation is that of the silversmith. Their colloquial name is Subba, undoubtedly the derivative comes from the Arabic "to wash," which is the chief custom in their belief or religion.

I asked the man "Who is your prophet whom you consider as above all the rest of the prophets in the world?" "We believe in Yahyah Bin Scharya (John son of Zahariah) whom God sent into the world some years before Eshoo Meshekha (Jesus Christ) to teach the true religion which spread in Palestine and Syria. Sham (Damascus) became the center of our faith, then on account of persecutions our forefathers came down to the Ben Nahrin (Mesopotamia). When I asked, "Which is greater, Christ or John the Baptist?" he replied, "Christ." Undoubtedly he said that just to please me.

"Do you believe in God as the Christians do?" I asked; he replied, "The God of Jews, Christians, and Muslims, is our God. But we believe the God is Pera Rabba, Air Zeva Rabba, and Mana Rabba. To the last all our prayers are directed because he is the source of Khayee" (life). On account of his difficulty with the English language he could not explain any further his doctrine of trinity.

"Do you believe in the future punishment?" "Yes," he replied, "we believe there are three hells, which are three stages. All those who die their deeds are weighed in the balance by the Abba Thur (Father of the Splendor). Then men are sent from one hell into another according to their deeds." "If all good and bad go through the same process," I interrupted him, "there is no difference between good and bad men in the next world." "Oh, yes," he replied, "when Abba Thur weighs the deeds of good men they go directly to him. We think that we are going to have the first place and the next to us will be our cousins (Christians) who are good."

"Which are better," I asked, "the Catholics or Protestants?" "For us they both are good and they are our cousins. But our cousins, the Catholics are more sympathetic unto us; whenever the Turks carry away a woman from our members the Catholic bishop interferes in our behalf and helps us with the Turkish government. These Turks," he continued, "are the worst people in the world. They come into our homes, take anything they want and kidnap our best looking women. According to our Seedra (Holy Book) we must not shave the hair of our heads nor beards but we are obliged to shave our heads so that the Turks might not recognize us. Our Seedra teaches us to follow our prophet, like him we must abstain from drinking, practice baptism and unshaving."

"What time do you receive baptism in your church?" I asked. "All our young and old are baptized by the Talmada (priest) once in a year at our Aid (feast), the birth of Yahyah (John), we all go down into a running brook, then the Talmada pours water upon our heads. But three days before the feast we remain in, keep quiet, stop working, spend the time in hearing Seedra and praying." They have three feasts, but their names he could not tell in English. The heads of their church are Ganzeyra something like a bishop, the second is Talmada, whose function is to teach his flock the cult of that faith and go from place to place. Both officers of the church marry.

Strict and Narrow

"Do you convert from other sects?" "Never," he said, vehemently, "we do not believe in proselyting from other religions and we do not want any from our flock to embrace other religions; if possible, we kill one who leaves our religion; we do not take wives from other nations and we do not want our women to marry from others. But if one of our cousins (Christians) wants to take a woman from our faith we examine him very carefully, if he has no Mohammedan blood in him we let him take a wife from our flock on the condition that he also joins our church. You see our laws," he concluded, "are very strict and narrow, but we have to comply with them."

"Please, show me your book," I asked. He said, "No one keeps the Seedra but the priest, here is one leaf of our prayer which you can examine. We pray in this language, it is the language of our Seedra. Our Talmada also preaches to us in this language." While he was talking I was examining the leaf. To my surprise it was the old Aramaic, the language used by the Jews in the time of Christ.

"What day do you observe as your day of rest?" "Our Sabbath is Christian Sunday in this place, Ashar; we are poor, cannot put up a church of our own, so every Sunday we get together in some private house. The Talmada, if he is in the town, preaches to us. The priest left for Mahammara seven days ago but as soon as he returns I shall bring him to you so that you may get a better knowledge of our religion. I cannot inform you about everything of our religion in detail because I don't know enough. We as a sect do not have any schools so we do not know much about our religion even, but our Talmada is a great and learned man." I was very sorry I left Basrah for India before their learned Talmada came back from Basrah.

A Call for Sympathy; Thanksgiving for Help Received

(The following, written by Mrs. Mary Corjus, of Reval, Esthonia, gives a vivid impression of the distress in one of the lands to which the gifts of Northern Baptists have been sent.)

IN all Esthonia we have no home for the care of babies. During the last few years it has happened very often that parcels are picked up in the streets in which children from two to fourteen days old are found alive. These children were brought to the hospitals and were reared there up to three and four years' old. From there they are taken to the government institutions for children, where they are brought up entirely without religious teaching. The state church has also several such homes. For babies, however, nothing at all is in existence; pushed hither and thither among the sick they must struggle for their lives. These children must hear the groans of the sick people, and must breathe the air of the hospital daily, in order to come finally as pale poor beings into an institution where they hear nothing about God, and therefore also receive no true love.

Twelve in Five Rooms

We Christian believers, nearly all very poor, having been much oppressed by the former Russian government and now suffering from the consequences of the war and from the high taxation, have only been able to help in this way that we have placed a few children here and there in families. I also have in the house a boy of eleven and a little girl two years old. I have five children of my own, and an old mother of eighty-two, a brother of nearly sixty and the widow of my late brother. We are twelve people and there is no room in our flat, which has but five rooms, to receive little ones as well.

The need, however, is very great; four little ones picked up in the street were offered to me by Dr. Keyserlingk, the surgeon of the hospital with whom my daughter Tabea has studied hygiene. I have had several interviews about these, and would have received them, but the landlord of the house in which we live does not permit that still more people be taken into the premises which are already crowded.

During the summer in the country I had seven children: two little girls aged four and six, the children of rich and educated parents, now poor. The father carried off by the Bolsheviks, the mother a refugee from Russia who had come here destitute. She has now found occupation in an office, and in the evening gives English lessons. She lives in a cold, small attic room, and is out all day and these children spent the summer with me, but now that we are in town again they had to go once more into the hospital since nowhere else was any room for them. Then there was a small boy of five with me. His father and mother came at the beginning of 1921 from Russia to Reval. Robbed and poor these intelligent people got a small attic room. The wife earned a little by giving lessons in French and English, and the husband could find no occupation since he could not speak Esthonian. They could hardly exist. Then misfortune came. The landlord gave them notice to leave the attic room. Reval now is altogether overcrowded, every attic and every cellar is full of refugees. The parents of this boy sat and cried on the Sunday night without God and without comfort. On Monday, out of despair, the mother threw herself from the fifth story and died. The father, all but insane, brought the child to our hospital and from there I got the boy for the summer, after the sister had visited me three or four times begging me to take him. After the summer the child was brought again to the hospital, although the father many times besought me with tears to keep the child. I was not allowed to do it since there was danger that my whole large family would be turned out into the street.

One other case: Recently an officer of high standing, who had owned twelve houses in Petrograd, came to see me. He had been severely wounded in the war, one side had been shattered, and now he has to earn his bread in spite of his poor health in the harbor. Ill-suited to this work his finger was wedged between some iron bars and smashed, and he now carries his hand in a sling. He has a wife and two little children and an old mother. They live in a wooden hut three meters wide and five meters long, in which one can look through the walls into the street, and this with 14 degrees below zero and on the sea coast. Every morning, when it is still dark, they go to the shore and fetch the wood which is washed in by the sea. In this wooden kitchen there was but one chair, one table a meter long, and a box along the side of the wall upon which they sleep.

No House for Little Ones

Should there not be hearts and hands which would help us in order to find a room or a house for such destitute people, I am most willing to work for them, also my daughter, who goes to England in order to complete her training for it there. She has already in Germany learned some things from Mother Eva von Thiele-Winkler, of which she can make use here; everything else would be found here with regard to clothing and support for these little ones, but the main thing is this that we have no house; even if it were but small—if only we could make a start.

Yesterday we received news from Dr. Rushbrooke that we shall receive clothing for our poor. This has filled me with such joy that the tears came, and I could not sleep last night but had to thank and praise my God, especially that there is clothing to arrive for the poor children. In the Sunday school I have 200 to 250 children who often come barefooted and in rags to the service, though now during the cold weather are obliged to stay at home. But now there are clothes coming, warm things! God be praised for this. Thanks to all. Thanks from my heart.

"We Go Forward or We Go Down"

We are asked to do work now, whereas we used to seek opportunity. It is sickening not to be able to go in and possess the land.

THE following, an unanswerable argument for bringing our $15,000,000 New World Movement campaign to a successful close, at whatever sacrifice, is an extract from a letter received at headquarters, April 11, from Rev. Ben L. Baker of Chaochowfu, China.

The Girls' School at that station has grown so rapidly that new quarters are imperative. Recently some land which was in an ideal location was offered the mission at an exceptionally low figure. Even though no such opportunity will come again, the board could not authorize the purchase because of the financial stringency. Mr. Baker is not making a plea for the needs of his station, he is stating the opportunities and the responsibilities which exist throughout China today, and which are affecting every phase of the mission work.

"We have been longing to open our kindergarten. Now while we wait the military magistrate opens one. The non-Christian Chinese are taking the lead in progressive work from us. Still, while he has made the beginning, we have this week had appeals from people who had rather send their children to us for training than to that school. And we have to say we have no place to begin in, not to speak of appropriation. During the past week we had a man come and ask if we would not open a class for women. He wanted his wife to attend, and would find some six or eight others with whom he was acquainted. And we had to let that opportunity go by.

"We have won our place in the estimation of the people. It is sickening not to be able to go in and possess the land. I do not write this to make you feel bad. I really do not want to write it, for I know you are as sick over it as we are. But it is terrible, from our point of view, for the people at home who could do these things to allow them to go by the board, while they indulge in acrimonious theological debate. What answer will men and women give to our Lord, if they fail to give the gospel to China in this most critical hour! You people at home cannot possibly appreciate the plasticity of the Chinese mind, the spirit of change, the open-mindedness to truth, the drift toward materialism, atheism, and withal the extreme cordiality toward us Americans. I have not seen anything like it since I came to China.

"We are asked to do work now, whereas we used to seek opportunity. And we have to face drawing in our stakes. What will the Chinese think of our Christian Church, spend and work as we have to get into a position of influence, and then when the opportunity comes go down before it? It means failure. We prove the words of the past years today, or we part company with the powers that will make the new China. I know, as I have said, this lies upon your heart as it does on ours. I write this, that it may help you to make a further appeal to the people in the churches. We are in a critical situation in all reality in South China. There is no standing still, nor going back; we go forward, or we go down, taking with us the work of all these years.

"The financial situation weighs upon us.

Yes, but it is not mainly that. It is not that we cannot have the things we want and need. It is the fact that this situation bespeaks the spiritual life in the churches. Will the life fail at the home base when we are in need of the biggest campaign ever waged out here on the farflung battle line? May the spirit of God bless all of you who are spending yourself to see that it fails not."

"The Women Are Doing Their Share"

A paragraph symposium of success by leaders in the Women's Continuation Campaign

"Iowa Is Doing Her Part."

By MRS. FRANKLIN JOHNSON, Campaign Director for Iowa.

"I can assure you of one thing, and that is that Iowa is doing her part. I have traveled over a good deal of Iowa in the last two months, and I know that the interest is great and that when the books close in Iowa on the fourth of May the women will have done their share. Don't be discouraged."

"We Will Not Disappoint You."

By MRS. H. V. DEDRICKSON, Director of the Columbia River District.

"I feel confident that the women and girls of this district will not disappoint you when the reports are all in."

"Surely God Led Me Here Tonight."

By MRS. R. R. RATHBONE, Director for Montana.

"A school teacher came to a prayer meeting where the Continuation Campaign was being discussed. At last she said, 'Surely God led me here tonight. The church I belonged to last year did not support the New World Movement. Since I have heard of it tonight, I pledge you $50 of this month's salary,'—which she did."

"Our Prayer Groups Are Faithful."

By MRS. F. J. SMITH, Director for the Rocky Mountain District.

"I was in Utah, March 21-28. Mrs. Payne was very sanguine of $2,000 from three sources there. Colorado women held most tenaciously to working 'with the churches' in pledge taking and cash giving. Your telegram regarding prayer received and heeded. My own church, the First Church of Denver, has set aside Wednesday next, from 5:30 to 9 p. m. for prayer. On Monday, April 17, the women of the First Church will spend the whole day in prayer. Our prayer groups are faithful."

"The Spirit of the Meeting Was Wonderful."

By MRS. B. J. HOWREY, Local Key Woman, Waterloo, Iowa.

"When as president I asked the women what they were willing to do for the Continuation Campaign, they voted without a dissenting voice to give all in the treasury, $250. The spirit of the meeting was wonderful. One woman gave $50, which meant sacrifice. Another gave $10 she had saved for a new dress. Could we have had our entire membership there, the Walnut Street Church would certainly approach if not reach its apportionment. We start out now with the every-member canvass, having a start of $450. We have an eleven o'clock whistle in our city. When that blows every woman is asked to pray for the success of our effort."

"The Church Took Action to Indorse the New World Movement."

(Extract of a letter from Mrs. E. R. Phillips, Director for Ohio, to Mrs. R. L. Hutchinson, Director of the East Central District.)

"The Girard Church, although a small church, has a splendid group of men and women. Last Sunday morning after I spoke the church took action to indorse for the first time the New World Movement. The women will now get to work, also, I am sure that the men will do all they can."

"Spirit and Enthusiasm."

By MRS. GEORGE H. SWIFT, Director for the Atlantic District.

"I feel much encouraged over the effort of the women to secure the money. There seems to be a good spirit and considerable enthusiasm."

"Plan Together, Work Together, Pray Together."

Miss Dora Zimmerman of Ningpo, China, who returned to her station last fall after a year's furlough in the United States, sends a splendid report of the progress of the Girls' School there to the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. She says:

"The other day when I tried to persuade a man to register two girls in a less crowded school, he said, 'They want to study here because this school is preparing girls to meet the needs of China.' God knows, that is one of our big motives, and we wish we could do better. As a beginning, they are getting practice in the four Sunday schools for street children. Along with the daily round of study and play, new ideas are being conceived, new purposes formed, and new habits cultivated.

"It is hard to say at just what stage a girl passes out of heathenism into Christianity, but eleven girls during 1921 bore testimony in baptism of having chosen Christ for all time. A larger number come to us from non-Christian homes, so we need more than ever to 'Plan together, work together, pray together.'"

The Open Forum

ISN'T THE BIBLE GOOD ENOUGH?

I have read with considerable interest the "Fraternal Communication" and your editorial dealing with the same. I am glad to note that the conference was "informal," and also presume that it was unofficial.

As the article imports, a group of men, chiefly from the East, and representing two divergent points of view, have made an effort at a common understanding. Let us agree that "fraternity, cooperation and unity" are highly desirable. But what is the real significance of this conference? Why is this statement of intent broadcasted in our papers? Is this another "pre-convention"? From all such, good Lord deliver us.

It is well to note that whatever weight the communication carries, it derives largely from the personnel. Outside of that is has no authority, just as it had no consent, from the denomination for which it seems to speak. It was purely a gratuitous assembly. We may concede the sincerity of its intentions, even if we question the wisdom of its methods.

It is a debatable question whether it was either wise or timely to concede the necessity for "a statement of our historic faith and practice." One asks what is the "historic" faith and practice of Baptists? But how shall we decide, when there is and ever has been such a diversity of opinion? Shall we have a creed, a confession of faith, or just a "statement"? And since whatever we have is to bear the imprimatur of the convention, in what way either in theory or fact will it differ from the bete-noir of Baptists—a creed with authority? I grant there is considerable dexterity in the way this plausible first article reads—but under the skin is the Tartar. Shades of Roger Williams!

A creed indeed! Baptists have "historically," and consistently in the light of their claim, steered clear of all extra-biblical statements of faith. There have been sporadic attempts to erect "confessions of faith." But these have been merely tolerated and occasionally deferred to. For the actual norm has been the belief in the competency of the individual soul and the use of the unfettered Bible. These have been ample. Why now endeavor to substitute for the fine and gracious liberty of the Scriptures, with their simple teaching, a form of words of very dubious worth? For a creed or a statement which lacks the genius of inspiration can have no genuine spiritual authority and must needs be a limitation and an embarrassment to spiritual experience.

To argue from the abstract right of expression is fallacious. There can be no right of expression if it conflicts with larger rights. And no statement of belief, no confession can be justified unless it is the full and intelligent expression of each individual. Such documents can have no proper authority over men's minds. And the inevitable tendency of all such authorized statements of faith and practice is to create either standardized and conventional articles of faith or a specious hypocrisy.

But even granting the desirability of an authorized statement of faith and practice, in what way does the convention derive the authority to sanction or impose such a statement? Does the convention have the power to impose on the local church such a mandate, or does the convention derive its powers from the churches? And are not its functions executive—not legislative? Are we to have in the convention a super-church, an oligarchy? In our Baptist polity the local church is autonomous, both in theory and practice. It is, implicitly at least, the focus in which the mind of Christ, mediated by the Spirit, finds expression. The convention is a very late afterthought, developed in the exigencies of our common tasks, but extra-biblical. We cannot safely allow it to decide matters of faith and practice. To have it attempt to do so is to have it arrogate to itself powers and privileges not its own. That could not promote either peace or moral consistency. It would impose a burden we are not willing to bear. Whatever may be done in the security of conferences, I am satisfied that in the practical working of our common life we should soon slough off the incubus of a confession or creedal statement, call it what you please, if we are so unfortunate as to be hampered with it.

Furthermore may we not ask what is the real animus behind this proposal to commit us to an authoritative statement of belief? It is noteworthy that during the dissension and discussion of the last two or three years the attack has proceeded chiefly from one side and has been chiefly along the line of matters of belief. It is perfectly comprehensible that such an attitude of mind should seek to ensure precisely-formulated articles of faith. But we launch ourselves on an endless sea of recrimination and controversy when we take such a step. Baptists are individualists and biblicists and most of us will continue, under any circumstances, to go by the Book. Why then a formal statement? Has the open Book failed? Is the principle of private interpretation obsolete? Are we reverting to a medieval mind and the need of authoritative dogma? Is there a group who hopes to inject into our thinking its own categorical statements of faith? Are we to substitute a formal and verbal allegiance for a personal and vital contact with a living Christ? "Timeo Danaos ferentes dona." Before we commit ourselves to any program of this character, let us make sure where we are coming out. It is easier to keep out of bondage, than once entangled to get free. "Will Baptists Battle at Indianapolis?" There are some things more undesirable even than a fight.

RELIGION AND THEOLOGY

In these times when we hear so much about the old and the new theology, and when good people love to sing of "the old-time religion," it is well to mark the distinction between religion and theology and the relation that one bears to the other. Religion is subjective; theology is objective. Religion is one's real attitude towards God; theology is his belief or opinion about God. A person may be genuinely religious and yet have very crude or erroneous opinions about God. On the other hand he may have entirely orthodox opinions, i. e., opinions that are generally held to be correct, about God, and still be very irreligious, maintaining in heart and life a very wrong attitude toward God.

Religion means a binding back or a binding again. Its central idea is duty, duty in attitude and conduct. Religion is the important thing, not theology. Says the prophet Micah, "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" Jesus says that on the two commandments, "Love God" and "Love thy neighbor," "hang all the law and the prophets." James says that pure religion is to do good to those in need and to keep one's self "unspotted from the world." True religion is right relation with God and with men. The two things go together. The first is impossible without the second. The preacher says, "Get right with God." But you cannot get right with God until you get right with your fellow-man. "Leave there thy gift before the altar and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."

Theology means the science or doctrine of God. The truth of any system of theology will depend upon the knowledge of God possessed by its author. The author of theology is not God, but man. God gives man some knowledge of himself, but leaves him to formulate his theology. But a man's theology is not his religion. His religion is his relation to God and to his fellow-man.

Are religion and theology fixed once for all and unchangeable, or do they follow the general law of evolution and change with the development of the moral and intellectual condition of man? As to theology, the answer is obvious. It has changed in the past and is changing now.

That its changes in the past have been for the better cannot be denied. Whether it is now changing for the better or the worse is a question upon which people differ, some preferring the old theology and others the new. It is equally true that religion has changed. Religion is manifested in life and conduct. The fundamental principles of true religion are unchangeable, like the principles of mathematics. But comprehension of those principles and their application in conduct, which constitute a man's real religion, good or bad, have certainly changed since men considered it a religious duty to burn heretics and to hang witches, and people were excluded from some churches for believing and advocating Christian missions. It is not so long since human slavery was defended by Christian people on Biblical grounds.

While religion and theology are not identical, yet they do sustain an important relation to each other. A people's conception of duty and obligation depends to a great degree upon their conception of the God they believe in and worship. Believers in a false, cruel and vindictive deity will on occasion be false, cruel and vindictive towards their fellow-man. While religion is the important thing, theology is also important because of its influence on religion, and the question whether the present changes in theological opinions are for the better or worse is not to be dismissed as of no importance. This at least may be said: The changes in theological thought in the past, and the corresponding changes in religion, have been largely due to a scientific study of nature, of man and of God's revelation to man. Likewise the changes now taking place are the result of a vast increase in the knowledge of the world in which we live, the development, both theoretical and practical, of such branches of science as psychology and sociology, and the historical and literary study of the Bible. As a result of all this investigation of the works of God, people are acquiring a better knowledge of God, a larger revelation of God, more abundant material out of which to construct a theology. It is inevitable that there should be some things new in theology and in religion as well. It is not the part of wisdom to expect no change or to condemn what is new because it differs from the old.

SHALL BAPTISTS ADOPT ARTICLES OF FAITH?

This is a question which all know is agitating our Baptist hosts. The writer is not now taking sides but wishes simply to give the results of his wide observations. There are three attitudes or parties to this matter. There are those who demand some sort of a declaration, there are those who are violently opposed to any such course and there are a very large number who do not care so much either way.

I. Some of the objections which are raised may be considered.

1. It is declared to be un-Baptistic and unhistorical as far as general bodies are concerned. Few general bodies above the local church have adopted such declarations.

2. There is a fear that such adoption would not prevent further agitation. The organization which has the power to adopt has the power to amend. The Des Moines Confession does not suit all Fundamentalists. W. B. Riley, in his School and Church for October, November and December, 1921, says, p3: "The orthodox men came too near a compromise for the comfort of believers. The confession adopted was too brief and omitted too many points of first importance." It makes one wonder what would have happened had that confession been thrown open to discussion as would be expected in a Baptist and democratic body.

3. There is a fear that such a confession would be used as a test of fellowship despite any statement to the contrary. This is not a straw man. Last fall a large church was threatened with

The Ways

*To every man there openeth
A Way, and Ways and a Way,
And the High Soul climbs the High Way,
And the Low Soul gropes the Low,
And in between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro.
But to every man there openeth
A High Way, and a Low,
And every man decideth

—John Oxenham, in

exclusion from the association, the state convention and the Northern Baptist convention if it did not adopt the Des Moines Confession because all these bodies would adopt it.

More than that, at another state convention a pastor presented resolutions which received a considerable vote, though finally lost. These resolutions provided, among other things:

(a) That the convention at once adopt the Des Moines Confession.

(b) That it present a demand that the Northern Baptist Convention adopt it at its next session.

(c) That the Northern Baptist Convention raise a committee to see that these articles were adopted by all the states and the churches affiliated with the Northern Baptist Convention.

It may be remarked that the Des Moines Confession in its preamble declared that the use of confessions as a test was repugnant to all Baptist bodies and precedent. How in the name of consistency could any man insist upon the adoption as a whole of the Des Moines Confession and then in the next resolution insist on the adoption of something which that confession explicitly repudiates?

4. Again it is objected that some extremists will never consent to the adoption of any confession by the Northern Baptist Confession and that if one is adopted it would mean a serious split in the denomination.

II. Some of the advantages of such a confession may well be considered.

1. There is a real need that some statement be issued which will put forth clearly some of the things upon which we agree for the benefit and information of those who are not Baptists. There is no body of people of any sort in the United States of such numbers whose basic principles are so much misunderstood and misrepresented as the Baptists. Within the last thirty days a college professor declared to me that Baptists stood for baptismal regeneration. He would not believe that I was well informed when I declared to the contrary.

2. If it is possible there is need for some statement upon which we can all agree for our own sakes. We need some accepted rallying cry.

3. It is stated and perhaps is correct that there is a much larger body of our members who demand some such statement than there is that is utterly opposed to it and that therefore, if the statement is not issued, there will be a much larger split than if it is.

Brethren, whatever we do let us not act hastily. The recommendations of the unofficial Columbia (Missouri) Conference have much to commend them. The adoption by both the Northern and Southern Conventions of such a course of action would give time for adequate consideration and might result in a well-digested statement which would be acceptable to all concerned. This is very desirable if it is possible. The adoption of this course by the Northern Baptist Convention would register progress in the solution of this vexatious problem. There is every reason to believe that many influential Baptists have been won over to the view that the adoption of some confession is very desirable.

LEARN FROM THE POLITICAL CONVENTIONS

Dr. A. S. Hobart seems to think that the adoption of a confession of faith would cut off any church or individual which did not agree with it in every particular. By no means.

Whenever men associate themselves together for the accomplishment of any purpose it is absolutely necessary that they declare their plans and purposes before they can consistently ask others to join them.

Any political convention, whether a mass convention or one of accredited delegates first passes resolutions expressing its purpose and not necessarily by a unanimous vote. It then appoints an executive committee to conduct the campaign. Should this committee begin appointing speakers who advocate policies antagonistic to the principles set forth in the resolutions, a storm of protest would arise at once; and justly so.

The same common-sense rule would apply to a religious convention.

A Mother's Hymn

UP to me sweet childhood looketh,
Heart and mind and soul awake;
Teach me of thy ways, O Father;
For sweet childhood's sake.

In their young hearts soft and tender
Guide my hand good seed to sow,
That its blossoming may praise thee
Wheresoe'er they go.

Give to me a cheerful spirit,
That my little flock may see
It is good and pleasant service
To be taught of thee.

Father, order all my footsteps,
So direct my daily way,
That, in following me, the children
May not go astray.

Let thy holy counsel lead me
Let thy light before me shine,
That they may not stumble over
Word or deed of mine.

Draw us hand in hand to Jesus,
For his word's sake unforgot,—
"Let the little ones come to me,
And forbid them not."

Children's Week

"THE best-laid plans of mice and men gang aft a-gley," and on account of the denominational urgency it seemed wise to inject two Continuation Campaign messages into the group of five articles which we had announced would precede the national Children's Week (April 29-May 6). The remaining articles in the series, therefore, are merely pigeonholed temporarily, and surely it is not really an "interruption" to any course in child study when we stop to stress missions! For somebody else's black-brown-yellow-or-red child is exceedingly precious both to that black-brown-yellow-or-red mother and to the Friend of little children.

An acquaintance has just sent a charming gold-framed Mother's Creed "to hang on the wall by the side of your desk," and there is such beauty in each "I Believe" that they are passed on to you herewith:

I believe in little children as the most precious gift of heaven to earth.

I believe that they have immortal souls created in the image of God, coming from him and to return to him.

I believe that in every child there are infinite possibilities for good or evil, and that the kind of influences with which we surround them in early childhood largely determines their future character.

I believe in play as the child's normal effort to understand himself through self-expression.

I believe, too, in work suitable to childhood and that the joy in doing such work should come to the child largely from the doing of it well.

I believe in freedom, but not in license. I believe in wisely directing rather than stifling activity.

I believe in regularity, accuracy, punctuality, industry and application.

I believe in prompt, cheerful obedience, self-control and self-forgetfulness.

I believe in inspiring the child to choose the good, the true and the beautiful, and to contribute to the happiness of others by word and deed and gift.

I believe that in all this my example counts for more than my precept.

I believe in cultivating the intellect and the will, and I believe, too, in soul culture, and that out of this cultivation comes the more abundant life, bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit—kindness, gentleness, joy, peace, truth, hope, faith, love, reverence for God respect for age, consideration for each other and thoughtfulness for all God's lowly creatures.

I believe that the calling of motherhood is the holiest and should be the happiest of all earth's tasks.

I believe that Christ who was himself a child, born of a human mother, is the one never-failing source of help for perplexed, discouraged or wearied motherhood.

Since to this work, Father, Thou hast called me, help me to give to it all that Thou hast given me, of understanding and wisdom and strength and love and gentleness and patience and faithfulness."

The Waking Year

A LADY red upon the hill
Her annual secret keeps;

A lady white within the field
In placid lily sleeps!

The tidy breezes with their brooms
Sweep vale and hill and tree!

Prithee, my pretty housewives,
Who may expected be?

The neighbors do not yet suspect!

The woods exchange a smile,—
Orchards, and buttercups, and birds

In such a little while.

And yet how still the landscape stands,
How nonchalant the wood,

As if this resurrection

Were nothing very odd!

appears the long procession of mothers who write and act and sing, mothers who conduct big businesses, mothers who manage clubs and engage passionately in welfare activities. Suddenly, my own busy, happy life seems meandering futility. After all, what is it to feed and clothe and teach and eternally bring up two sparkling infants? Not five years ago, I should have despised the round of nurse-maiding and kindergartening on which I now spend all my time. My soul momentarily contracts with envy for those others, who, having children, yet possess eyes undimmed for beauty, and minds that can still follow with pleasure the involutions of modern thought.

It is not so with me. Sometimes in rare periods when a vacant hour does not coincide with complete exhaustion, I try to read the books that interested me five years ago. It makes my heart sick. Words follow words upon the printed page, but the thought remains buried too deep for my unaccustomed digging; and when I go to the beach with the babies, the sea, no doubt, sings the old silken tunes; but I cannot hear them, and the quivering blue and silver is just wind and water to me, all that world of careful thought, of color and sound, has gone. I stand an exile, gazing toward a vanished shore.

Then my little son comes over, and tries to see what it is that I watch so intently on the distant horizon. His warm and loving hand pulls at me, until I turn and see my new heaven and earth in his two eyes. Trouble enough and pain, and joys so piercing as to press upon the soul like agony, and all woven upon a warp of laughter.

Does the world hold anything like the promise of these buds? Is there anywhere a task rightfully more absorbing than the guidance of that awakening life? In the wonder of children's eyes, the commonest things put on the glory of their creation; little ants hurrying so busily over the concrete walks, and delicate moon riding in the translucent autumn haze, alike shine with the beauty of God's first thought. Is it to my clumsy hands that is entrusted the changing of that wonder into the stare of adult boredom? How pitifully ill-trained I feel!

And the laughter, over nothing, over everything. Just joy in life, just inconsequent happiness. How am I to keep that fountain bubbling, to keep it free from the choking of common foolish cares, and yet not turn my babies upon the world with the talents of the lilies of the field?

No, I do not envy those others. To hold the restless, vulgar adult world, they must pay with an exile more bitter than mine. After all, through the gate of my children's thoughts, I see Paradise Regained.—From the Contributors Club, of The Atlantic Monthly.

The Young Reserves

My New Dress

*MY mother buys a piece of cloth
To make a frock for me;
She cuts it up in little bits,
Though why I cannot see.
She cuts it up in little bits,
And then, with might and main,
She sews and sews and sews and sews,
And sews it up again!*

When Red Dresses Were the Style

THE other day Peggy came in and sat down. In that tired, disgruntled fashion that could mean only one thing: Something had gone wrong. And that something turned out to be a desperate need for a new dress—and no money to get one!

"Dear me!" I sympathized, "but I thought your plaid dress was as good as new."

"It's so dull," Peggy groaned.

"Oh!" I sighed. When anybody tells me that green and blue and tan plaid is dull, then what more is to be said? Unless, indeed, one tells a story.

"That reminds me of the governor's daughters," I reminisced.

Peggy brightened: "Are they a story?"

"They are!"

She curled up in the big chair delightfully. "Let me hear all about them, how old they were and what they looked like and why I remind you of them and everything!"

"Well," I began, "I never really knew them but once when I had a dress I detested, my father told me about the governor's daughters; and although I am ever so old by this time I have never forgotten them. Never! You see, they were rather conspicuous little girls all of a sudden, when their father became governor of their state and they all moved to the capital to live. And up to the very last moment they had supposed that of course they would have lots of new clothes, now that they had become so very important. But would you believe it? Not one single new dress did they get; not one! Their mother said to them in a surprised way:

"But, my dears, your little red dresses are in perfect condition, and almost new."

"But red isn't stylish, mother—"

"It's such a bright red, mother—"

"We did so awfully want new dresses, for I guess everybody will take a look at the governor's daughters, mother—"

"And nobody wears red nowadays. Nobody!"

"But although they begged and pleaded and made all sorts of little suggestions, Mrs. Governor-elect thought their red dresses would be plenty good enough. Plenty! And neither tears nor sighs nor pouts could make her change her mind about the becomingness of that particular shade of red. How do you like the story, Peggy?"

"It's great!" sighed Peggy. "But what happened?"

"Well, they moved to the capital to live, and on Sunday morning Mr. and Mrs. Governor and the little Misses Governor went to church,—yes, in red dresses, of course! And, would you believe it, on the way home Serenity Arethusa Quiggin said to her mother: 'Mamma did you ever in your life see darling dresses than the governor's daughters had on? Don't you think it would be ever and ever so becoming to me to have a new red dress?'"

"But, Serenity!" gasped her mother, 'your brown dress is almost as good as new!'"

"But red's so much more stylish, mamma!"

"W-e-l-l, I guess maybe it is. I tell you, Serenity dear, maybe we can manage it somehow or other!" And although the Quiggins were poor, the first thing anybody knew Serenity Arethusa was going to church in a red dress every Sunday and feeling very stylish. But that is not the end of the matter, for on that first Sunday morning Phoebe Elvira Piper also saw those red dresses, and she gave her parents no rest until she had one herself. And when Minerva Drusilla Skinner found that Phoebe Elvira Piper and Serenity Arethusa Quiggin each had red dresses, life held no joy for her until she had one, too. So what do you suppose happened, Peggy?"

"What?" questioned Peggy, all eyes.

"Why, my dear, red dresses became the rage. And people stormed the dry-goods stores for the same kind of material that the governor's daughters had in their lovely red frocks! Which just shows you that to strange eyes another girl's dresses look lovely and attractive and desirable, because they're new and different from your own that you're so used to."

Peggy sparkled her adorable smile at me: "And the moral of that is: be contented with your old plaid dress, Peggy! But tell me, is there anybody anywhere that likes it enough to copy it and make it the style?"

For answer, I picked up the newspaper and showed her an advertisement of a plaid dress that really might have been her own! So, poor child, she feels that both she and the governor's daughters are a year ahead of everyone else. The delightful part of it is that the following Sunday when Peggy went to church the minister preached on fashions, and his text was: "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looked on the heart." So when she next came in to talk, we decided that thoughts and wishes and deeds mattered more than any little old plaid dress in the world, and that nobody ever loved anybody else on account of clothes, anyway. Whereupon I read her the poem on this page about "Fashions at the Zoo," and Bill said frankly that that was how it sounded to him when girls fell to discussing styles. So in order to silence his sarcasm we set him to guessing the following dry-goods puzzles, omitting the last word each time to see how quick he would be!

Dry-Goods Puzzle

(Try these on your family!)

1. The artist should dress in canvas.
2. The gardener should dress in lawn.

14. The jeweler should dress in cotton.

Spring Fashions at the Zoo

By ABBIE FARWELL BROWN

DEAR! Dear! What can the matter be? Such noises at the zoo!

With roars and growls and shrieks and howls,
And caterwauling too!

The kitten innocently asked

What were the latest styles;

And now the fashion notes are heard
For miles and miles and miles.

Said zebra, "Stripes are quite au fait."

The leopard growled, "Oh, no!

The fashion now is polka dots."

Hissed snake, "Who told you so?"

"Checks are the very newest thing."

The tortoise snapped, "My! my!

'Tis plaids, my dear, are chic this year,
You know as well as I."

"One must wear fur," the tiger roared.

"What fur?" the ostrich screamed,

"Feathers, they say, are all the style!"

The monkey shrieked, "You dreamed!"

"Necks must be long and collars small,"

Giraffe cried, "styles have shrunk."

The elephant gave squeals of rage,

And spanked her with her trunk!

"At least, one needs a slender waist!"—

The wasp's words stung the brute.

"Tails must be short." "No, tails are long!"

Began a new dispute.

Then at the zoo wild chaos reigned

In every stall and cage;

Teeth, claws, and rolling eyes declared

What fashions were the rage.

The trembling kitten crept away

And hid herself awhile.

"I guess it's safe for kits," she mused,

"To keep behind the style."

Young People's Work

Topic for May 14

HELPING OUR CHURCH: OUR CHURCH
HELPING US
Ps. 122:1-9.

*"I was glad when they said unto me
Let us go into the house of Jehovah."*

This topic is intended primarily for Christians. It will be treated from the point of view of those who are members, for Baptists hold to the principle of a converted membership.

I. Helping Our Church

1. The institution. What is this thing we call the church? There can be no intelligent response on the part of the young people until this question is answered.

2. Its mission. For what purpose was the church established? What is the scope of its mission? An adequate answer to these questions is necessary. Turn to the pages of the New Testament. Look up the meaning of "The Great Commission."

3. A personal relation. "Our"—my church (meaning the local organization). How can I help?

(1) By my presence. Although Baptists abhor Christian Science, many of them adopt the policy of worship "in absentia." Just how much the radio will encourage this class remains to be seen. The right sort of a Christian will be "on hand."

(2) By my money. The giving of at least one-tenth of the income to kingdom activities is a good place to begin. By no means stop with the tenth. There are those who do not believe in tithing as a method for beginners. They say we should urge "stewardship." Of course, but in school life we do not start the boy in the grades on higher mathematics.

(3) By my service. Many young people fall away from the church because they have nothing to do—no responsibility. Be willing to do even the most menial task for the Master. There are the various duties in the young people's society; teaching Sunday-school classes; visitation; clerical work for the pastor. Do something for your church and do it well.

II. Our Church Helping Us

Of course, the church must have a plan of evangelism by which young people are constantly brought to the Saviour, but this is not a topic on "evangelism."

Now, that I am loyally supporting my church, what may I expect in return?

1. A preacher who is a real man. Note two things: A preacher, and a real man. Young people of today are increasingly demanding a trained ministry—a ministry that knows something. They are demanding something more than the products of "short-cuttism." They want men in the pulpit who can unfold to them the truths as found in the Book of Life instead of going off on all sorts of hobbies and fanciful interpretations. Further, young people of these days demand of their ministers that they be red-blooded men—men who can enter into and share with them life's experiences. The young people of today need a minister who can interpret for them the true relation of the sciences to Christian truth. The church must be true to her teaching function or lose her thinking young people.

2. A program of activity. There are hundreds of Baptist churches that need either a first-class diagnostician or an undertaker. They have no program. Ordinarily young people do not possess a great deal of affection for a dead or dying institution. Why should they? Life's too short! Young people have a right to expect a program of religious training that will adequately meet the needs of their growing lives. They have a right to expect attractive and helpful worship services. They have a right to expect the church to make necessary provision to care for their social and recreational needs.

But some one says: "We can't do all this. Our church is poor, and we have only a few members." To this we reply:

There is not a church anywhere in the world between Podunk and Mars Hill that cannot have just what it needs to carry on an aggressive program, if those responsible will put soul into their leadership. Can't! There's no such word in the English language or any other for the devoted saint of God who "wills" to do.

Afield

The Buffalo Baptist Young People's Association composed of twenty societies is making an earnest effort to follow out the program of tithing and stewardship as mapped out by the B. Y. P. U. of America. Evangelism was stressed during March.

"Others" will be the key-word for the Inter-provincial B. Y. P. U. Convention of Ontario and Quebec which meets in London, Ont., May 23-24. Rev. Sumner R. Vinton of the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention will give a series of his inspiring illustrated lectures. General Secretary White will also attend the sessions of the convention, also the meetings of the Inter-provincial Executive.

The Dallas World, published by the Church Press, gives large space to Baptist young people's activities. The paper has a large circulation among the church constituency of Dallas.

The Christian Endeavor Union of Arizona recently celebrated its third anniversary in a three days' convention at Phoenix. There were 315 in attendance, 100 of whom were Pima Indians, with junior, intermediate and senior organizations represented.

The nineteenth annual convention of the Religious Education Association held in Chicago March 29-April 1 gave practically the entire time to a consideration of week-day religious education.

The Chicago Baptist Association will meet for its next session with the First Church, Elgin, Ill., June 1-2. A great program is being planned for the evening of June 1, this being known as Young People's Night.

The young people of the Maritime Provinces, under the leadership of Waldo C. Machum, director of young people's activities, have been carrying on an aggressive tithing campaign.

Baltimore young people observed "Study Course Week" March 12-17. The sessions were held in the Temple Church. Courses were offered in the Junior Manual Training, in Bible study, etc.

The Baptist Times and Freeman for March, carries an abridged address of President F. J. Blight on "The Challenging Call of our Glorious Dead to the Young Men of our Churches." It is a red-blooded appeal to the young men of the Western Group of the London Baptist Association.

Minnesota Baptists are wide-awake as to their opportunity in the coming Young People's Convention to St. Paul, June 28-July 2. The slogan "Forward with Christ" is being heard on all sides. The possibilities of the convention are unlimited. The special Young People's Issue of THE BAPTIST, May 20, will carry complete program as well as cuts of speakers.

The annual meeting of the Cleveland association of young people will be held on April 28 at First Church. Judge Florence E. Allen will be the speaker. Judge Allen is the first woman to act in the capacity of judge on the Common Pleas bench. Plans are under way by which the young people of the city will send one representative from the various foreign-speaking missions of Cleveland, to the Ohio Baptist Assembly meeting at Granville. Fine!

Ohio state young people's officers have sent out letters to all young people's presidents regarding the part of the young people in the New World Movement Campaign.

The B. Y. P. U. of First Church, Fort Wayne, Ind., held its annual banquet March 30.

A number of the churches of Fort Wayne Association have gone over the top in the young people's campaign to raise $2,500 for Franklin College.

The Columbia City Assembly dates are July 28-Aug. 7. Five hundred at least will be there. Enthusiasm is great. Plan to spend your vacation at the assembly. National Convention, St. Paul, June 28-July 2. Can you go?

At the last annual institute and quarterly rally of the San Francisco Bay B. Y. P. U. Association, Miss May Brainard, office secretary of the Pacific Coast Headquarters of B. Y. P. U. of America, conducted a conference on "How to Conduct a Devotional Meeting."

The University Baptist is the title of a very interesting bulletin published by the Baptist Student Cabinet of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y. Rev. John D. W. Fetter is Baptist university pastor. A recent issue of the bulletin carried an article on "Why I Believe in the Ministry as an Attractive Field for Life Work" by Dr. A. W. Beavan, pastor of Lake Ave. Church, Rochester.

"Stop that waste" is the startling title to a little editorial appearing in the Oracle, the official publication of the Cleveland Association of Baptist Young People. Reports from the various societies indicate that the Clevelandites are on the job.

Oregon young people have raised over $900, with which to pay for their new assembly grounds. Rev. G. H. Young, director of religious education, is leading the young people in Bible study, tithing and life work activities.

The Illinois Baptist Summer Assembly will be held at Shurtleff College, Alton, Ill., July 15-22.

Chicago young people are planning a large delegation to the St. Paul convention. A good many down-staters will also attend.

The Inter-provincial B. Y. P. U. Convention of Ontario and Quebec will be held at London, Ont., May 23-24.

Who's Who St. Paul Convention Program

June 28—July 2, 1922

REV. C. W. ATWATER is pastor of Lincoln Park Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, and President of the Baptist Young People's Union of America. He will deliver the opening address of the convention.

REV. BERNARD C. CLAUSEN, pastor of the great First Church of Syracuse, N. Y., will deliver one of the evening addresses of the convention.

REV. G. A. CLARKE, pastor of the First Church, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, will deliver one of the evening addresses of the convention. Mr. Clarke is vitally interested in the young people of Edmonton, this being our nearest B. Y. P. U. group to the North Pole. Mr. Clarke will also have charge of the early morning prayer service on Sunday.

MISS EDNA GEISTER, well-known social and recreational expert of Elgin, Ill., will conduct two conferences on this subject. Miss Geister is very popular with young people and during her conferences she will answer the question, "What shall we play?"

MISS HELEN CRISSMAN of the Department of Missionary Education of the Northern Baptist Convention and of World Wide Guild fame, will conduct two conferences on missionary activities in the young people's society.

MR. M. M. MCGORRILL, director of Young People's Work for the American Publication Society, will conduct two conferences on programs and activities of intermediate young people.

REV. A. H. GAGE, director of Religious Education for Chicago Baptist Association, will conduct one conference on "Evangelism of Youth" and one on "Devotional Life of Youth."

REV. SUMNER R. VINTON of Roselle, N. J., and of the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention, will give three of his famous illustrated lectures before the convention. Mr. Vinton is unquestionably our greatest leader in the presentation of the denominational task in pictures.

DR. M. P. BOYNTON is pastor of the Woodlawn Church, Chicago, and is one of the leading ministers of the city in civic affairs. He will conduct one conference on the duties and responsibilities of young people to their local communities.

MISS VERA RICE, formerly state young people's worker for Minnesota, and vice-president of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, will conduct two conferences on local organization and operation.

DR. O. C. S. WALLACE, pastor of Eutaw Place Church, Baltimore, a great friend of all Baptist young people, will deliver one of the evening addresses before the convention. Dr. Wallace will also deliver the coronation or closing address on Sunday night.

REV. C. W. GILKEY is pastor of Hyde Park Church, Chicago. Mr. Gilkey knows young people's problems and is very popular among the high school students of the city and is constantly in demand for addresses to the students of the leading colleges and universities of the country.

MISS JESSIE BURRALL, director of religious activities of Stephens College, Columbia, Mo., and teacher of the great "Burrall Class," will deliver an address on tithing and stewardship before the convention. She will also conduct one conference on the subject.

MR. THOMAS RICHES of Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, and prominently connected with the young people's work of Ontario and Quebec, will conduct two conferences on city and associational organization and operation.

DR. EMORY W. HUNT is president of Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pa. He will deliver two addresses before the convention, one dealing with the study life of the young people, the other on the devotional life.

DR. C. D. CASE is pastor of First Church, Oak Park, Ill. He has been prominently connected with the young people's affairs of the Northern Baptist Convention. He is recognized as one of the leading pastors of the N. B. C.

REV. HERBERT HINES, pastor of First Church, Kankakee, Ill., and recording secretary of the B. Y. P. U. of America, will conduct one conference on "Young People in Rural and Village Communities."

REV. L. J. VELTE, pastor of Merriam Park Church, St. Paul, will assist in the conferences on church vacation schools.

REV. F. H. FAHRINGER, pastor of Lake Harriet Church, Minneapolis, will assist in conferences on church vacation schools.

MISS MEME BROCKWAY of the educational department of the American Baptist Publication Society, is one of the leading workers among juniors in the United States. She will conduct two conferences on junior organization and activities.

MISS EVALYN CAMP is one of the leading young women of the Northwest. She is greatly interested in young people and missionary activities. She will assist Miss Helen Crissman in conducting two conferences on missionary activities in the Young People's Society.

Minneapolis the "Flour" City

Fundamentally underlying all the beauty of this city is its wealth of production and sound business enterprise. Incorporated as a city, Feb. 28, 1867, Minneapolis, now just a little more than fifty years old, is one of the great industrial cities of America and the commercial and financial metropolis of the American Northwest. It is situated near the center of Minnesota and almost in the precise center of North America. It is the head of navigation on the Mississippi River, and the center of a web of twenty-nine railroad transportation lines. Its population on Jan. 1, 1920, was 380,582. Minneapolis with its suburbs, and St. Paul, the "other twin," form a single community of more than 750,000 inhabitants, separately governed but practically one.

Minneapolis owes its existence to the presence of a cataract in the Mississippi River which was first utilized to turn the wheels of a small grist mill nearly seventy years ago by the garrison at Fort Snelling, the pioneer frontier army post. This experiment brought about the complete harnessing of St. Anthony Falls and resulted in the development which made Minneapolis the world's greatest manufacturer of flour. The daily capacity of its mills is 99,860 barrels and flour shipments have exceeded 18,000,000 barrels annually. Industrial progress along other lines has given it a wide variety of manufactures, and it ranks fourteenth among the industrial centers of America. Other merchandise produced by Minneapolis factories has found it easy to follow the trails blazed around the world by its first product, flour.

The first energy of St. Anthony Falls was also devoted to the manufacture of lumber, and millions of logs from the great forests of northern Minnesota have been floated down the Mississippi and cut into lumber. While its saw mills have diminished rapidly within late years, Minneapolis is still the important lumber market and leading manufacturer of wood products in the Northwest.

Religious Education

Music in Missionary Education

By A. EDITH MEYERS

The power and possibilities of the use of music in missionary education is seldom appreciated. Missionary hymns are usually announced and sung with no real feeling of their significance, and consequently leave no lasting impression. Many familiar hymns have thrilling missionary associations. Have one of the young people tell the story before the hymn is sung. Here are a few suggestions:

Fifty years ago a young man, Rev. Edgar P. Scott, went as a missionary to Assam. He was an accomplished musician, possessing a fine voice and ability as a violinist. Soon after his arrival he saw on the street a man of strange appearance and learned that he belonged to a wild mountain tribe who had never heard of Christ. Mr. Scott prayed over the matter and decided to visit that tribe. Government officials tried to dissuade him, but in vain. With a native convert of another tribe for guide, and his beloved violin, he climbed the steep mountain trail. Suddenly he encountered a savage war party, armed with formidable spears. They seized him and pointed their spears at his heart. Breathing a prayer for help, Mr. Scott drew out his violin and began to play and sing in the native language a Christian hymn that he had loved as a boy in the homeland. As he began to play, he closed his eyes expecting at any moment to feel the thrust of the upraised spears. At the end of the third verse he opened his eyes and beheld the savages standing silently, tears in their eyes and their spears fallen from their hands. Let us sing the hymn that Mr. Scott sang that day:

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall."

More than a hundred years ago a young English minister was visiting in the home of his father-in-law, Dean Shirley, in whose church he was to preach next day. It was an important occasion for the king had issued a royal mandate that in all the churches a collection should be taken for foreign missions. Whether or not the sermon was to deal with missions we do not know, but the sermon was not destined to be the most important part of the service. On Saturday afternoon Dr. Shirley said to his young son-in-law, "Reginald, I wish you would write a missionary hymn for use tomorrow." "Certainly, sir," responded Reginald, without a moment's hesitation. Fortunately Reginald was something of a poet, having taken a prize for a Latin poem when but a seventeen-year-old student at Oxford. Seating himself by a window, he set to work, and in a few moments produced the most familiar of all our missionary hymns, "From Greenland's icy mountains." Reginald Heber's sermon on that memorable Sunday has long been forgotten, but the hymn he wrote still echoes around the world and inspires Christian hearts to pray, give and go to preach the gospel where "The heathen in his blindness, Bows down to wood and stone."

Other stories of hymns with missionary associations may be found in "Holding the Ropes," Belle M. Brain.

Illustrated missionary hymns, sung from the screen, fire the imagination and stir the emotions. He who has thus sung "The Hymn of the Continents" cannot forget the thrill of the magnificent pictures, the glowing words and the stately music. Several well-known hymns have been pictured, some line by line, others stanza by stanza. Write to Harry S. Myers, Stereopticon Department, 276 Fifth Avenue, for detailed information.

Primary children and juniors love to sing a familiar song translated into the language of some mission field. Here is the familiar "Jesus Loves Me" in Japanese. It may be easily read from the blackboard and sung if it is borne in mind that all vowels take the Italian sound and that two vowels coming together are pronounced separately, as aisu=ah-ee-soo. The rhythm insures the correct accent on syllables.

Shu wara wo aisu
Shu wa tanyokaiba
Wara yonaku to mo
Osore wa areji

Chorus

Wago Shu Esu
Wago Shu Esu
Wago Shu Esu
Wara wo aisu
Waga tsume no tame
Sakoe wa sutata
Ama yore kudare
Junji ka ni tsukeri

Here is "Good Morning to You" in Chinese:

"Sing-sang, bing-ang,
Beng-yu, bing-ang,
Sing-sang, beng-yu
Ja-ja bing-ang."

These words, translated, mean:

"Teacher, peace,
Friends, have peace,
Teacher, friends,
Together have peace."

Ask the next missionary who visits the school to write out a verse of some familiar hymn in the language of his or her field, and sing it occasionally. It will help to keep the field in the pupils' remembrance and will deepen their interest.

A missionary song that is sung in a casual and perfunctory manner is but so much empty sound.

International Uniform Lesson for May 14

HEZEKIAH LEADS HIS PEOPLE BACK TO GOD

2 Chronicles 30:1-27. Golden Text: 2 Chronicles 30:9.

Setting

Hezekiah is the last of the four kings who ruled Judah during the life of Isaiah the prophet. His rank as the most meritorious of the kings is probably due to the influence of Isaiah. To Hezekiah is given the encomium, there was "after him, none like him among the kings of Judah, nor any that was before him." A slight obscurity of dates concerning Hezekiah's accession to the throne makes it uncertain whether the invitation was sent to the Northern Kingdom before or after the fall of Samaria.

Lesson

It was a depleted treasury, a devastated army and an unprotected and impoverished country which Hezekiah found at the beginning of his reign. In time, after the fashion of King Uziah, the army was reinforced, defenses built, vineyards and olive groves and grain fields again cultivated, but first came the wrecking of heathen altars and the cleansing of the temple. Then letters were sent summoning Israel as well as Judah, from "Beersheba to Dan" (the quotation, designating the farthest south and farthest north towns of the kingdom of David and Solomon, a distance of 150 miles, is usually given in the reverse order, but writing of the Southern Kingdom, the chronicler mentions the southern city first) "that they should come to keep the passover unto Jehovah at Jerusalem: for they had not kept it in great numbers in such sort as it is written. So the posts went with letters from the king and his princes throughout all Israel and Judah. . . . And there assembled at Jerusalem much people to keep the feast of unleavened bread in the second month, a great assembly." Nisan, the first month of the year and which corresponded to our April, was the regular time for the Feast of the Passover and of Unleavened Bread, but those not then prepared to observe it were permitted to observe it in the second month. On this occasion the priests had not sanctified themselves, nor had the people at Jerusalem because of the late cleansing of the temple. Thus it was necessary to have it at the later date.

Leading Thoughts

1. "First things first." In Hezekiah's reign religion was not made incidental, to be attended to after all civic matters had been cared for.
2. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."
3. No ruler is a safe ruler who is not subject to an authority higher than himself.

Our Own Folks

Nebraska Letter

By R. R. COON

A special meeting of the Nebraska State Convention was held in Grand Island, March 30. It was thought advisable to call the Baptists of the state together to consider what could further be done in collecting the amount needed by May 1. The work of those who had canvassed the churches of the entire state was finished, but left much to be done. The attendance at this convention was about 200, representing at least one-third of the churches.

Judge Freeman, of Denver, and Rev. A. C. Hanna, missionary from Sagaing, Burma, were the prominent speakers. Judge Freeman gave a full and informing address at the opening session. Dr. Fowle, state secretary, had made a statement of our missionary finances, and Judge Freeman's object was chiefly to explain what was not clear and meet any objections or answer any questions that might arise. After his address time was given for a general conference lasting till supper was called. A good number took part in this exercise illustrating the opinions of those participating; a very profitable service. It was expected that the workers who had canvassed the churches in the interest of this cause would make some report of their success; no such report was made.

After a social hour ministers, laymen and women met in different rooms for consultation and conference. At the evening service Rev. A. C. Hanna, grandson of Adoniram Judson, missionary on that historic Baptist mission field, gave an inspiring address. It was a tender and powerful appeal for greater missionary endeavor.

A series of resolutions was presented and adopted. The spirit of them was to urge pastors to present again to their churches the imminent need for action in securing prompt payment of pledges and otherwise to help relieve the present crisis. Judge Freeman read a paper the insistent cry of which was: "Let us pay our debts."

It was voted to send a telegram of greeting to Dr. Aitchison and also ordered to send a copy of the resolutions to all the churches.

Chapel Addresses

During the winter and spring President Wells, of Grand Island College, has visited many churches and communities, to the great advantage of the college and the betterment of those addressed. And thus, or otherwise, he has brought many a visitor who has given a fitting message to the college company. Rev. P. W. Crannell, president of Kansas City Seminary, recently gave an address, fitting just now, on "Science and Religion." Rev. Frank Burt, president of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. College, addressed the students. A moving picture demonstration and lecture gave an evening of rare entertainment and information. Rev. and Mrs. C. J. Bukoutz delighted all with a sermon in songs. In fine expression this reminded one of Sankey's eloquent singing, and their melody of the Carman family, formerly so highly esteemed. Why should not a singer clearly express the sentiment as well as the musical tone of a song? At the same chapel service Dr. Florence Newberry Gribble, medical missionary of Bozoum, Africa, gave an appealing address and Rev. Allen Bissell, field director of the college, thrilled the students with a startling five-minute speech while forming a new society, W. O. F. G. I. C. ("Win one for Grand Island College").

Science and Religion

Dr. Crannell's address mentioned above, by request was repeated in the Baptist Church in Grand Island. By an original and unique method he illustrated this somewhat discussed subject; most scholarly but so simple that a high-school student could easily hear and know, "Science and religion must be one as God who is one is the Author of both. There can be no conflict between them, but only between the students of science—theorists—and the students of religion—theologians—and these will probably always differ." We called to mind a wise remark made by a great teacher, G. W. Northrop, in the days when Darwin and Charles Lyell were startling the world with their bold announcements: "Young gentlemen, it will be time enough to be disturbed by their announcements when men of science, so-called, agree among themselves." That time is not yet.

A New Suggestion

A writer in one of our denominational papers makes the suggestion that the names of pastors be omitted in news items from the churches; this to apply only to the pastors of low estate, not the high-up leaders whose names appear constantly in every issue of every paper. A novel plan this would be to write a story of the work in the churches "with Hamlet left out." If we remember, the writer of this item had his own name affixed to it.

Two Evangelists

in the state are doing good work, chiefly in communities most needed, where Protestant influence is of little weight. Chaplain E. W. White held a revival meeting near Clearwater, where once there was a Freewill Baptist church, now inactive. State Colporteur J. F. Judkins at different times did excellent work here. A live Sunday school has been organized, a good number have been converted, others reclaimed, and it is expected that a Baptist church of fifty members or more will be organized. "Too much cannot be said of the splendid work of Brother Judkins," one writes from the field. A work so well begun should be followed by continual upbuilding and the settling of a pastor.

Evangelist R. Richards is having marked success at Humphrey, a small town with virtually no regular Protestant service. At the very first meeting several were converted. At this writing sixteen have accepted Christ. Rev. J. W. Benjamin, rural church director, has gone to Humphrey to aid in organizing there a Baptist church, and to prepare another field for a pastor. Rev. J. C. Bukoutz is much encouraged by progress made at Dannebrog. Four were recently baptized, all Lutherans formerly. The Swedish Lutheran church till recently has been the one leading organization of the town. Brother Bukoutz preaches for the new church at Rockville, twenty miles distant, and leads its weekly prayer meeting; the only Protestant services held in the town.

We regret to mention the resignation of Rev. C. M. Foreman, of Blair, after a pastorate of over six years. They have been years of steady increase in all lines of church work. During that time more persons have been received into the church than the church numbered when he became pastor, the large majority by baptism. These items we gathered from the state annuals. We trust he may remain in the state; we need such men.

The Maritime Provinces

By A. C. CHUTE

There died in Wolfville, Nova Scotia, March 30, a woman widely known and universally beloved among us, Mrs. J. W. Manning. Her girlhood home was in Canso, N. S., from which she went out and received education at Grand Pre Seminary. Thereafter she taught school for a few years, in that time manifesting the missionary spirit which marked her whole life by organizing evening classes for colored children and contributing as she might to their religious welfare. As a minister's wife she served nobly in two parsonages, at St. Stephen, N. B., for three years, and for nineteen years at the North Baptist Church, Halifax, N. S. Her husband, Dr. Manning, chairman of the Board of governors of Acadia University, long served the Baptist denomination of these provinces as secretary-treasurer of the Foreign Mission Board. And a more efficient helper in this line of service than his gifted wife he could not have had. She was a member of the first Woman's Missionary Aid Society organized in Canso, in June, 1870, the first Baptist Woman's Missionary Society in America. Later she became president of this organization, a position she honorably filled for seventeen years. For the past sixteen years she has been editor of the official organ of the society, known as The Tidings. Despite the trying sickness of her last months she continued this editorial work with the exception of the last issue of the magazine prior to her demise.

The present pastor of the Baptist Church of St. Stephen, N. B., is Rev. W. C. Goucher. He has the enviable record of being in his thirty-fourth year in the oversight of that church. Additions to the membership have in goodly numbers continued through the years, and at the time of this writing twenty converts are awaiting baptism. Dr. Goucher could give valuable advice upon how to increase the length and maintain the efficiency of pastorates.

Rev. Bowley Green, who five years ago came to us from the United States and took the pastorate of the First Church at Moncton, N. B., has resigned that charge. His ministry at Moncton, one of our largest churches, has been quite a notable one, and he will be remembered as an attractive and powerful preacher. He goes from us to London, Ont. That leaves the great Moncton Church to look about for a strong successor. The man who comes will face a large opportunity at that railway center.

The widely known English preacher, Dr. Campbell Morgan, has been holding a series of meetings in the town of New Glasgow, N. S., a center of Presbyterianism. These services, well advertised in advance, have been largely attended, and the testimony is that the community and the country around has been aroused to a greatly increased interest in religious matters by Dr. Morgan's wonderful exposition of Scripture. These expositions testify to the drawing and enriching power of the gospel.

Acadia University has recently received a spiritual uplift by the presence of Dr. Herbert Johnson, who was for years pastor of the Warren Avenue Church in Boston. He spoke every night for two weeks to the students only, and on two Sundays preached morning and evening in the town church for Dr. J. H. MacDonald. His messages gripped those connected with our schools. Already about fifty have made public profession of faith in Christ and others will follow. Dr. Johnson is engaged to be among us again as speaker before the college Y. M. C. A. during the approaching commencement week. A cordial welcome awaits him. The return of no one is quite so pleasing as that of the man who has been the conveyor of spiritual blessings.

New York Church Raises $150,000

First Church of Rome is hitting its stride. During the eleven months of the pastorate of Rev. Ivan M. Rose, all the latent earnestness regarding the building of an educational plant and the remodeling of the church auditorium has been whipped into zeal. With Easter Sunday, April 16, under the lead of Dr. F. H. Divine, this historic church went into action. The result was $150,000. Charles Carpenter, of Foote & Carpenter, architects of Rochester, is engaged for the construction. His plans, which the church has adopted with enthusiasm, give promise of a church unit in beauty and useableness unsurpassed. Mr. Carpenter is the architect who built the Lake Avenue Church in Rochester.

All winter and spring, the people have been preparing in heart and mind for these great days. Two features which met with approval and which were used to the limit were church night and the weekly church calendar. Each week with freshness and vigor the latter carried the promotional program of the church to the last constituent, for all not present at service receive this fine "trade sheet" by mail. A secretary has been secured with downtown office, thus taking from the pastor great burdens of detail. And church night! Well, it was locally adapted; it gave large opportunity for men and women to take places of leadership; and its tone and conduct was so eminently religious that recreational, social and other features all seemed to focus in the touch with God. It became an unexpected boon as a medium of continuous intelligence relative to the ongoing program as it was heading toward the building enterprise. And it worked no hardship to the ladies, who, divided as they were into eleven good working districts, found themselves called upon no more than once in eight or ten weeks.

January was given over to emphasis upon intercession; February, stewardship. There are now some forty adult registered titheers and they range from people of limited income to the financial leaders of the church. In the recent campaign the two largest gifts, one of $7,000 and the other of $6,000 came from this group of stewards. March to Easter was given entirely to cultivation of spiritual vigor on the basis of which the great objective might be met. Incidentally (for no extra effort was made in the direction of evangelism, save the personal kind), twelve were baptized on Easter Sunday evening and it is assured that another good class will be received in May.

During the year, Mr. Rose has had help from a number of the prominent leaders, such as Drs. Beaven, Stewart, and Barbour of Rochester, Bawden, Axling, Detweiler and others. He is blessed with a high type of lay leadership which under his leadership is finding itself in ever-increasing service. It is not too much to predict that with the recent great achievement this people may be counted upon to do a notable piece of work in Central New York State and so on to the world.

Rev. H. C. Colebrooke Becomes State Director

Rev. H. Clarke Colebrooke, pastor of First Church of Gloversville, N. Y., since 1915, has accepted an appointment as general director of the New York State Convention. The work to be performed by him will be the complete supervision of the state. Under his direction will come the supervision of evangelism with his staff of evangelists; the direction of religious education and assistants; director of rural work, together with a large number of district missionaries. The several city missionary societies will also work in cooperation with the director general.

Dr. Colebrooke was born in Cazenovia, June 7, 1877, and at the age of 14 years was converted and baptized in the Delaware Street Baptist Church at Syracuse. He was licensed to preach by the Delaware Street Baptist Church in September, 1898. During the year 1898 he was a student at the University of Rochester, taking a special course in philosophy, history, language and tutored in Greek. He was graduated from the Rochester Theological Seminary with the class of 1902, having taken the full course, including Greek and Hebrew.

In 1902 he was called to the pastorate of the Memorial Baptist Church at Albany, where he remained until 1915. During the term of his pastorate in Albany, in 1908, he visited Asia Minor, Palestine and Egypt for the purpose of travel and study. During this trip he made a special reference to archaeology.

From January, 1915, until August of the same year, Mr. Colebrooke was the pastor of the University Church at Deland, Fla. In September of that year he began his pastorate of the First Baptist Church of Gloversville.

NEW YORK

FOLLOWING AN ENTHUSIASTIC RECEPTION of its new pastor, Rev. Edward M. A. Bleakney, formerly of Hyde Park, Mass., Tabernacle Baptist Church of Utica has enjoyed a month of unusual and inspirational activity. Mr. Bleakney's formal introduction was in the nature of a dinner arranged by the men of the church when 320 men sat down at one time and, after a splendid menu and a program of informality featured by music from the Bible school orchestra of twenty pieces and some congratulatory speeches, Mr. Bleakney was presented to make his first address to the men. His appeal for loyalty to the church and the kingdom was received with hearty expressions of approval and the gathering was one of the most inspirational in recent months at Tabernacle. With Bible school attendance beyond the 500 mark each Sunday since Mr. Bleakney's coming and prayer meeting attendance necessitating extra chairs being carried into the room which previously has been more than adequate to care for all present, there is evident the awakening and increased interest. Special classes in religious instruction have been conducted during the few weeks of the new pastorate and a large number united with the church by baptism Easter Sunday.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of First Church, LeRoy, Rev. I. C. Taylor, pastor, was held Friday evening, April 7. The business session was preceded by a church supper, of which 160 partook. Thirteen were baptized during the year and eight received by letter. More than $7,000 had been given during the year for all purposes, $3,300 of which was given for benevolence; also $1,007, which was given by the Sunday school, was added to the equipment fund. This fund was started by a legacy of $3,000 from the late Martha Keeney Harmon, and now amounting to $4,801, will be used in remodeling and fitting up new rooms for the Sunday school. After the business session, Dr. A. H. Horton, president of Keuka College, gave a helpful and informing address on the New World Movement.

NEW JERSEY

AVON-BY-THE-SEA: Rev. R. F. Bresnahan, pastor, baptized two men and a boy on Easter Sunday, which gives added strength to the church. Ten were baptized on a previous date, making sixteen in all since the pastor entered upon the work one year ago. Plans are being made for improvement to the church property.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

IMMANUEL CHURCH, Scranton, received seventy-four for membership Easter Sunday, fifty coming by baptism. This is the result of the well organized pastoral evangelism under the leadership of Dr. C. H. Rust.

A HELPFUL SERIES of meetings was held in Berwick Church two weeks in March. The pastor, Rev. Fred G. Bangs, was assisted by Rev. H. M. Hunsicker of Lewisburg, pastor at large of the Northumberland Association, and Rev. A. C. Hanna, pastor of the Baptist church at Sunbury. The membership of the church was invigorated and seventeen took their stand for Jesus Christ. The pastor baptized twelve on Easter Sunday.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

First Church, Pittsburgh

Baptists of our country are interested in the historic First Church of Pittsburgh. It has had a creative past. Many people have come from distant places to see this house, one of the famous pieces of church architecture in America.

Its noble history of service to Christ and his cause is of more importance than its architecture. The settling of a permanent pastor is a matter of interest to the whole territory of the Northern Baptist Convention. Last Sunday Dr. C. Wallace Petty began his ministry. Dr. Petty is son of Rev. A. M. Petty, one of our denominational leaders on the Pacific Coast, is a graduate of Occidental College in California and of Rochester Seminary. He had a notable pastorate of eleven years at Creston Ave., New York City, and then a little more than two years at Mt. Morris Church, New York City. He comes to this mother of churches at thirty-seven years of age and with a remarkable combination of talents, all of them gathered up into a personality of rare force and attractiveness, and that personality consecrated to the only Master he knows, the Lord Jesus Christ.

Dr. Petty's first Sunday at Pittsburgh will long be remembered because it is the beginning of a splendid future. A great audience heard him in the morning on the "Power of the Resurrection" and in the evening on "Called by Her First Name." The first day was a joy to all. This church is made up of a fine body of people; the building is located in a good community and near the great educational center of the city, within a few blocks of Carnegie Institute of Technology, the University of Pittsburgh and Pennsylvania College for Women; the church is already engaged in a number of useful ministries to its constituency and to the schools. During an acting pastorate of more than seven months I have had an opportunity to study the church from every point of view, within and without, and I see a great era of deeply religious prosperity beginning. When it was down town it had such men as L. C. Barnes, who was pastor twice, H. B. Grose, A. C. Applegarth, W. G. Partridge and others who laid deep foundations for this new era.

Brotherhood Resolutions

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Brotherhood of the Pittsburgh Association, held on April 10, the following resolution was adopted unanimously:

Resolved: That the executive Committee of the Brotherhood of the Pittsburgh Baptist Association hereby declares that it is not interested in the groups of so called "Fundamentalism," "Radicalism," "Conservatism" nor any other "ism" at the present existing within the membership of our Northern Baptist Convention. And that we do strongly express our confidence and interest in the Christian principles represented in and by the New Testament and hold that the Baptists take the New Testament as their supreme and only authority as regards doctrines, church organization and ordinances.

We recommend that the long recognized historic foundation of our faith remain undisturbed, and that this resolution be presented at the next annual meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention.

THOMAS H. EDMONDS,
President.
FLOYD L. CARR,
Cor. Secretary.

VERMONT

THE ANNUAL MEETING of Pownall Church, Rev. John A. McColl, pastor, was held March 30, with good attendance and good reports from all departments. The treasurer showed all bills paid and that nearly $50 was in the treasury. Officers were elected and plans laid for work of the coming year.

REV. JOHN M. MAXWELL, pastor at Belwills Falls, has been holding meetings during the fall and winter in a little hamlet called Gageville, three miles from the home church. There has been a good attendance and interest. Recently the people gave Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell a reception. About 200 people were present and the pastor was presented with a purse of money. The home church recently held its annual roll-call and business meeting. This church has a resident membership of 106 and a non-resident membership of 54. The ladies of the church served supper and there were 90 responses when the roll was called. Pastor Maxwell recently preached a series of seven sermons on "The Seven Letters to the Seven Churches in Asia" and is now preaching another series on "The Signs of the Times."

FIRST CHURCH, BURLINGTON, gave its new pastor and wife, Dr. and Mrs. William D. Ford, a recognition service and reception Friday evening, April 7. The recognition service was held in the church auditorium, Dr. W. A. Davison, presiding. A public reception followed in the parlors where not only the church people but many of the people of the city were introduced to Dr. and Mrs. Ford. Ward's Orchestra furnished the music. Light refreshments were served. Dr. Ford has already a good hold upon the church and community.

REV. FRANK S. TOLMAN has closed his work as pastor at Randolph and removed to New York City to enter another line of educational work. Pastor Tolman has been for many years one of our best workers, being pastor at West Rutland, St. Johnsbury and Randolph and doing good work on all these fields. He was for a number of years the efficient clerk of the Vermont State Convention.

LINCOLN CHURCH, REV. CHARLES P. SMITH, pastor, has recently received three by baptism and expects others soon. Mrs. Smith has organized a young people's class and has fifty-one members enrolled.

THE CHURCH at SOUTH NEWFANE, Rev. Kendrick Hackett, pastor, has lost an interested and faithful member by the death of Mrs. Georgiana Goodnow Morse. Although 93 years of age, she had been an attendant during pleasant weather the last year of her life and had been a faithful attendant all her life. Pastor Hackett was recently assisted in a series of special meetings by Rev. Walter F. Sturtevant, assistant superintendent of the convention. As a result of the faithful work done by the pastor and the special meetings twenty-four were received by baptism, three by letter and one by experience. Another class is in training for baptism.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Lyndon Center Church, Rev. C. E. Gould, pastor, was recently held. The reports of the various committees showed progress during the year, all bills paid and a good working balance in the treasury. Plans were made for considerable improvements on the church property.

REV. C. D. PIPER, pastor of Montpelier Church, celebrated his fourth anniversary on Sunday March 19. The evening service was given over to celebrating the event. Mrs. Ida E. Lane spoke of the work accomplished, as did also Beatrice Perry, laying emphasis especially on the work done for the young people. Mr.

Arthur Hartshorn, leader of the choir, emphasized the work done by Mrs. Piper in organizing a junior choir, 29 of whom were present at the service to sing. Mrs. A. P. Hibbard, one of the constituent members of the church and a staunch supporter of all the pastors since the church was organized in 1865, is still praying, laboring and giving. Her life and work is greatly appreciated by pastor and people.

CHESTER CHURCH, REV. O. H. RANKIN, pastor, had a banquet for the men's organized class Thursday evening, April 6, which was attended by fifty-three men. There are now two organized classes, one conducted by Pastor Rankin for the men and the other by Mrs. Rankin for the women.

MASSACHUSETTS

REV. P. H. McDOWELL, pastor First Church, Melrose, is giving five Sunday evening messages from April 23 to May 21 on the following: "With Jesus between His Death and Resurrection"; "With Jesus on the First Easter Day and for Forty Days"; "With Jesus in the After-Resurrection Walks and Talks"; "With Jesus in the Release of Ascension"; "With Jesus in the New Welcome and the New Work of Heaven."

Mississippi Valley

MINNESOTA

RECEIPTS OF THE NEW WORLD MOVEMENT from Minnesota churches for the month ending April 15, were 42 per cent more than the corresponding period of last year. Up to April 21, 193 churches have made offerings for missionary purposes which count on the New World Movement. The total number of churches from which offerings could be reasonably expected is 208. Thirty-four churches have already given more this year than they gave last year, which is an encouraging fact. Easter Sunday, First, St. Paul, subscribed $3,000; Calvary, Minneapolis, $1,350; Fourth, Minneapolis, $400. Other figures will be reported later.

ILLINOIS

REV. GEO. H. THOMPSON, the Harp Evangelist, assisted Covenant Church, Chicago, in two weeks of meetings. Weather conditions were unfavorable much of the time, but interest grew. This is the third time Mr. Thompson has held meetings in this church during the present pastorate of a little over seven years. Nearly fifty young people and children went forward and expressed a desire to become Christians. Some have already been baptized and others are ready.

ATTENDANCE IS INCREASING at all services of First Church, Lincoln, Rev. Stephen B. Dexter, pastor. Recently Mr. Dexter led in a city law enforcement campaign, winning the cooperation of a number of pool room proprietors.

Woman's Mission Union

The April 11 meeting of Woman's Mission Union of the Chicago Association was held in Immanuel Church, with the president, Mrs. R. P. Fales, presiding. Despite the stormy day, over 900 women attended. Several important announcements were made: (1) Worker's Conference of the Union, to be held in the Stevens Bldg., April 18, from 10:30 A. M. to 3:00 P. M. (2) Annual meeting of Central District, W. A. B. F. M. S. and W. A. B. H. M. S., to be held in Battle Creek, Mich., May 2-4, 1922. (3) The Chicago Baptist Institute, to be conducted by the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary for six weeks, opening April 17, 1922. (4) Tag Day for the Baptist Old People's Home, May 15. Dr. Benjamin Otto, superintendent of the Baptist Executive Council, in an address entitled "For Such a Time as This," told most vividly of the needs of our foreign-born population, and our Christian duty towards these people. Mrs. John Nuveen, one of our district campaign directors, gave encouraging news of the progress of the Continuation Campaign. Dr. J. J. Ross, pastor Second Church, in the devotional period, brought the "Message of the Cross," followed by the singing of "The Cross Points the Way to the Crown," by Miss Eva Peterson, of Immanuel Church. Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, in the address of the afternoon, outlined the splendid program of Northern Baptists; emphasized the fact that "half done is only well begun;" that the crux of the whole situation lies in education; and made an impassioned plea that every Baptist be loyal to the denomination. It is only by such loyalty that the work so marvelously planned can be carried out.

OHIO

GENEVA CHURCH is planning a week-end evangelistic mission with Dr. C. H. Stull, of the state convention, as leader. The church has adopted a financial budget which provides $3100 for current expenses and $4100 for missions. Every-member canvass, Sunday, April 23, and annual meeting Thursday, May 4.

BEEBETOWN CHURCH is without a resident pastor but is supplied by a student from Baldwin Wallace college. Sunday school attendance has increased during the winter.

THE PEOPLE OF TORCH CHURCH feel that the coming of the new Associational Evangelist, Rev. F. A. Maier, to this church for April 30 to continue a week's services will prove a great blessing. They feel that the situation among pastorless churches will soon change in the right direction.

LINCOLN PARK, CINCINNATI, Carleton W. Atwater, pastor. There have been sixty-three accessions to the church within the past two months, most of them by baptism. Bible school is increasing in attendance, maintaining the largest average attendance in its history. The denominational standard in Bible school, junior, intermediate, senior B. Y. P. U., and Women's Missionary Society has been reached. The brotherhood is full of interest and activity for kingdom service.

THE SPIRIT OF GOD IS WORKING mightily at the Tabernacle Church, Columbus. An evangelistic campaign has closed with some thirty actual decisions for Christ and church membership and the end is not yet. The intensive period of campaign—March 12-30, was in the hands of Pastor H. T. Houf of Granville. Under the leadership of Mr. A. J. Goddard, a brotherhood has been organized for Bible study and civic reform work which has outgrown all quarters available and is now planning an addition to the present building.

GALLIPOLIS: FIRST CHURCH, of which Rev. Robert W. Peirce is pastor, received forty-five new members on Easter Sunday. Practically all of these were baptized by the pastor during the pre-Easter campaign of evangelism in which Rev. William Pieffer, pastor of the Central Church, Columbus, ably assisted for two weeks. In appreciation for his splendid efforts the Gallipolis church presented him with an honorarium of about $400 in addition to raising $150 for the running expenses of the services. Work has already commenced to completely redecorate the interior of the church. The Sunday school has reached a high point of efficiency and is having a steady normal growth. The week-day classes in religious education in connection with the public schools are supplementing the work of the Sabbath school. Three B. Y. P. U.'s are now operating: Junior, intermediate and senior.

LINDEN AVE., DAYTON: More than thirty accessions to the Linden Avenue church are a part of the result of a series of evangelistic meetings under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. George W. Johnson. From Sunday morning, April 2 until Easter evening, revival and conversion characterized every service. Humanly speaking, the success was due largely to very careful preparation. For weeks the event was spoken of from the pulpit and given serious thought at the mid-week meetings. There was sent by mail literature outlining the plan; members frequently absent, received calls from the woman's fellowship committee and the official board, always in the spirit of prayer. Prayer lists were made and at regular and at special services earnest prayer was offered for the advancement of the kingdom through this endeavor. Assisting the pastor was Mr. L. D. Ensley, an evangelistic singer who put spirituality as well as enthusiasm into the service of song. Baptism was administered at both services on Easter day. The majority of the accessions are men. This has been true since the first of the year.

A CAMPAIGN of special evangelistic services, conducted by Dr. H. J. Whalen, of Greensburg, Pa., was recently held in Second Church, Toledo. Announcement of the meetings had been made through the newspapers and upon city billboards, so that a considerable interest had already been aroused at the time of the coming of Dr. Whalen. For more than two weeks this forceful evangelistic preacher presented from one to five messages daily. Baptisms were frequent during the services and still continue, the ages of the new converts ranging from eight to sixty-eight years.

AT GRANVILLE, on Easter Sunday twelve persons were baptized. Three await baptism, six were received by letter. Recently two young men, students at Denison University, were licensed to preach. The Easter offering in church and Sunday school was given to the New World Movement.

Dayton

Pastors of the Dayton Association held an inspiring meeting April 10 at First Church. Mr. Bawden thrilled and inspired the brethren with his animated story. The report of the churches showed many pre-Easter activities. Dr. J. B. Slocum presided. Dr. R. B. Smith of Springfield read the word of the Lord and offered prayer.

First Baptist Church, J. B. Slocum, pastor, is making preparation for the coming of Dr. Truett, May 24. It has invited other Baptist churches to enjoy the good things. The Sunday school of First Church is one of the leading schools in the city.

Colorado Ave., M. F. Bagby, pastor, dismissed four by letter, received one and approved eight.

Centerville, E. N. Lawson, pastor, has a Sunday school that is near the one hundred mark. Pastor Lawson is doing faithful service. Received one by letter and one by baptism.

Sidney, B. F. Patt, pastor, held ten days of meetings. The pastor had the help of Brother Vernon, of Willington. Good results and a number waiting baptism.

DeGraff, O. E. Miller, pastor, is correcting the roll of the church and adding new members. Seven await baptism. Remodelling of the church is under consideration.

At Springfield, Dr. R. B. Smith has just begun his fifth year. There have been more than 400 members added during the pastorate, 100 this season. The pastor is preaching sermons which are endocrinating the people.

Troy, Henry Brandt, pastor, has closed two weeks of meetings. The pastor had the help of Peter Quartel as leader in song and personal work. There were sixteen confessions and a decided increase in Sunday school.

Tippecanoe City, J. M. Cosby, pastor, has a splendid Young People's society. Twenty-six present last meeting. Twenty new members have been received as a result of special meetings. The annual meeting revealed the fact that all debts were paid.

Spring Creek, A. J. Croy, pastor, welcomes the new pastor. Much rainfall has hindered the meetings, but some good results were accomplished. The pastor is interesting the people with some fine object lessons.

Third Street, W. R. Sloman, pastor. The quarterly business meeting showed gratifying results. Bible school made an average of 436. Seven were baptized this month.

Haynes Street, M. F. Scruby, pastor, believes in evangelism. It is now in the third series of meetings for the year. Two were received.

North Dayton will complete its new building this spring. Three were baptized. The congregations are excellent.

INDIANA

REV. W. F. BOSTRICK, the new pastor at First Church, La Porte, who began his pastorate there Feb. 1, is having record-breaking attendances at all services. On Easter he baptized thirty-three and received eight by letter.

MICHIGAN

THE SECOND ANNIVERSARY of the dedication of the edifice of the Birkett Memorial Church of Detroit was observed April 9. The pastor, Dr. A. H. Owens, complying with the wishes of the church, preached the anniversary sermons. Financial reports showed heroic giving. The church property is valued at $90,000 with a debt of about $20,000. During these two years 252 people have been received into the fellowship of the church, the majority by baptism, with a corresponding growth in all departments of the work.

IN JUNE, 1921, the Howard Church, Port Huron, under the leadership of the pastor, became the Tabernacle Congregation without any denominational affiliation, meeting in a building about five blocks from the Howard Church building. It was decided to continue services in the abandoned building as the Nancy Howard Mission, by which name it was known when the work began thirty years ago, under the auspices of First Church. In July, Rev. W. T. Roberts, director of city extension, came on the field, organized Sunday school and began regular preaching services continuing the oversight of the work until October, when Rev. Arthur Chasey was placed in charge. The work has recently been reorganized and the new officers installed. Installation services were conducted by Rev. J. H. Vatcher, pastor of the First Church. Rev. C. E. Maxfield, pastor of South Park Church, made the address of counsel to the pastor, and Rev. H. H. Bowser, associate pastor of First Church, gave the address of counsel to the church.

REV. H. P. HOSKINS, of New York, recently closed a successful series of meetings for twenty-two days, with the church at Shinnston, W. Va. Congregations numbered around 500 at some of the services, and about fifty decisions for Christ were made. Mr. Hoskins is now in Lansing, conducting a series of evangelistic meetings for three weeks at North Church, Rev. J. H. Balfour, pastor.

THE MEMBERS OF FIRST CHURCH of Three Rivers, Rev. Henry A. Buell, pastor, were invited to a "pot luck supper" at the church Thursday evening, April 13. At the close of the supper the annual meeting of the church was held, and reports from the various organizations read. They were very encouraging and inspiring, but the reports from the Junior Church and financial secretary were especially interesting. Thirteen months ago Mrs. Buell gathered together six children as a nucleus for a Junior Church, and during that time it has grown to forty-three in number, with an average attendance of twenty-eight. One-fourth of First Church members are tithers; the records show they gave about twice what the non-tithers gave. The tithers were all paid in full while the non-tithers were behind in their pledges. Many of those present promised

REV. PETER M. MACKAY, pastor at Birmingham the past five years, has gone to Trinity Church, Cleveland. Pastor MacKay leaves a church well organized, and united for the advancement of a strong forward program. His removal is a distinct loss to the state force of pastors and he will be greatly missed.

THE CHURCH AT FARMINGTON is reopened by Rev. H. H. Ford, formerly of Traverse City. This church was established in 1826, and has seen its bright days and its dark days. For several years past the church building has been occupied by Methodist brethren but now that they have built, the Detroit Union and the Michigan State Convention have re-established the work there.

SCOTTEN AVE., DETROIT, Bible school installed new officers during the school session, April 2. The B. Y. P. April 8, the Baraca Class held a "stag" chicken supper followed by installation ceremonies.

SOUTH DAKOTA

REV. E. P. JOHNSON, pastor of the churches at Granite Falls and Atwater, Minn., died recently under an operation. Burial was at Sturgis. The service was in the form of a testimonial meeting by the attending pastors, led by Dr. E. R. Pope, state superintendent of missions for Minnesota. He was followed by Olaf Baeding of Minneapolis; E. A. Vallent, Duluth; Andrew Earn, Rev. N. K. Larson of Duluth; Rev. D. E. Evans of Minneapolis, formerly of Sturgis, S. D., and by several other fellow pastors. At the age of 21 Mr. Johnson was converted and entered Chicago University, graduating from that institution at the age of twenty-seven years. Under Dr. Harper he took a special three-year course in Hebrew. During his ministry he served the church at Rolette, N. D., for two years; three years at Vaug, N. D., and seven years at Rolla. A large part of his work in North Dakota was connected with the Colportage Association, where he organized forty Sunday schools, and distributed thousands of tracts, hundreds of Bibles, which endeared him to multitudes of homes in both town and rural districts. In 1911 he removed to Burton, S. D., where he served as pastor, going from there to Oldham. In 1914 he came to Buffalo Gap, thence to Sturgis. The last year and a half he served as pastor in Minnesota.

MISSOURI

FIRST CHURCH, KANSAS CITY, held special meetings April 2-16, with the pastor, Dr. Evans, doing the preaching, ably assisted by the assistant pastor, P. W. Love. A large number have united with the church. The whole church is united in brotherly love and all are working together for the upbuilding of the kingdom. Different departments of church and Sunday school conducted the opening service each evening. About sixty have united with the church. Easter Sunday forty were baptized at a 3 o'clock service and others in the evening.

Pacific Coast

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

SELMA WITH A POPULATION of 4,000 and drawing from a total population of over 11,000 in the boundaries of the high-school district, has two Baptist churches, the First and the Danish. Both pastors are aggressive and are loyally supported by their churches. The First Church, under the pastoral care of the Rev. F. Carl Truex, stands first in the point of numbers and influence in the community and is making an impression upon the affairs of the city and surrounding country that makes for the upbuilding of character. The church is well organized in all departments. The Sunday school with an enrolment of nearly 600 and an average attendance of almost 400 is already crowding its limited quarters and insisting on more room. A new location was purchased and arrangements made for the erection of a new building to cost $100,000. This was delayed by the failure of crops last year, but with encouraging prospects for this year, plans are being laid for the early completion of the building. In the meantime the work is being carried on in a temporary tabernacle. During the present pastorate of five years the membership has been more than doubled and is in full accord with the denominational program and the New World Movement. This church is installing a worker's library of over 100 volumes and is contemplating opening a reading room. A move is also on foot to purchase a pastor's reference library to be the property of the church.

FIRST CHURCH OF SELMA has called Mr. C. A. King, of Chicago, as pastor's assistant, also licensing him to preach. Mr. King came to California as an evangelist singer, but in February gave up that work to assist the pastor, Rev. F. Carl Truex, for three months. His work has been so satisfactory that he has received unanimous call to continue his services.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

REV. RUFUS KEYSER, PASTOR at Lindsay, California has accepted the position of field secretary for the John E. Brown College of Siloam Spring, Ark. It was difficult for him to leave the Lindsay church where he had recently baptized forty of his young people. In an effort to have him remain it voted an $800 advance in his salary, but Mr. Keyser was drawn by the larger work.

Shurtleff College Banquet

A meeting of old students, teachers and friends of Shurtleff College was called for a banquet in the Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Los Angeles, Friday evening, April 14. There were present thirty persons. President Duke, of Redlands University, and graduate from and former teacher in Shurtleff, and also Professors Tilton and Merrill, former teachers in Shurtleff, now teaching in Redlands, were there. Dr. Riggs, former president of the college, and his wife, attended and he was appointed toastmaster. Missionary Brown and wife, Pastor Roach and wife and other Shurtleff students were at the banquet. Fifteen addresses were made and they were all loyal and enthusiastic for old Shurtleff College. A permanent organization to be known as the Shurtleff College League of Southern California was effected. The next meeting will be held at Pasadena.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

REV. W. P. OSGOOD has resigned his pastorate at Puyallup and accepted a call to the church at Colfax. He will close his present pastorate April 30.

REV. W. H. HICKS, pastor of Fremont Church, Seattle, helped Rev. Earl Cochran in special meetings for two weeks at the Bethesda Church, Tacoma, with excellent results.

REV. AND MRS. J. O. BOVEE RECENTLY closed a successful meeting with the Baptist church at Elma and are now assisting Rev. Addison Self at Shelton.

THE ANNUAL SOCIAL BANQUET and business meeting of the Bethesda Church, La Conner, was held Thursday evening, April 6, and is said to have been the finest gathering of that kind the church ever held. Reports showed the church to be in excellent condition under the leadership of the Rev. L. L. Simmons. The W. W. G. Girls, under the direction of Mrs. F. L. Carter, their superintendent, recently gave a missionary play entitled, "The Pill Bottle" to the delight and information of the large audience that crowded the auditorium.

THE CONTEST between the Sunday schools of First Church, Tacoma, First Church, Seattle, and First Church of Portland, Ore., which closed Sunday, April 9, was won by the Tacoma Sunday school by a small margin.

MR. G. F. WALKER, JR., a member of the Baptist Church at Sedro-Woolley, who has taken a course of training at the Bible Institute in Los Angeles, has been invited to spend a month with the churches at Lyman and Concrete.

REV. MATTHEW CHAMBERLAIN, of Kuna, Idaho, became acting pastor of the Burlington Church, April 23.

AN INTERESTING PROGRAM is being prepared for the Western Washington Convention which meets with First Church of Everett, May 15-17.

THE MANY FRIENDS of Rev. Fred Berry, director of evangelism for Western Washington, will rejoice to know that since returning from the hospital he has been steadily gaining in health. He is able to get out most every day and on three occasions spent a few minutes in the office.

OREGON

REV. W. H. DORWARD, OF VENETA, will celebrate his eighty-fourth birthday anniversary May 21, 1922. He studied for the ministry in Shurtleff College and Colgate Seminary, graduating from the latter in 1871. He has held pastorates in the states of New York, Illinois, Iowa, Oregon and California. His home is now with his son-in-law, P. C. Pratt, of Veneta. Although feeble in body and almost blind, he is bright of mind and strong of spirit and is a help to the church at Veneta in many ways.

SERVICE DEPARTMENT

REV. A. P. HALL OF MT. VERNON, Ill., is open for a pastorate. Mr. Hall had the oversight of Ashley Church for a time. He was a member of Second Church for a year while I was pastor. He is a faithful minister of the gospel and an obedient servant of the Lord. He was ordained to the ministry by Second Church last January. I recommend him to any church desiring a pastor.—J. W. Patterson, pastor at New Douglas, Ill.

Laymen Hard at Work on Campaign

Northern Baptist laymen are hard at work on the campaign. They are setting a standard that the laymen of other denominations may well follow in the excellent organization and the energy and the whole-hearted loyalty with which they are going about their task. Another proof of this is contained in a telegram just received at headquarters by Dr. John Y. Aitchison from W. H. Bowler, field worker of the General Board of Promotion, whose efforts are bringing such gratifying results all through the west. He says:

"Splendid interest developing among laymen. Meeting almost every day some state council or larger group of men, and find them all eager to work. Had fine meeting Kansas City today. Dozen strongest men in city attended. All were determined to enlist whole city. Big meeting will be held twenty-fifth."

D. C. Shull, a vice-chairman of the Northern Baptist Laymen's Council, and former president of the Northern Baptist Convention, is in receipt of letters from Baptist leaders in various parts of the district under his supervision—Colorado, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wyoming—which goes to show that the laymen are hard at work on the big task.

A map of Poland sent to the Foreign Mission Society headquarters by Rev. K. W. Strzelec, director of relief in Poland, shows eighteen different centers from which the relief supplies sent on the "Ship of Fellowship" were distributed. Mr. Strzelec also reports that there are almost 400 places in Poland where relief funds have been distributed. A special loan fund has enabled 576 farmers to purchase new farming implements.

DAVID SYLVESTER BRETZ

David Sylvester Bretz born Dec. 30, 1837, in Grand Prairie, Ohio, departed this life at the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. H. Bardon, Morral, O., April 7, 1922. He was united in marriage to Miss Jane Ann Coon in 1859, and to this union four children were born, Mrs. J. H. TenEyck of Marion, Ohio, Mr. S. E. Bretz and Mrs. Chas. Swartz of Nevada, Ohio, Mrs. J. H. Bardon of Morral, Ohio. Mr. Bretz was a charter member of Grand Prairie church which was organized on Washington's birthday, 1867. Brother Bretz served as its first clerk from 1867 to 1872. The deceased last public words of exhortation, prayer and gratefulness to his Maker were spoken at the church only one week before his departure.

On January 28, 1872, he was united in marriage to Miss Florence J. Jakway, at Benton Harbor, Michigan. Besides his wife the deceased is survived by two sons and three daughters, as follows: Dr. F. E. St. Clair, of Hampton; Howard A. St. Clair, of Hampton; Mrs. W. S. Ferguson of St. Louis; Mrs. Fred Dean, of Rochester, New York; and Miss Aurelia St. Clair, who resides at home.

Mr. St. Clair was one of the charter members of the Baptist church in Hampton, and no church ever had a more loyal or consistent member, or one who did more work for the church.

Funeral services were held at the Baptist church on Sunday afternoon, conducted by the pastor, Rev. William Welch, and Rev. J. P. Stevenson of Des Moines, the latter having been pastor of the Baptist church in Hampton thirty-five years ago when it was a struggling organization. A large gathering of old friends and neighbors were present to pay last honors to one whom they loved and respected. Burial was made in the Hampton cemetery.

Our Book Shelf

The Rising Temper of the East, by Frazier Hunt. Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Co. $2.50.

Another book dealing with the increasing unrest of the colored peoples of the world. The author is interested primarily in people and the book therefore is intensely human. Sometimes we feel that this interest leads to an exaggeration of facts. The author believes that he sees everywhere a rising desire for self-expression and self-rule. Among the lands treated are India, China, Japan, Korea, Siberia, Australia, the Philippines, etc. One chapter is an especially fine tribute to the missionaries, whom the writer regards as the only white people who are interested in these countries for the sake of the people who inhabit them. This is a live subject, and the author is a good reporter of one set of facts.

"Prepare to Meet Thy God" and "The Tears of Jesus," by L. R. Scarborough. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. Each $1.25 net.

Dr. Scarborough is the well-known president of the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary. During the last twenty-five years, he has, in connection with his other duties, conducted four or five hundred evangelistic meetings in the Southern states. In these two books are some of the most fruitful of the sermons used. They indicate a simple, direct, impassioned preaching of the old-fashioned gospel. There is a profuse use of illustrations. One cannot fail, as he reads, to feel the passion for souls which is one of the great elements of the writer's power. In days when evangelism is being stressed in all our churches, no preacher can afford to miss any of the sermons which have been so signally blessed of God as these. "My hope is," says the writer, "that many a preacher and Christian worker will find inspiration in these volumes to go after the lost, and that the message will be handed to many a lost man and that in the perusal of these sermons he may find Jesus Christ as his personal Savior, confess him, know him and serve him."

Sunday Talks to Teachers, by Helen Wodehouse. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.25.

Lay talks to teachers on their work. A tonic for men and women who are getting discouraged either about themselves or their teaching. The book is full of concrete remedial suggestions for difficult situations. A good book for the Sunday-school teachers' library.

Motion Pictures for Community Needs, by Gladys and Henry Bollman. New York: Henry Holt & Co.

A new book for a new day, written by experts. Ten thousand schools, churches, and other community organizations now have motion picture projectors and the number of such is steadily increasing. People unused to the work find difficulty in getting the right film for the right occasion and also in solving the mechanical problems of projection. This volume supplies almost everything such amateurs need. There are four parts: Past and Present (7 chapters), The Exhibitor's Problems (5 chapters), One Hundred Suggested Programs, Mechanical and Legal (6 chapters).

The Simple Gospel, by H. S. Brewster. New York: The Macmillan Co. $1.50.

The author believes that the heart of the gospel is to be found in the Sermon on the Mount. This book therefore is an exposition of that sermon. The words of Jesus are taken as they stand on the supposition that Jesus meant what he said and are applied to the conditions of our time. This is a powerful stressing of the social gospel as inherent in the teachings of the Master. The author believes that society must be built on the plan Jesus laid down or come to confusion.

"It Is to Laugh"

"I was in Princeton between trains the other day," President Gaines told Kentucky Baptists in his welcome address, "and the dorky who waited on me in a restaurant said, as I was finishing my meal:

"'Ah axes you' pa'don, boss, ah doesn't wish to be offensive, but is you' all a Babbis' preacher?"

"Not quite," I replied. "What makes you think so?"

"Well, suh, its de hearty like way dat yo'all eats you' vittles!"

Little Mary was visiting her grandmother in the country for the first time.

Everything was new to her and she spent hours running about the big garden.

Once she chanced upon a peacock, a bird she had never seen before. After gazing in silent admiration, she ran back into the house and cried out:

"Oh, granny, come and see! One of your chickens is in bloom!"—Baptist Observer.

"It is generally known and conceded by every one that when it comes to money matters the Scotchman is pretty close fisted and frugal as well. There was an old Scotchman who had the habit every morning upon waking up of reaching over and patting his wife on the shoulder and saying, "Mary, get up." One morning, upon reaching over to pat his wife, he discovered that she was dead. The old fellow jumped up and, rushing into the kitchen, exclaimed to the housemaid, "Maggie, fry only one egg this morning!"—Pantlind Tribune.

This one is from Kalamazoo:

A young graduate in law wrote to a prominent practitioner in Dallas, Texas, to inquire what chance there was in that section. "I am a Republican in politics," he wrote, "and an honest lawyer."

In a few days he received this reply: "If you are a Republican, the game laws here will protect you, and if you are an honest lawyer, you will have no competition."

Dinah, the cook, informed her mistress that she was to be married.

"Will he be good to you and support you?" her mistress asked.

The choice of names and the use of words is extremely important in advertising. Sometimes a single word represents an expense of $500 to $1000. Every word must count.

The Correspondence Course in Religious Publicity conducted by Rev. Charles A. McAlpine deals with this subject in a comprehensive and practical way. All the publicity of a church is affected by the good or poor use of words. A word or a phrase may make or mar a campaign, a sermon, a financial effort or a series of evangelistic meetings. It may fill pews or empty them.

FOUR FAULTS IN SINGING

By DR. FERY LULEK

In general it can be said that there are three different schools of singing, grouping, as one must, the different methods into schools. They are, the French, German and Italian, each of which is the outgrowth of the language on which it is based. French is nasal in its sound, resulting in a singing method which predominates in nasal tones. German being throaty, the result is a guttural method of singing, whereas with Italian (made up of liquid open vowels and few consonants), to my mind the only correct method of singing is evolved. One who has properly mastered the Italian method is able to sing correctly in any language. However, the aim of each school is the proper placement of the voice. The result should be a voice steady in pitch and produced openly on the lips, giving automatically proper pronunciation. At the beginning the most important prerequisite is to have a fresh and untouched voice. Then it should be correctly placed, which means getting the instrument into perfect shape.

The voice can only be correctly placed through the medium of exercises, calling for great patience on the part of the student until perfect tone production is attained. To study arias or operas with an imperfectly placed voice means, in most cases, the death of the instrument, or, at least, the loss of a number of years through being forced to return to exercises and correct the faults acquired due to incorrect singing.

The continental teacher, in some cases, keeps the student on exercises for years, whereas here the pupil wishes in a couple of years to become a singer of grand opera with a large repertory. My fundamental principle has always been, first, to produce a perfect instrument, and then, after that to play on it.

Of the various faults, I consider singing off key to be the worst. There are two reasons for this. Either the voice has been incorrectly placed, or the hearing of the singer is faulty. The first can be easily corrected, either by perfecting the placement of the voice or by instilling into the mind of the student proper coloring of the vowels. Too lightly or too darkly colored vowels will result, in some cases, in singing off key. As regards the second, there is nothing that the vocal teacher can do.

Tremolo in the voice can be ascribed to wrong breath control. A great deal has been written on this subject, and each teacher has his own exercises for breathing, rolling, and massaging to produce a right result. Automatic, pectoral breathing is natural to women. By pectoral I mean breathing from the chest. Men, however, control their breathing from the diaphragm, which is the correct way. Should it be found that one is not using diaphragmatic control, a few simple exercises will readily supply the correction necessary. Stand against a wall, with head, shoulders, and hips touching it. By maintaining this position during the process of breathing one will find that it is impossible to breathe without doing it correctly. This can be appreciated by controlling the diaphragm with the hand.

Nasal and throaty singing is the direct result of incorrect humming. Correct humming is the basis of a perfectly placed voice as used in open singing. If this truth is realized and put into practice, the singer will never produce throaty or nasal tones. A wrongly placed tongue, however, will give this effect. Dividing the diphthongs and vowels into two groups, it will be found that the ah, oh, ai and ow group calls for a flat tongue, which produces the desired open throat. In the second group, consisting of e, a, and oo, the tip of the tongue must be placed against the lower teeth. The correctness of this can be demonstrated by taking a mirror and noting the position of the tongue as each vowel or diphthong is pronounced. As the position is in speaking, so must it be in singing. Singing is, in the last analysis, when correctly done, musical speech. The following of these corrective measures will, at the same time, eliminate that fourth fault, namely, poor diction.—Musical Courier.

MUSIC IN THE SCHOOLS

The lack of good system of teaching music in some public schools which think they devote a great deal of time to the musical development of their young charges is deplorable. There is one case where more time is allotted to singing than to some of the regular branches, yet the pupils of the school in question have assimilated virtually no musical knowledge at all. The trouble is that the teacher in charge does the training in a haphazard sort of way without definite plans and a guiding system. She teaches the children song after song, hoping, apparently, that some of her words about time and interpretation will be permanently retained. Perhaps they will, but more likely they will not. In our opinion, every school that undertakes to impart a knowledge of music to its pupils should adopt a practical system to be followed day in and out. Systems with the necessary printed media may be adopted at very moderate prices, and they more than pay for themselves in the results obtained.

TRAINING THEM

An Englishman, attending a country chapel for four Sunday mornings, heard the hymn "Jesus shall reign," a hymn usually reserved for missionary services, given out each Sunday. He asked the clergyman the reason.

"A few weeks ago we decided to sing 'Amen' at the end of each hymn. There was a little opposition to the innovation 'in principle' and I noticed that two or three worshipers refused to join in it, sitting down with great determination before the amen was sung. So I am getting them used to it by having this hymn, which ends, 'And earth repeat the loud Amen.' You see, they sing that amen unconsciously and break their own rule without noticing it. Principle and habit are often indistinguishable."—New Music Review.

Many critics mistake the rules of the theory of music for the rules by which to criticize the beautiful in it.—Merz.

The Last Call

Sunday, April 30th, is the last day of our fiscal year. Contributions received that day will count on this year's gifts. It is full late, but not too late, for your church to make a final appeal on April 30th.

Full payment of the amount due on pledges, and a liberal contribution from every member not previously pledging, must be forthcoming in order to enable Northern Baptists to close the fiscal year as of April 30th without heavy deficits.

The honor of our denomination is at stake. The future of our work is involved.

No church will be happy which fails to respond sacrificially to the need which now confronts us.

Lord Nelson, just before the battle of Trafalgar, signalled to his fleet: "England expects every man to do his duty." His decisive victory was due to the whole-hearted responses of his men to the challenge.

Our Lord is now looking to every pastor and every church member to do his full duty in this crisis. We are confidently expecting that Northern Baptists will not fail Him. This means you and your church.

MRS. W. A. MONTGOMERY,
President, Northern Baptist Convention.

MRS. GEORGE W. COLEMAN,
Chairman, Woman's Continuation Campaign Comm.

F. W. FREEMAN,
General Chairman, Northern Baptist Laymen's Council.

J. Y. AITCHISON,
General Director, The General Board of Promotion.

Kindly see that the Treasurer of your beneficence fund sends his remittance to the State Office not later than May 1st.

On April 19, the spire of the Immanuel Church, Chicago, Rev. Johnston D. Myers, pastor, crashed through the roof under the impetus of the high wind that swept over the city that day. Thirty persons were gathered in the building at the time of the accident but there were no injuries to life. No insurance against wind was carried. It is estimated that it will require $25,000 to repair the damage. Steps will be taken at once toward rebuilding. "We will rebuild and do a greater work if our friends will stand by us in this dark hour," writes Dr. Myers.

The commencement of the Baptist Missionary Training School occurs June 11-13 inclusive. Baccalaureate sermon at First Church, Sunday, June 11; class day Monday, June 12, and commencement June 13. A cordial invitation is extended to all the alumnae to be present as guests of the school, free entertainment being provided for all three days. We urge all alumnae to be present at the Alumnae Dinner, Monday evening, June 12, at six o'clock, as this is to be a special feature of the commencement program. Kindly make reservations before June 1, 1922. Address the house director, Miss Ellen Simpson, 2969 Vernon Avenue.—CLARA D. PINKHAM, President.

Dr. Anna Barbara Grey of Evanston, Ill., has accepted her appointment to Moulmein, Burma, where she will work in the Ellen Mitchell Memorial Maternity Hospital, Miss Mabelle Rae McVeigh, candidate secretary of the Women's Foreign Mission Society, announces. Dr. Grey has had an exceptionally excellent preparation for her work. She spent two years in Denison University, received her B. S. from the University of Chicago in 1917, and was graduated from Rush Medical College in 1921. Her training as an interne was received in the New England Hospital. She is now at work in the Los Angeles County Hospital, in Los Angeles, Cal. It is expected that the recent appointees of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society will sail some time during the summer or fall.

In the Belgian Congo the African Christian seems to prefer the front seat in church. During the recent revival at Sona Bata front seats were at a premium the Sunday morning when 380 people were baptized. Later fifty couples were married, some of them middle-aged people who had become Christians after their marriage and wanted a Christian wedding. In the outlying villages there have been scores of baptisms and hundreds are still under instruction. Offerings have increased about 400 per cent and the missionaries cannot supply the demand for Bible and school books.

Dr. Judson B. Thomas, who recently resigned the pastorate of the Austin Church of Chicago, Ill., has returned from Florida after a splendid vacation and is now ready for supply service or for anything else he can do for the churches. His address is 612 North Pine Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Joseph R. Wood has resigned as executive secretary of the Newark Federation of Churches in order to become assistant to the president of Bucknell University. Both he and his wife are graduates of Bucknell. Dr. Wood's special work will be to promote the financial and educational interests of the institution.

Evangelist C. E. Hillis and wife of Kahoka, Mo., are now in special meetings in Wyoming. Their dates from Sept. 1 to Dec. 1 are filled with Baptist churches in Nebraska and Iowa.

Rev. A. C. Archibald, formerly pastor of the First Church, Brookline, Mass., has been supplying for some time at the First Church, Youngstown, Ohio, where on Easter Sunday he baptized sixty young men and women. His physicians declare him entirely cured of his nervous break.

Under the patronage of two archbishops and eight bishops, whose dioceses were invaded, a loan of 200 million francs is soon to be floated in France for the purpose of rebuilding the 3000 churches which were destroyed in the war. This loan is to be issued in bonds of 500 francs at 6 per cent, reimbursable in thirty years and guaranteed by the state. The former architecture of the churches is to be maintained as far as possible. This is here cited as an interesting method by which the Roman Church in France is rehabilitating itself.

Rev. G. H. O'Donnell resigned his pastorate at the First Church, Columbia City, Ind., on April 9 in order to accept a call to the First Church of Douglas, Ariz., where he begins work on April 30. He has been in Columbia City almost four years during which time fifty members have been received and the finances have more than doubled.

He Wants Sermon Outlines

Not long ago a brother minister wrote us confidentially and asked where he could get some books of sermon outlines which were not too much in use just now. You see it is embarrassing to go to an association to preach the doctrinal sermon and then to find that the brother who precedes you on the program preaches the annual sermon from the same outline. We have referred the brother to the church fathers and some of the books of the Apocrypha. These sermons are not now much in use. It seems to us, however, that it would be a little hard to speak with fervor upon these themes.

Killam's Kollum

An Educational Problem

With just one poor (emphasis on poor) editor in the office this week the educational problem has been acute. THE BAPTIST asked for brief items from our schools and colleges telling us of their famous graduates and students. It seems that most of the college men and women are famous. We have made up page after page of material. We have gradually reduced our news to such a degree that we will have to spend the most of the next two weeks explaining why we did not print the story of the "eloquent sermon preached by our pastor" and other equally important matters. And then a number of schools failed to respond or got their material to us too late. Some of them sent us their general catalogues, one of which has 449 pages of famous or near-famous students. We have told but a small part of the story of our educational problem but we have told enough so that you may know why your name does not appear in this issue. Remember as you read that we have simply given in this number a few samples of the thousands of worthy men and women whose lives have been devoted to the work of the kingdom.

Grand Forks!

A letter from Pastor York of Grand Forks, N. D., informs us that the young folks of the church there have secured ten new annual subscriptions to THE BAPTIST and will make it twenty. This is in addition to an already good list. Young people have a way of getting things done when they get at it—it is the getting at it that takes time and patience.

Look For Improvement in the Kollum

Some time ago we told in plaintive tones of our fire, the water-logged books and the fact that we should be obliged to depend upon providence for the material on this page. It brought results. A good friend in Minneapolis sent us ex-President Eliot's five-foot shelf of books. He says that he expects to see an improvement in the material on this page. We ask the brother to be patient for it takes time for the contents of those books to soak in. You may look for improvement in the Kollum but not immediately.

We Knew Wisconsin Would

"Wisconsin will, of course, be glad to join in any campaign for subscriptions to THE BAPTIST and Missions. I think that there has been a growing interest in THE BAPTIST in our state." A. LeGrand, State Superintendent.

Fresh from the Field

The church at Sidney, Ohio, which for several years has been under the pastoral leadership of Rev. B. F. Patt, will be pastorless after May 1. G. W. Donehoo, Sidney, Ohio, is secretary of the Board of Deacons.

A conference of community churches of the Middle West convenes in the Urbandale Federated Church of Des Moines, May 9-10. According to the Community Churchman which is the official organ of the movement, there are now more than 800 community churches in the United States.

Rev. Franklin A. Stiles, one year ago accepted the call of the First Church, Middletown, Ohio. During the first week of his pastorate, he organized the Stiles Bible Class with twelve charter members. The class now numbers 350 men between the ages of twenty and forty-five. THE BAPTIST published a picture of this organization last fall. It was found necessary to build a $25,000 addition to the Sunday school building with a seating capacity of 1,200. The class has organized a chorus choir and a male quartet which have charge of the music in the Sunday evening service. Sixty-five new members, fifteen of whom were men from the Stiles class, were received Easter Sunday. The Easter offering was $600.

Dr. James A. Brown who has been acting as stated supply at Fulton, Ind., closes his work May 1. He has specialized in religious education and is ready to render service in the neighborhood of Chicago.

John W. Mount, deacon of First Church, Redbank, N. J., died April 23, at the age of 84. His interest in Peddie Institute, his state convention, and the work of the denomination world-wide was unflinching. A typical example was the payment in full of his generous pledge to the New World Movement.

The Mounds Park Sanitarium Association including Mounds Park Sanitarium, Midway Hospital and Merriam Park Hospital has become the Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association, in which any member of any regular Baptist church may acquire membership upon the payment of $100. The Board of Directors will be increased from twelve to thirty members including representatives from Baptist churches both English speaking and foreign speaking.

The Baptist Ministers' Conference of Chicago on Monday, May 8, will be addressed by Prof. Ernest D. Burton of the University of Chicago who has recently returned from a visit to China where he has been making a study of the Christian educational institutions. Prof. Burton was chairman of the educational commission sent over for such an examination and his address will be the result of his findings.

"More than 200 new converts have been baptized," says Frank Kurtz, missionary in Madira, Deccan, India. "Our church membership is still composed two-thirds of men, and only one-third of women. More girls are in school now than ever before."

For the Work of the Ministry

The demand for pastors who are "thoroughly furnished" for the work of the ministry was never greater than today, the opportunity for service never more inviting.

The Rochester Theological Seminary seeks to prepare men for the practical work of the ministry by a comprehensive training in both scholarship and methods of service.

The Seminary has a Faculty of ten members, and a Library of 50,000 volumes, including the famous Neander collection. It offers a wide choice of electives, and grants the degrees of B. D. and M. Th. All courses in the University of Rochester are open to Seminary students.

The city of Rochester furnishes a remarkable laboratory for observation and for participation in church and charitable work.

The Baptist

Baptist Training for Baptist Pastors

IT IS assumed that the Baptist denomination has a reason for being. While we share with the great body of evangelical Christians the essential gospel message, there is yet a distinctive mission and witness which justify our separate denominational existence. Otherwise our topic—Baptist training for Baptist pastors—and our very existence as a denomination are an impertinence or an anachronism or both. Such indeed is precisely what certain people have always thought as to the Baptists, but we ourselves have cherished a more optimistic opinion. The pragmatic argument from the recent census report which assigns to the Baptists the largest Protestant membership in America would indicate that the denomination has in vital ways been meeting a great human need. Yes, we may assume that the Baptists have a right to be. If we did not believe that we were doing more for the cause of Christianity as a whole and for the world's need by preserving our denominational entity, we might be content to coalesce with and lapse into the undifferentiated mass of Protestantism, or even to consider some wider religious synthesis. Our nation similarly holds that it can best aid the old world in its unfathomed need by holding to its governmental ideals instead of dumping its autonomy and resources into the chasm. It will let down ropes but will not throw itself bodily into the pit, lest it merely add to the debacle.

If, then, Baptists have a right to be, it would naturally follow that there should be Baptist training for Baptist pastors as a matter of self-preservation. This, however, seems not to be universally conceded. For one thing, it is urged that a theological course at some non-Baptist seminary will broaden the Baptist student's outlook. A young man from a Baptist home in an Illinois village some years ago went to an eastern university and thence to a theological seminary, neither of them Baptist, saying, "Just because I am a Baptist I am going to this seminary." Naturally, he was lost not only to his denomination but to the ministry, and failed in the vocation he finally chose. An excellent Baptist pastor may come from a non-Baptist seminary, when family and collegiate influence persists and holds him to his denomination, but there is always danger of some lack of complete sympathy with and understanding of Baptist folkways, where training is under other than Baptist auspices. In this age of denominational intermingling there is little need of taking pains to learn religious toleration. We breathe it from birth. The danger is that we shall fail of intelligent, clear-cut convictions as to our own religious message and mission as Baptists.

There has also been urged the view that all necessary training for denominational ministry may be had at a minimum of expense and a maximum of efficiency by grouping denominational club-houses, with one or two chairs of special denominational teaching, around the great state universities, which should themselves supply the languages, church history, oratory, and the like, to all of the denominations, in common classes. The denominational guild hall is admirable, but the mongrel state university-theological seminary is neither American nor Baptist.

The most exigent problem, however, is raised by the going of hundreds of our Baptist young men to undenominational "Bible schools," often with scantiest previous schooling, where after a year or two of study of the Bible, with summary courses in religion, and with an intensive training in evangelistic methods, the handling of audiences, personal religious work, and the holding of open air, rescue mission, and jail meetings, they are often called directly to the pastorate of Baptist churches. Valuable as is this training for many branches of Christian work, it is quite inadequate as a training for a Baptist pastor. The best Bible institutes advise their students who intend to be pastors to take an additional course at a denominational seminary; but even where this advice is given, students and churches often disregard it. From all over the country instances are reported of the wrecking of churches by pastors with little or no training, whose ample ignorance includes an unacquaintance or utter lack of sympathy with Baptist principles and missionary ideals.

And perhaps the strongest consideration of all is the fact that our denomination throughout the centuries has carried in its heart its great scriptural principles without the authority of some vast ecclesiasticism, or of some binding interpretation of pope, council, or creed. There has been an atmosphere, a personal touch, a community of spirit which has held us to essential unity amid minor variations. This, which is the soul of the denomination, cannot be fostered in an atmosphere hostile or even neutral to the things which make us Baptists.

A Baptist pastor has a unique, momentous, and almost a solitary responsibility for the direction of his church. He may take almost any church, anywhere, and build it in a few years along the lines of New Testament teaching and Baptist principles into an outstanding success lasting long after he is dead; or he may, like a drunken chauffeur, wreck it hopelessly on his first drive. It is the Baptist churches themselves which ultimately must solve this problem by declining to install sounding brass and tinkling cymbal in their pulpits. Home and church and thorough schooling for the ministry must all breathe forth the atmosphere, contribute the personal touch, and provide the rich culture of heart and mind, which are to fit the coming ministry for that highest honor and supremest service involved in the pastorate of a Baptist church.

The Birthplace of Leaders

PILGRIMAGES are being made to the birthplace of the nation's leaders. Steps are being taken to preserve these hallowed spots for future generations. Many of our greatest benefactors first saw light amidst very humble surroundings. As we look upon these habitations we instinctively feel that there must be some relation between simple surroundings, the necessity for struggle and a life of greatness.

In this number we set before our readers brief facts about hundreds of men and women who have attained places of influence and rendered larger service to the world, especially to our own denomination. We can lead you to the places where their latent powers were brought to light in our smaller denominational schools. The plain surroundings, the necessity for self-help and struggle have had something to do in producing the stalwart qualities which have marked the lives of so many of our leaders.

Most of the older colleges of this country were founded to provide trained leaders for the churches. Evangelization and education were not divorced in the mind of our fathers. When John M. Peck came to the Mississippi Valley he founded many churches in the vicinity of St. Louis and at the same time he laid the foundations of what is now Shurtleff College in order that these churches might have men and women of vision in places of leadership. From a study made by the Interchurch it was estimated that 1200 students of this one school have gone out to occupy positions in definite Christian service. John M. Peck knew what he was doing.

The same story could be told of many of the other colleges. Thomas W. Merrill left Colby College as a pioneer home missionary. He made his way to Michigan in the early days. He founded churches and laid the foundations of Kalamazoo College that they might have pastors and teachers and thus lay solid foundations for the future work in that state.

It should be remembered that most of the outstanding pioneer workers were college men and women. They saw more clearly than some of their children that the influence and leadership of any community will center inevitably in its trained citizenship. Many of our Baptist ministers then, as now, labored under the handicap of inadequate training. A lack of academic qualifications has never shut the doors of our churches to the man with a message and it never will. On the other hand the churches will not permanently place a premium on the ignorance and mental cowardice which makes men afraid to face the facts wherever they may be found.

The spirit and ideals of a school are its chief asset. We visited an old college recently. The same buildings were there which graced, or disgraced, the campus twenty-five years ago. More than double the number of students thronged its halls. Across the hills since those earlier days have risen magnificent buildings of a great state educational institution. We mingled with the students and the difference between the two groups is most marked, even to the casual visitor. In both schools there is the atmosphere of the classroom. There is the buzz of the students with their meaningless jibes at professors and teachers. There is a manufactured indignation at the instructor who is heartless enough to assign lessons for a brief vacation period. All these common elements are to be noted but still there is a difference. It is a difference in the spirit of the two groups. In the smaller denominational college there is a spirit of loyalty, devotion and love for the traditions of the old school. It finds expression in volunteer bands, evangelistic teams and devotion to a life of Christian service. Somehow, in spite of the inadequate material equipment and in overcrowded class rooms, this spirit is lighted and fanned into a flame.

Perhaps it is the ability to develop the spirit of loyalty which accounts in part for the astounding list of denominational leaders and Christian workers which come out of these Christian institutions of learning. The number of these outstanding workers is away out of proportion to the number of students enrolled. If you were to blot out the names and work of our pastors, general workers, missionaries and teachers from these schools to say nothing of the army of those in other lines of service our churches and the nation itself would be greatly impoverished.

Practically every one of our educational institutions has had to struggle for life and most of them do to this very day. Here and there a school has been born with a silver spoon in its mouth. Taken as a whole the denomination has shown little appreciation, especially in recent years, of the unparalleled service rendered by the students and graduates of the smaller colleges, academies and seminaries. Today many of our schools, if not most of them, face deficits due to the failure of the denomination to complete the New World Movement. This condition will not continue. The friends of these schools and the friends of the churches will provide for adequate material equipment and to these halls of learning the Christian home will furnish an ever increasing stream of the brightest and best young men and women.

New Emphasis on Religious Education

ONE of the perfectly clear results of recent doctrinal agitation in various denominations, especially in the North, is a new emphasis on religious education in our schools and colleges. This is manifest in part in state institutions where foundations have been established for the sake of maintaining student houses in which there shall be religious instruction and a religious atmosphere. But even more evident is it in the strictly denominational college. We may as well admit that in many institutions the religious emphasis had been made subordinate and what religious or Bible courses were given were often perfunctory. And yet these schools called themselves denominational and appealed to the churches for support. We are now witnessing a greatly increased attention to the teaching of religious subjects and the teaching of all subjects in a religious atmosphere. Courses in the Bible and in religious education are being strengthened or added for the first time to the curriculum. THE BAPTIST hails this new departure. Great as is the service which has been done in the past by our denominational colleges, the service of the future will be yet more significant on account of this increased and significant religious emphasis.

ANTI-CHRISTIAN DEMONSTRATIONS IN CHINA

All readers of foreign news have noted with some anxiety of late the reports of anti-Christian demonstrations which have been taking part in various sections of China. This movement seems to have had its origin in Shanghai among certain Chinese living in the French settlement. It has been forwarded by various groups of students, by all the anti-foreign agencies who wish China for the Chinese, and by the agnostic and atheistic elements of the country which, however, are not proving so numerous as one might have thought. The occasion for the outbreak is the meeting of the World's Student Federation which is to be held shortly in Peking. That any great harm will be done to the Christian churches or work in China nobody who has access to the facts really believes. On the contrary the agitation is the finest kind of advertising, creating a new interest in religious topics, giving opportunity for new statements of what the Christian life really means, and also enabling Chinese Christians to show again of what stuff they are made. There is a very large body of Christian students in China. The intelligent leaders of that great land know well that it can never become a great republic unless its people possess a genuine religious faith. The forces opposed to anti-Christian propaganda sometimes get into action slowly, but as they do so in China we shall have a new demonstration of the manner in which our God makes the wrath of God to praise him.

THE WISDOM OF LADY ASTOR

Lady Astor who is now on a visit in this country has been making remarks which betray her good American common sense. In this she has been a rather delightful contrast to Mrs. Asquith who diverted us not long since. Consider two of her utterances, made on the day she landed.

Of her husband she said, "He doesn't think that you right wrongs with philanthropy." There is a heap of wisdom in that, especially for some of the rich society women who will listen to such a voice and who have imagined for years that a generous heart and an open pocketbook make perfect amends for all kinds of social injustice.

Asked whether she thought the enfranchisement of women had given them the liberty they thought it would, Lady Astor replied: "Here is something for you to remember. We women can do anything we wish with men if we begin with them when they are children." In other words, power has not yet departed from the skilful and happy mother of children.

PROTESTANT GROWTH EXCEEDS CATHOLIC

Roman Catholic papers are showing some concern over the figures of church growth in the United States, covering the period from 1906 to 1916. The growth in population was 17 per cent; Roman Catholic growth was 10.6 per cent; Protestant growth was 19.6. The Catholics point out the fact that Protestants are strong in rural districts and small towns and cities, where families are large, while Catholics, especially Irish Catholics, are strong in the large cities where the birth-rate is constantly declining. They fail to note that there is a constant and large defection from their church on the part of people who have linked in their thoughts the old state church with the old state tyranny of Europe and who in the free air of America have left the church. Unfortunately most of these people have not become Protestant, but they have certainly ceased to be Catholic. A yet more obvious fact is that the Roman Catholic church in this country has been fed by large immigration and has been little more than holding its own among the people living in the United States, if indeed it has not been losing. There is room for reflection on the part of Protestants in this fact.

INDIANA BAPTISTS APPROVE

If a letter received by the president of the Northern Baptist Convention from a representative pastor in Indiana, is any indication, Indiana Baptists—at least some of them—approve of the proposal which came out of the informal Columbia Conference looking to a representative American statement of the Baptist position. A paragraph in this letter reads:

"I regard the proposal to create a joint commission of the Northern Baptist Convention and of the Southern Baptist Convention to prepare a representative statement of the Baptist position, as wise and timely—at least it is not premature. At Atlantic City and ever since, I have been urging upon the leading brethren the necessity for such action, but they have been slow to wake up. I am confident that Indiana will be practically solid for such a proposal."

If the statement in question is to be regarded as a witness to non-Baptists of what Baptists believe, there will be very general, if not unanimous, support for it. If it is to be looked upon as a standard by which all men are to be tested, there are multitudes who will oppose it as a departure from the historic Baptist positions. Many devout men and women will be led to ask the question raised in the Open Forum of April 29, "Isn't the Bible Good Enough?"

HAYS BANS ARBUCKLE

Will Hays has decided that no picture in which Roscoe Arbuckle appears shall be seen on the American screen. And inasmuch as Hays is being paid his large salary to determine matters of this sort, there is not likely to be an immediate appeal from his decision. Arbuckle professes to be at a loss to account for such action, having thought himself well on the way to a successful come-back. Parents of small children, however, who are often particular about the character and behavior of men whom their little ones take as heroes, will be inclined to applaud Hays. If there is really to be a house-cleaning in filmland, it may as well begin at once. A man need not be guilty of murder in order to disqualify as a maker of fun for respectable people and their children.

"Is There Anything the Matter with the College Student?"

Mr. Fetter has spent his life with students. After his own college days he became director of the Baptist Guild House at the University of Michigan; later, secretary of the University Students' Christian Association. He is now Baptist student pastor, associated with First Church, Boston.

By NEWTON C. FETTER

THIS is the nineteenth of April and a holiday in Massachusetts. Seventy-five of us have spent the day hiking out to Lexington and beyond. Lexington was the proper place to go, for April 19 is the anniversary of the "midnight ride of Paul Revere." We did not stay long in this historic town. We were bound for the country where we might cook our dinner and play our games and then hike on over the Massachusetts hills.

Among the fresh air enthusiasts were men from Harvard and Technology; girls from Emerson, Simmons, and the Conservatory of Music, and men and women from Boston University.

I looked them over today and I asked myself, "Do we need to worry about these folks—these college students? Are they careless in their conduct and hopeless in their attitude toward religion and the church? In the next generation, what will happen to our institutions under their leadership?"

As I write I find myself thinking of this one and that one with whom I chatted on the hike and of many others whom I have known quite intimately. And I ask myself again, "Is there anything the matter with the college students?"

Not Perfect, But—!

Certainly they are far from perfect. They would be the first to admit it. They do not always show the interest in religion and the church which we might expect. Outside of their studies they appear to be preoccupied with athletic and social functions. They sleep late on Sunday mornings. Their actions do not always signify perfect self-control.

But we must remember that the student's life is in a sense unnatural. For five days in the week his studies, his class room, his laboratory come first. For him there is no family life, no community responsibility and little opportunity for normal social activity.

When Saturday arrives, the strenuous discipline of the college work is relinquished. Full of life and pent up with energy the student is free for a while and aching for a good time. He insists that he cannot have it by himself; he must "do society" which means that in some way or other he must enjoy the company of young ladies. (And vice versa.)

To this there can be no objection.

Grind of the Week

But students have admitted that after the grind of the week, there is grave danger of casting off restraint. In spite of this, however, the average student is not a profligate. He has a high sense of honor which he tries to maintain and his success in this matter will compare favorably, I am sure, with any other group of people. He does his best to satisfy his social nature under existing conditions. The money makers have capitalized this demand and have supplied the dance halls and shows of all descriptions, the schools have made some provisions, the church has done very little.

Why should not this problem of the student also be the problem of the church? Since the days of the Puritans, the church has uttered her "Thou shalt not's" with no uncertain voice. The favorable results have been quite uncertain and the method psychologically unsound. For in emphasizing the prohibitions we have been constantly suggesting the evils and in occupying our minds with the negative, we have omitted the positive.

Does not the social need of the student and of all young people present to the church a great opportunity to demonstrate its interest in all of life and to turn to good account that which has too often found evil direction?

This was the reason for our holiday hike and this is the reason for our numerous outings and socials. We know that we not only supply a need but that we win the young folks to the other activities of the church.

Turning now to another aspect of the student life, we are convinced that students, as a whole, are honest and sincere idealists. They reveal it in their actions and in their free discussions. But they do not always reveal it in their attitude toward the church. There may be some reasons for this.

They have made no complaint because of their war experiences. They have not found fault because, on returning to college after a year or two in the service, tuition was advanced and the cost of living greatly increased. And without much grumbling many of them this year will go out to look for positions in the midst of business depression.

But they do ask why this lapse of civilization occurred and why Christianity as represented by the church was powerless to prevent the war.

With the new world in the process of formation and with humanity in need of God and of a righteous social and industrial and international order the student now witnesses the churches engaged in internal strife and sectarian competition. Do we wonder that he hesitates to express his idealism wholeheartedly through the activities of the Christian church? He may belong to the church of his parents but he is not a denominationalist and he sees little reason for the innumerable divisions which break up the Protestant church. As he shies at sectarianism so does he look with distrust on any institution, religious or educational, which attempts to throttle thought or bottle truth under labels that bear the stamp of finality.

"Thou Shalt Not's"

Truth has been revealed progressively to him through experiment and experience. He has discovered in his study that men in the past have been mistaken. He knows that the Ptolemaic system was superseded by the Copernican. He will never be attracted nor will he submit to any institution which says to him, "Thou shalt not touch this theory; thou shalt not investigate that field, thou shalt not jump the fences which we have built."

In a certain well known college for women in the east, the Baptist girls have been greatly disturbed and agitated; some of them have intimated that they were ashamed to be known as Baptists because an impression has somehow been made on them that to be a Baptist means to repudiate their conception of the method of creation.

Students want to know if they can at once be "members in good standing" and be free to search for truth and to accept what they find.

With all of the student's idealism and his love for the truth, he is unfortunately much bewildered as to the significance of Christianity. He has some idea of love and justice and purity and he knows something of service and sacrifice but his grasp of religious history is wholly inadequate to insure a satisfactory conception of Christianity.

He has become acquainted with the wonders of God as revealed through the microscope and the immensity of creation as revealed through the telescope, he has observed the working of the laws of God in the laboratory but he has not been given opportunity to study with the same care and diligence the manifestations of God as seen in a great race and in great people.

He enters college with a high school diploma which gives him credit for satisfactory preparation in languages, science, history, etc., but he has little to show in the way of religious education.

His preparation in the history of Christianity, including its background, its beginnings, its literature, its expansion, its accomplishments is not worthy of the eighth grade. In fact to one who has conducted discussion groups among college men and women, it savors of the primary department.

It may not be putting it too strongly to say that in the case of a great many students Christianity is more of a cult than a great, growing God-inspired religion and the Bible is an uninteresting rule book rather than a fascinating record of significant religious experiences.

It is not an overdose of science that is the matter with the students. He suffers from an unbalanced diet in which the religious elements are decidedly lacking. Unless we feed properly we cannot produce a healthy man and until we provide adequate religious training of the youth we cannot expect our young men and women, in their student days, to spiritualize their education.

The church will not attract the student with "don't's" and dogmas nor hold him within sectarian fences.

By meeting his social needs, by encouraging him and assisting him in the sacred search for truth, by giving him the privilege in his early days and in his college days of experiment and experience in religion, by challenging him to make a worthy sacrifice for the kingdom of God, the church will win the student, it will surround him with a wholesome atmosphere, it will lead him to a larger faith in God and in so doing will make secure its own future.

Some Experiments in Religious Education

Vital religion will make its possessors smile when homesick, work when campused, pray when irritated.

By W. W. CHARTERS

JESSIE BURRALL, the head of the department of Religious Education in Stephens College has a clear-cut idea of the contribution which her department should make to the religious life of the students of the college. This idea she gets across to the 1000 members of her Sunday-school class and to the students in her courses in Bible and in Sunday-school teaching.

"I believe," she says, "that the purpose of all religious training is to help my girls to use the teachings of Jesus, the lives of the apostles and heroes of the Old and New Testaments, and the principles of religion based thereon in their everyday lives. If religion is a vital force in their lives, it will make them smile when homesick, work while campused, (as John wrote Revelation while campused on the Isle of Patmos), pray when irritated, keep still when anxious to add to gossip, or to give some one a piece of their mind, and be patient, even with the faculty over lengthy assignments.

"Mere facts about the Bible as the story of men and women who lived in the past are worthwhile; but the Bible is an eternal document only because it gives to each child of God the methods by which he may live to the fullest richness his own mental, physical, and religious life. The Bible is a vital living document only to those who can use its teachings to control their own religious lives.

"So when we teach religion we take stock of the problems and difficulties and opportunities for service of our girls at Stephens and as we teach we show them how the Bible has already prepared for us a rich treasury of methods by which their problems may be solved and by which a fuller life of service may be lived and happiness may follow close upon the heels of disappointment."

Such is the program of the department head and her faculty. The point

THE SECRETARY OF THE STATE WASHINGTON

April 15, 1922.

My dear Mr. Freeman:

I am deeply interested in the Laymen's Movement to raise the amount needed to pay the outstanding indebtedness of the approved organizations of the Baptist denomination. Every one must sympathize with the purpose to put the whole force of the denomination behind this effort to pay our debts. We can not plan for the future until this matter is settled. Such an effort can not fail, despite all difficulties, to create a new sense of responsibility and privilege. There should be a demonstration of capacity for effective cooperation, and, with this, we shall be able to go forward with fresh zest to meet the opportunities which lie before us.

With best wishes for the success of this endeavor, I am

Faithfully yours,

of view is not a new one. It is a paraphrase of the intimate teachings of Jesus. It is carried out in the lives of all devout Christians as they reach after the teachings of religion for solace and satisfaction.

But in schools and often in the pulpit the tendency is to teach the Bible as an historical document to be learned and memorized, and not as a vital document to be connected with the vital problems of the student and the congregation.

In carrying out this program a course of study is necessary. The problems and duties of young Christian women have to be listed so that in class teaching all those of importance can be studied. These become the lesson topics and around them are gathered the incidents and principles of the Bible which will help the students to master their problems and perform their duties with satisfaction and happiness.

The department of religious education divides its work into two main divisions. These are the personal problems of the individual life, such as selfishness, disappointments, and discourtesy, and the duties of service which Christian women should perform, such as teaching and administering Sunday schools when they return to their homes from school.

The department of educational research makes a contribution at this point. Established in 1920 by the vision and foresight of President James M. Wood, it is required to start with the aims of each department and work out a course of study which will carry out those aims in the most direct manner. It does not look backward to tradition to determine what the course of study should be. It looks forward to the values and uses of the course of study and, forgetting tradition, gathers together from every source the material which will realize those purposes.

Looking Forward

At the present time it has taken the second of the two divisions of the religious education department, the duties of service which Stephens graduates should perform in the Sunday school, and is organizing a course for Sunday-school teachers and another for Sunday-school superintendents.

In constructing these courses a new method has been applied in conformity with the principle which has just been described. In the Sunday-school teachers' course, a list of all the difficulties of Sunday-school teaching was collected from a large number of experts in the field. Teachers in cities and in the country, state superintendents of Sunday schools, and experts in religious education with national reputations were interviewed and written to for a period of six weeks, until among the lists of difficulties which poured in no new ones were found. In all, some sixty-seven were collected.

Interestingly enough, the difficulties of getting children to attend Sunday school rank first in mention. Of these there were fourteen. How to overcome indifference in the home, to get the little folk to Sunday school when they cannot come alone, how to follow up the pupils who are absent, how to find time to visit, methods for securing new pupils, difficulties of attendance due to loose grading, the problem of the transient family,—all appear among these difficulties. Then, too, discipline was found to be a serious matter. The homely problems of keeping the early comers out of mischief, the lack of reverence and of interest in the opening exercises, keeping the bright students busy, the failure of pupils to obey the teacher, the tendency to "visit" during class time were all mentioned. Six difficulties concerning the pupils' preparation of the lesson and a similar number of difficulties arising from outside activities were included.

To find how to handle these difficulties, all the Sunday school methods books were read and the material was classified according to the difficulties with which they gave help.

But in addition 1200 expert teachers in thirty states were asked to tell how they handled these difficulties. A more valuable and concrete

Sacred Ashes

By A. F. UFFORD

DOWN the crowded street, just ahead of me, walked an old man gathering odd scraps of paper with Chinese characters written on them. The basket was full to overflowing. Every now and then a piece fell out to be hurriedly replaced by the old man.

When asked what he was going to do with all the paper he replied that he was taking it away to burn. "And what will you do then?" was the next question. In innocent surprise he looked up and said, "Paper with characters written on it is precious both in China and foreign countries. The ashes will be thrown into the sea to appease the monsters of the deep."

Reflecting on the incident I asked a friend what it all meant and this is the tale he told. After burning the character-written paper at a wayside shrine the ashes are taken by some devout person to the sea, or the Dzien Dong river, which flows into the sea. There the ashes are cast abroad upon the water in order to placate the demons that live in the sea and pull good ships down to destruction. In the old days when examinations were given in Hangchow the waters of the bay were covered by ashes in order to secure a safe passage across for men going to the capital to try for the degree.

mass of material was collected from this source than from print. These teachers live close to the problems and can give concrete methods of handling the practical difficulties which every teacher faces. This material is now being organized and will be used by the religious education department next autumn.

At the same time a similar analysis of the difficulties of the Sunday-school superintendent was made. Of these forty-eight were collected. His difficulties are as serious as those of the teacher. The Sunday-school superintendent has on his shoulders in common with the teacher the question of attendance. He also has trouble in handling teachers' meetings, of selecting and training his officers and teachers; he must offer suggestions to teachers without hurting their feelings; he has trouble in getting them to inform him beforehand of their expected absence; he has the problem of stimulating them to visit homes, study their pupils, hold social gatherings, and induce them to become permanent rather than transient teachers. His, also, are the problems of making the opening and closing exercises interesting. Particularly he has difficulty in cutting down everything else so as to give the greatest possible time to the lesson. He must stimulate contributions for the service work of the Sunday school. Even such trifling matters as handling announcements have a bearing upon the success of the Sunday school. He has difficulty in keeping in touch with all of the departments, or working a budget system, and of following up his people to see that they do the work assigned to them. Then, too, he has to work out plans for cooperating with other Sunday-school superintendents, and for getting the strong business men of the community who are church members to accept responsibility of the Sunday school. The parents must be brought into cooperation, and even the cooperation of the pastor is sometimes a problem to the conscientious superintendent. These are a few of the difficulties which the expert superintendents mention in connection with their very complicated and important work.

Experts Report

To find methods of handling these difficulties printed material has been read and 1200 expert superintendents from all states of the union are now reporting upon their methods of handling them. This material will also be used next year in Stephens College.

After a year's trial in the college and the consequent revision, it will be released for general use as part of the national service to which Stephens College feels it should make whatever contribution it can. The department of religious education has humbly set for itself the ideal of demonstrating among its own students the best that it can give to the vital cause of educating the young to live in the love of God and render full service to their fellowmen.

Why Go to College

THE cultural value of higher education, which results in the broadening and refining of life, will take precedence over the commercial. "This result can no more be measured by dollars and cents, than truth, self-sacrifice and love can be made out of pork and potatoes." Yet the government has taught us the money value of a trained brain. Business has placed a price on the disciplined mind. Highest success today requires the highest training.

Products of the Denominational Colleges

Considering the size of Baptist colleges, to an unusual degree positions of responsibility in denominational offices, in mission stations, in educational circles and in the pastorate, have been filled by their graduates. Prepare to be surprised as you read these pages.

Training Our Young People

TWO hundred and five of the graduates of Ottawa University have gone into the work of teaching. Among these are fourteen who occupy college positions. Prof. Arvin Olin, of Kansas University; W. B. Wilson, dean of Ottawa University; George E. Myers, of the University of Michigan; F. B. Barker, of the University of Nebraska; O. C. Bradbury, of Baylor University, and Ray Brewster, of the University of Kansas are some of them.

One of the outstanding representatives of Linfield College is Kenneth Scott LaFourette who succeeded Prof. Harlan P. Beach as professor of missions in the Yale Divinity School.

The great majority of the graduates of Stephens College who do not immediately establish homes for themselves enter the teaching profession, and naturally transmit to the pupils whom they teach the high ideals which the college has given them.

Dean Shailer Mathews, Dean Nathaniel Butler, and Prof. Albion Woodbury Small of the University of Chicago are all graduates of Colby College.

Manley O. Hudson, professor of International Law at Harvard, and one of the advisers at Paris when the treaty and the League of Nations were made, is a graduate of William Jewell College. He still belongs to the Secretariat of the League.

The president of Garrett Biblical Institute, Charles McCauley Stuart, Evanston, Ill., is a graduate of Kalamazoo College, class of '80; the president of the Northern Theological Seminary, George Wheaton Taft, Class of '86, and the president of Bethel College, Russellville, Ky., George Franklin Dasher, class of '04.

Among the graduates of Denison University prior to 1890, we find the names of the following well-known educators: William Arnold Stevens, John W. Moncrief, Ernest D. Burton and Ira M. Price. Three college presidents received their secondary education at Keystone Academy and with it much of stimulus and encouragement to a life of real service. These are Dr. Lincoln Hulley, '84, president of Stetson University, Deland, Fla.; Dr. Elkannah Hulley, '89, president of Broadus College, Philippi, W. Va.; and Hon. Charles E. Bunnell, '96, formerly district judge of U. S. Court, Fairbanks, Alaska, but now president of the Alaska University of Agriculture and Mining. Dr. Lincoln Hulley and President Bunnell are presidents of the most widely separated universities in the United States.

Crozer Seminary numbers among its graduates engaged in educational work, Paul H. Bowman, president Bridgewater College, Virginia; Milton G. Evans, president Crozer Theological Seminary, Chester, Pa.; Emory W. Hunt, president Bucknell University, Pennsylvania. Also the following professors: Arthur J. Hall,

Waco, Tex.; H. R. Hundley, Denison University; Edward Chiera, University of Pennsylvania; Thos. E. Cochran, Judson College, Alabama; Oliver W. Elsbree, Peddie Institute; Franklin H. Kerfoot, professor in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary and later corresponding secretary of the home mission board of the Southern Convention; Fletcher H. Knollin, professor in Keystone Academy; Spenser B. Meeser, professor in Crozer Theological Seminary; John Meigham, Hillsdale College; George F. Mitch, State College, Pennsylvania; Bernard J. Rockwood, principal High School, Kurnool, India; Henry C. Sartorio, lecturer in the Episcopal Theological Seminary, Cambridge, Mass.; Hugo P. J. Selinger, Kenyon College, Ohio; Bernard C. Taylor, Crozer Theological Seminary for forty-three years; James B. Webster, Shanghai Baptist College, China; Charles B. Williams, ton, Crozer Seminary; Henry E. Robins, Colby College; G. D. B. Pepper, Colby College; D. A. W. Smith, Rangoon College; E. B. Andrews, Brown University; Albion W. Small, Colby College and University of Chicago; George E. Merrill, Colgate; Alvah Hovey, Newton; Samson Talbot, Denison; W. H. P. Faunce, Brown; Shailer Mathews, University of Chicago; John L. Dearing, Yokohama Seminary; W. F. Thomas, Theological Seminary, Insein, Burma; George E. Horr, Newton.

Michigan, Illinois and Arizona have elected Hillsdale College men as state superintendents of public instruction.

Leading the Hosts at Home

THOMAS S. YOUNG of the Publication Society, superintendent of the week-day Bible schools, Edward Rafferty of the same society, editor-in-chief of our Sunday literature and H. R. Greaves, business manager of the General Board of Promotion, Edwin R. Brown, in charge of our work among the Mexicans and H. Q. Morton, superintendent of missions of Arizona, are graduates of Shurtleff College.

Lathan A. Crandall, prominent in organizing and administering the Northern Baptist Convention and the Baptist World Alliance, the first editor of THE BAPTIST, is one of four Hillsdale College men who have edited religious newspapers.

Washington Gardner, formerly clergyman and professor in a church college, now the United States Commissioner of Pensions, long a congressman and commander-in-chief of the Grand Army, is ardently loyal to his college-mother at Hillsdale. In a public address on the service of her students he referred to about 400 who had been trained for the Christian ministry.

Graduates of Pillsbury Academy who are in general denominational work are A. E. Peterson, executive secretary of the Illinois Baptist Convention, and Thomas B. Frizelle of the American Baptist Publication Society.

Three of our promotional directors are graduates of Kalamazoo College. A. H. Bailey, class of '99, is general superintendent of the East Washington and Northern Idaho Baptist Convention; Grant M. Hudson, class of '94, is director of promotion of the Michigan Baptist Convention; and Carlos M. Dinsmore is general superintendent of the Indiana Baptist Convention. J. B. Fox of the Los Angeles City Mission Society is also a graduate. The college is proud of these men in general denominational work.

Frank W. Padelford of the board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention is a graduate of Colby College.

The Kansas City Seminary is just rounding out its twentieth year. It has already sent 325 men into the ministry. Among those who have rendered outstanding

Great—But Limited

"I AM in no way untrue to State institutions when I say that in our day a boy might become a bachelor or master in almost any one of the best of them, and be as ignorant of the Bible, the moral and spiritual truth which it represents and the fundamental principles of religion, their nature and value to society, as if he had been educated in a non-Christian country. Who is to supply this lack if not the Christian college?"

—President Thompson, of Ohio State University.

Southwestern Theological Seminary, Texas; Charles L. Williams, Denison University, Ohio; and Walter J. Young, Fredericksburg College, Virginia.

Eight church colleges and a state university have had Hillsdale College men as their presidents. John F. Downey and Elias P. Lyon, Deans of the liberal arts and medical schools of the University of Minnesota and William W. Payne of Carleton College, founder and editor of the first international magazine of astronomy, are suggestive of scores of Hillsdale students who have served as professors and officers of universities and colleges including the universities of Michigan, California, Chicago, Minnesota, Illinois, Nebraska, Yale, Columbia, St. Louis, New York City College, Oberlin, Vassar, Carleton, Drury, Storer, Rio Grande, Parker, Keuka, Hillsdale and the institutions in Peking, Canton and Bombay.

John C. Lewis of Yale, famous as a mathematician, is a graduate of Shurtleff College.

Newton has made an unusual contribution of college presidents and educational leaders: Martin B. Anderson, University of Rochester; Ebenezer Dodge, Madison University, now Colgate; Henry G. Wes-service are: W. F. Ripley, formerly state secretary of the Colorado Convention, now director of promotion in the same state; Ray E. York, formerly city mission secretary, Kansas City, then state secretary of the Nebraska Convention, and now pastor of the University Church at the State University of Iowa; Prof. W. A. S. Sharp, formerly head of the Normal College at Rangoon, Burma, then professor in Bacone University, Okla., then superintendent of city missions in Kansas and now professor in the Kansas City Seminary; also George Garland Riggan, professor of religious education and social science in the Kansas City Seminary.

Of the graduates of Ottawa University sixty-four have entered the ministry. Among outstanding leaders are, J. T. Crawford, secretary of the Kansas Convention; G. W. Trout, dean of the Kansas State Manual Normal Training School, and F. F. Peterson, director of religious education in Massachusetts.

Every Baptist knows the name of Lemuel C. Barnes, field secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society. Not every Baptist is aware that he is a graduate of Kalamazoo College in the class of '75.

Henry G. Morehouse of the Home Mission Society; Thomas Barbour of the Foreign Mission Society, and A. J. Rowland of the Publication Society were Rochester men.

John Y. Aitchison is a product of old Central College at Pella, Iowa, and Des Moines College, now Des Moines University. Hugh A. Heath of the General Board of Promotion is also a graduate of Des Moines College.

The denominational work of the Baptist Missionary Training School is represented by Ina E. Burton, Class of '04, organizational secretary of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society; Clara E. Norcutt, class of '08, missionary correspondence secretary of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, and Helen Crisman, class of '14, field secretary of the Board of Promotion.

William C. Bitting, an outstanding leader in denominational enterprises and corresponding secretary of the Northern Baptist Convention since its organization, is a Crozer man.

Among those who have rendered service in general denominational work who are graduates of Crozer are: Harry W. Barras; Samuel Zane Batten; John C. Killian of the Publication Society; Thomas P. Holloway, executive secretary of the New Jersey Convention; William G. Russell, district secretary; Charles A. Soars, secretary, Pennsylvania state missions; Leroy Stephens, secretary of the Pennsylvania Educational Society; Orlando T. Steward, executive secretary of the Baptist Union; H. F. Stillwell, superintendent of evangelism of the Home Mission Society; Raymond M. West, and John M. Moore.

The Newton Theological Institution will celebrate in 1925 its one hundredth anniversary. What has it done? What is it doing? In New England there are 1,281 Baptist churches, many of them small and pastorless. About 350 Newton graduates are settled as pastors in New England, and about 600 outside of New England.

On the Far Flung Battle Line

AMONG the missionaries who went out from Kalamazoo College, we make mention of Prof. L. E. Martin, class of '88, of Ongole, India, son-in-law of John E. Clough; Mr. and Mrs. Willard F. Dowd, both of the class of '97, missionaries at Impur, Assam, India; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kurtz, of the classes of '92 and '89, missionaries at Madera, South India.

William Ashmore, Baptist missionary, statesman and pioneer, was a graduate of Denison in the class of '45.

Among the graduates of Colby College are names which have become household words in Baptist missionary circles. Here are some of them: George Dana Boardman, founder of the Karen Mission, Burma; Thomas Ward Merrill, pioneer home missionary and founder of Kalamazoo College; Alonzo Bunker, missionary to the Karens; John Ernest Cummings, missionary to Burma; John Lincoln Dearing, missionary to Japan; Frederick Howard Eveleth, missionary to Burma; and John Marshall Foster, missionary to China.

Eighteen graduates of Ottawa University are engaged in missionary work. Among them, Frank J. White, president of Shanghai Baptist College. Mrs. White is also a graduate.

Among the graduates of Bethel Institute of the Swedish General Conference more than twenty have done work on fields outside of North America. Prominent among this number may be mentioned Ola Hanson who translated most of the Bible of the Kachins; O. L. Swanson, known as the "Billy Sunday of Assam," and Dr. H. Ostrom, a successful medical missionary of Africa.

If we were to list the names of the graduates of Rochester who have served on the foreign field, you would find in China the names of William Ashmore, Jr., Jacob Speicher, Adam Groesbeck and a score of others. In India, the list would be headed by David Downie, John Craig, William L. Ferguson, Samuel D. Bawden and many others. While in Japan you would find the name of William Axling, Charles H. Ross, Henry Topping, George W. Hill and Douglas G. Haring.

Among Chicago men now active in foreign missions, especially missionary education, may be mentioned Prof. Wallace St. John, of Judson College, Rangoon; Prof. E. H. Zaugg, of the Northern Japan College at Sendai; Prof. H. H. Nelson, dean of the American University at Beirut; Prof. H. B. Benninghoff, of Waseda University, Tokyo; E. N. Armstrong, missionary among the Telugus, Rangoon; Daniel C. Holtom, Tokyo; A. S. Woodburne, Madras Christian College; A. E. Bigelow, Philippine Islands; Robert Routledge, El Cristo College, Cuba; S. A. D. Boggs, Jorhat College, Assam; Paul R. Hackett, director of religious education, Burma; Victor Hanson, Shanghai Baptist College; and J. T. Proctor, Shanghai Baptist College.

It has been estimated that Newton men have given about 2,350 years of service in Asia of which 1,000 was given to Burma.

Do You Know

WE almost always think of the graduates of denominational schools in connection with the work of preaching, teaching and missionary effort. Emos Anson DeWaters of the class of '89 of Kalamazoo College is the chief engineer of the Buick Motor Company, Flint, Mich. John Earl Walker, class of '07, is chief draftsman, United States Senate, Legislative Drafting Service. Fred M. Hodge, class of '80, is the president of the Kalamazoo Paper Company, one of the largest institutions of its kind in the world. Mr. Hodge is one of the trustees of the college.

The editors of the Watchman-Examiner, Curtis L. Laws and Joseph K. Wilson, and Edgar L. Killam, managing editor of THE BAPTIST, are all graduates of Crozer Seminary.

United States Senator Albert J. Hopkins was one of four who have been members of the House of Representatives at Washington. Two governors of states, other state officers, and thirty members and speakers of legislatures are further suggestive of the political stations of Hillsdale College people.

The poet Will Carleton, admired the world over for his "Over the Hill" and other ballads of farm and city, won the widest fame of all the graduates of Hillsdale College. Byron A. Dunn's many war novels have been among the "best sellers." William W. Cook, the leading authority on corporation law in all American law libraries, John M. Van Fleet, writer on other law subjects, Chief-Justices Joseph B. Moore and Edwin W. Cunningham, of the supreme courts of Michigan and Kansas, are representative of the bar, from which upwards of thirty Hillsdale men have risen to the bench.

The College Furnishes the Nation's Leaders

COLLEGE trained men and women are as to numbers in the small minority. But what about their importance in the life of the nation?

An impressive answer to this question is given in the biographical dictionary entitled "Who's Who in America?" the best and most impartial list we have of eminent men and women in every field of activity, business, professions, art, literature, government, military service, etc. Of 15,518 leaders of American life there named (who have given educational data concerning themselves), 58 per cent are graduates of colleges and universities, while 13 per cent more have attended college and did not graduate. That is, the little group of college trained men and women in our national life, two or three per cent, perhaps, of our population, has furnished more than 71 per cent of the leaders.

President Thwing of Western Reserve University some years ago stated the results of a similar investigation in this concrete fashion: "Gather into one group 10,000 children and send none of them to college. Only one will attain distinction. Gather into another group 40 college graduates, and one of them will attain distinction." That is, when we compare the number of college graduates with the number of people who have lived and died in our country without a college education, we find that in regard to success and fame the proportion in favor of the college man is 250 to 1.

More than 90 per cent of the Bucknell student-body are church members. The Baptists with 235 lead in numbers, with the Methodists and Presbyterians following next in order.

There are 2,300 living graduates of Bucknell University, nearly 400 of whom are engaged directly in religious work. Most of these are pastors in the homeland. Twelve are at present on the mission field. Nearly 700 more are busy in the field of education, many of them in Baptist schools and colleges.

Col. Bion J. Arnold, famed in Europe and America in electrical and mechanical engineering, heads several Hillsdale College men prominent in those spheres. Lewis Emery, Jr., in mining, oil production and refining in Pennsylvania; E. A. Merrill, finance and trust officer, and Judge M. B. Koon, business and philanthropy, in Minneapolis; W. W. Mitchell, lumber, Cadillac, Mich.; J. E. Davidson, shipbuilder and banker, Bay City; I. L. Stone, manufacturer of printing presses at Battle Creek, are a few of those prominent in business.

Daniel G. Stevens, book editor of the Publication Society, and A. J. R. Schumaker, assistant editor of the American Sunday School Union, now director of religious education of Pittsburgh, are graduates of Crozer Seminary.

Five graduates of Hillsdale College in the army have had the rank of general as variously designated, one of them now surviving is Frank D. Baldwin, U. S. Army, retired as major-general. The highest in the navy was Captain Charles V. Gridley, who as commander of the flagship at the battle of Manila received Admiral Dewey's order, "You may begin firing, Captain Gridley, when you are ready." The hazard of invidious distinctions forbids the names of many other commissioned officers of army and navy, from colonel down.

Kalamazoo College has a graduate list of 904 of whom 771 are living. These graduates reside in forty-three states and twelve foreign countries. At present there is a student enrolment of 364 representing fifteen states and two foreign countries. The work is entirely collegiate and the attendance has more than doubled within the last ten years. One hundred and fifty-five new students entered the college last fall.

Ernest L. Tustin, president last year of the Northern Baptist Convention, whose untimely death has been mourned by thousands, was the son of a Bucknell professor and a graduate in the class of '84.

The first traveling secretary of the Y. W. C. A. was Miss Nette Dunn of Hillsdale, now Mrs. Clark, under a church foreign board in India. The number of Y. W. and Y. M. C. A. secretaries is large, city, county, state, national and international. Hillsdale College, it is said, has the highest rank among all the colleges in secretaries of the rural Y. M. C. A. work, and one of its graduates, on the international board, is at the head of this "arm of service" in the world.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is a graduate of Brown University, class of '97; James C. Colgate, a graduate of Colgate University, class of '84, and Charles Evans Hughes, a student at Colgate and a graduate of Brown in the class of '81.

President Warren G. Harding did his college work, '79-'82, at Ohio Central College, a small college now defunct.

Francis W. Parker, lawyer, well-known for his activity in denominational work and as director of Y. M. C. A. Divisional Area in France, is a graduate of Shurtleff College.

The Baptist Missionary Training School was established September 4, 1881. Its first graduating class numbered fourteen of whom six are still living. Johanna P. Moore was a member of this class. She is remembered and loved as the founder "Offered Prayer Before Every Game"

"VROEG" whose real name is Tom Vroegindewey, best guard in the inter-collegiate basketball tournament at Indianapolis, is a Kalamazoo College student. In a most confidential way at an older boys' conference in the Y. M. C. A. April 1-2, "Vroeg" let the boys into what he considers the secret of their "winning streak." "Vroeg" will wonder where we got this story. "Vroeg" says, "In order to play with a winning streak it is necessary for every fellow to forget himself and play with team spirit." "Vroeg" is considered the star of the team, but he emphatically denies the statement saying, "There are no stars for we are all stars. It is team work that does it." He emphasized the fact that the brief prayer before every game put the fellows in the right spirit to co-operate successfully. "Vroeg" says, "The reason why so many fellows don't make a very big dent in this old world of ours is that they stop trying for baskets." He suggests that in order to make life's goals we have to keep trying and trying for the baskets forgetting about the discomforts of the game, not becoming discouraged for a minute, realizing that others are depending upon us and that we are winning for them, not alone for ourselves. "Vroeg" stated that in order to go "straight" we have to tunnel the obstacles in life and not attempt to go around them.

of the Fireside Schools among the negroes of the South. Ada F. Morgan, her successor, is a member of the class of 1896.

Linfield College this year enrolls a total of 248 students in all departments. Of this number, fourteen are students for the ministry and forty-two more are members of the Student Volunteer Band. The great majority of the others are interpreting their lives now and for the future in terms of the Kingdom of God.

Colby College has sent students and graduates into the mission field to the number of fifty-six. Forty-four of these are on the foreign field, and twelve engaged in missionary work at home. This does not include those who have entered other forms of religious service, such as the Y. M. C. A. Three hundred graduates have entered the ministry, or 20 per cent of the total number of the male graduates.

One of the earliest graduates of the old "University of Lewisburg," now Bucknell, to attain prominence before the wider public was Robert Lowry, class of '54. By the people of Lewisburg he is remembered as pastor and professor of rhetoric at the college. To the world at large he is known as the author of such hymns as "I need Thee Every Hour" and "One More Day's Work for Jesus."

Christy Mathewson, athlete and gentleman, is a graduate of Bucknell. All the skill of later idols of the baseball world has not dimmed the lustre of this member of the class of 1901, because his fame rests less on his matchless ability than on his reputation as an exemplar of good sportsmanship. During his long years of service with the New York Giants he built up that tradition of fair play and gentlemanliness which has brought him during his present fight against the grim White Plague the sympathy of the entire nation.

Almost every school boy and girl knows the history of Elijah P. Lovejoy, abolitionist, who was killed by a mob at Alton, Ill., in 1837. But the fact that he was a graduate of Colby College is not generally known.

Rochester Seminary has had among its graduates 113 missionaries on the foreign field, 131 as presidents, professors and other officers in colleges and seminaries, fifty-six have been secretaries of missionary and philanthropic societies, and 1,241 have served in the pastorate.

David Jayne Hill was a member of the class of '74, of the old University at Lewisburg. He afterwards became its president, having a brilliant ten-year administration. Subsequently he was president of Rochester University. He resigned from this position to take up the study of public law and enter upon a diplomatic career which culminated in his term as ambassador to Germany during the years 1908-11. Since his retirement from that position he has been active as a publicist and author. Among his many publications his monumental "History of Diplomacy in the International Development of Europe" stands out.

There are 168 ministers in the state of Missouri who graduated from William Jewell College. There are now ninety-two ministerial students enrolled.

The religious department of Stephens College is unique in that it teaches the actual practice of Christian virtues, in school as well as out, rather than the mere theoretical dogmas of the Christian faith, although such teaching of Christian doctrine must have its place in any well organized department of religious education. The influence of the department is felt through the entire community and the whole state. It proceeds upon the assumption that communities have a right to increased service on the part of young men and women who have been sent by the community into educational centers.

During the twelve years of its history, the University of Redlands has graduated 183 young people. Of the 183 nine have gone into the work of the Christian ministry, twelve have taken up work on the mission fields, and six others have engaged in some form of Christian work.

Linfield College is especially happy this year over the fact that she has a larger number of students in the Rochester Theological Seminary than any other institution, there being twelve in all. One of these, Cyril F. Richards, who had both his preparatory and collegiate work in Linfield College, won the highest standing for scholarship in his class in the first semester of this year.

Dr. Paul Monroe, Director of the School of Education Teachers College, Columbia University is certainly entitled to the half column or so which his name occupies in Who's Who. He is a graduate of Franklin College.

The student body of Denison University for the present college year has reached a total of 896, of whom 694 belong in college classes. Of the total number sixty-three men and women are student volunteers for foreign missions, and in addition, thirty-six young men planning for the Baptist ministry and other religious work in America, so that this total of ninety-nine young people means about one person in nine in the student body definitely planning for a Christian life service.

J. K. Hart is another alumnus of Franklin who has joined the ranks of the journalists and is already making a distinct contribution through the columns of the Survey.

Among the graduates of Kalamazoo College in the literary field are such men as Maynard O. Williams, class of '10, Washington, D. C., writer and editor of the National Geographic Magazine; Hilton D. Girdwood, class of 1900, London, England, who prepared the historical geography of India under royal command; Bernard L. Johnson, class of '06, Chicago, editor of the American Builder and also of the Farm Mechanics.

Isabel Crawford, pioneer missionary to the Indians at Saddle Mountain and author of "Kiowa," was a member of the class of the Baptist Missionary Training School of 1893.

Financially the Northern Baptist Seminary began with the contributions of a few local friends. The past year, over $27,000 was raised and expended for all purposes, of which a little over 40 per cent came through our denominational organizations and nearly 60 per cent from interested churches and individuals from all parts of the country. Housed for seven years through their generosity in the classrooms of the Second Baptist Church, the seminary now owns a beautiful property that could not be duplicated for $300,000.

Out of a total number of 567 graduates from the collegiate department only, Shurtleff has turned out 151 ministers and thirty missionaries. During the entire period of its history according to figures given by the Interchurch World Survey, the college has sent out something like 1,200 men and women into the ministry and missionary service of the denomination. Shurtleff is the pioneer college of the Mississippi Valley.

Colgate University has furnished ninety-eight foreign missionaries, forty-eight home missionaries, 1,671 pastors, 169 presidents and professors in colleges and seminaries, twenty-six secretaries and agents of denominational and philanthropic societies and 526 public school teachers.

A Japanese gentleman recently said that since Perry opened the gates of Japan to the western world, no English-speaking man had done more for Japan than John L. Newton of Newton, class of '89. Today D. C. Holtom, S. W. Hamblin, C. B. Penney, John A. Foote, and F. M. Derwacher of Newton are carrying on Dearing's work in Japan.

Probably the most successful mission of the Protestant churches in the whole world is the Burman of the American Baptists. There is nothing else to compare with it. There are nearly as many Baptist churches in Burma as in all New England, and the Burman churches are quite as largely supplied with pastors as the New England churches. The Burman mission was founded by Adoniram Judson. Judson was a graduate of Andover Seminary. After Judson became a Baptist, the relations between the New England Congregationalists and Baptists were somewhat strained. The Baptists felt the need of a seminary of their own, that is why Newton was founded 1825.

Elmer H. Davis won the Rhodes Scholarship in his senior year at Franklin. He spent the year 1912 in Oxford University. On his return to this country he took up journalism as a profession. He has for several years been on the editorial staff of the New York Times.

The Northern Baptist Theological Seminary is just completing the ninth year of its history and its second year in its new home at 3040 Washington Blvd., Chicago. The original three students who enrolled at the beginning opened the door for more than 103 who have been enrolled during the current school year.

Alva O. Neal was for several years government expert in rural education with headquarters in Washington. More recently he has headed the department of education in the University of Arizona. He is a Franklin graduate.

Among ministers who have attained prominence who were students in the earlier days of Linfield College may be mentioned Joseph H. Beaven of the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester; H. L. Boardman, formerly president of Linfield College; C. M. Hill, president of Berkeley Baptist Divinity School, and the late C. A. Wooddy, who, while a student in this institution, was baptized in the creek which flows across the campus.

J. W. Bailey, president of Colorado Woman's College, J. L. Beyl, of DePauw University, E. L. Hendricks, president of the state normal at Warrensburg, Mo., C. E. Goodell, president of Franklin College, A. B. Ball of Wisconsin University, Frank Bachelor of the extension department of Kalamazoo College and Otis W. Caldwell, Professor of Education in Teachers College, Columbia University and Director of the Lincoln Experimental School since 1917, are all graduates of Franklin College.

College Courses in Religious Education

THE church of the present is challenged as never before to vitalize and spiritualize the ideals of the people. Our colleges for the most part were born of the church. Now the church turns to the college for its leaders. Calls are constantly coming to our colleges for directors of community schools of religious education, for members of important boards and commissions, for institute and convention specialists, for workers in week-day and vacation schools of religion, for home and foreign missionaries, pastors' assistants, directors of music and pageantry, and for specialists in scores of other fields of Christian activity.

The colleges have met the demands of the times in general science, in medicine, in arts, in engineering, and in education. The courses of study have been modified, extended, and enriched, in order to satisfy the claims of the professions and of business. The time has now come when they should respond to the call from the church for trained specialists in the field of spiritual leadership, specialists who may wisely guide the people in the impending moral crisis.

The claim for credit in specialization courses in religious education and Christian leadership is as valid as is the claim for credit in specialization courses in chemistry, biology, or any of the sciences. We have splendid schools of applied science and strong, highly specialized courses in nearly every department of college work. We need just as strong technical schools and just as highly specialized courses to conserve and develop the spiritual ideals of men and women and to insure a trained, efficient leadership in every department of Christian service.

In order to obtain this result, our students must combine theory and practice. They must know the facts and experience in their lives, the power of the message they carry. They must be grounded in the truth and they must have actual contact with the moral, social, and spiritual problems of the day. These pupils must be students of the Word and the life of the Great Teacher; they must also know folks and understand the problems of all kinds and conditions of people.

They must not for a moment lose sight of the fundamental purpose of the church. Specialization in methods can never take the place of evangelistic endeavor and Christ-like living—"Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord" should be the standard of every student who undertakes to prepare for definite Christian service.

In a few cases the question of credit towards a degree for specialization work in training for Christian leadership has been taken to the state educational authorities with the result that these courses are now being offered in a number of schools and colleges. Keuka College in New York state, just re-opened as a college for women, submitted a thorough course in Christian leadership to the educational authorities of the state, and the course is now approved and counts toward a degree.

The course in Christian leadership requires two years solid college work in the so-called essential subjects, after which in the third and fourth years the student specializes in the subjects which fit her for the particular field of service she has chosen.

The church has the same right to expect specialists trained for the work of the kingdom as has the world of science to exact so large a portion of the student's time. Therefore let us ask our colleges to rearrange their courses that our leaders may secure the training and the education which shall enable them to serve effectively in the work of the Master.

The Two-Edged Sword

A Message to Christian Students

By ISABEL WARWICK WOOD

IN these turbulent days every student who goes out to win the world for Christ must carry two things, the culture which enables us to meet all the world unashamed, and the spiritual vision without which all culture is dead. Some people say that this is an impossible combination, that you cannot stress one of these aspects of education without sacrificing the other. But with God all things are possible. You can make it one of your great purposes to prove that one may care supremely for culture and the highest standards of scholarship and yet not sacrifice one particle of loyalty to the things of the spirit and Jesus Christ, and that one may care supremely for the life of the spirit, be even a mystic or a visionary, perhaps, and yet not sacrifice one bit of culture. This last achievement is what people doubt, and this doubt is due to the tragic fact that so much of literature, art, philosophy and all that we call culture has departed so far from the faith of the Son of God and either defies or ignores him.

Trend of Literature

In the nineteenth century, the century in which the development of the novel was supreme, the great novelists all wrote either in personal faith or in great respect and reverence for Christ. But it seems that most of the novelists of the present day take it for granted that Christianity is an outworn dogma held only by the ignorant or superstitious. Or else they write the so-called "religious novels," like those of Harold Bell Wright, who to my definite knowledge has led astray many devoted and earnest young Christians by his sentimental and destructive substitute for the gospel of Christ. Most of our modern drama, where it does not openly mock at all moral standards, mocks at Christianity. And if we have what they call "religious plays" they are either mawkish or sensual.

The new poets of our day are so many of them frankly and joyously pagan that we sometimes forget the constructive Christian messages of practically all our great poets. Leaving out the teachings of those whom we call the specifically religious poets like Dante or Milton let us take just three out of thousands of proofs. We know that Shakespeare, most human of them all, was not afraid to do honor to the atoning Christ, as when he makes Henry IV speak of

"Those holy fields
Over whose acres walked those blessed feet
Which fourteen hundred years ago were nailed
For our redemption on the bitter cross."

And Tennyson, though claimed as their own by many modern agnostics, shows his transcendent faith in the

"Strong Son of God, Immortal Love,
Whom we, who have not seen thy face
By faith, and faith alone, embrace, Believing where we cannot prove."

Or Browning, whose broad and sun-lit faith is claimed by every creed, where he makes the critic Cerinthus concede, at the close of John's inspired message in "A Death in the Desert"

"Call Christ then the illimitable God,
Or—lost."

Must not the pendulum swing back and the truly great novelist or dramatist or poet again acknowledge the controlling faith? But until the swing-back comes, the Christian student who must get this culture in the midst of present day conditions will have to struggle to avoid the fear that perhaps after all he has given his life to an outworn dogma. I feel deeply about this because often when I have had occasion to work with women along purely secular lines of interest I have raged inwardly at their slight air of patronage, and their inference that I could not have very much real culture because I belong to one of these narrow sects and hold these hide-bound medieval views. Don't let people say those things to you. These views are not of the middle ages, they were bound up in the founding of Christian civilization itself in the time when this man of Nazareth whom they sneer at came to make all modern civilization and culture possible. Don't let these poor people be sorry for you! Do you be sorry for them, because their culture is so empty without him in whom are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge hidden from the foundation of the world.

This Must Be Changed

A RECENT report of the United States Bureau of Education giving in round numbers the enrolment in the schools of various grades in the United States give these startling figures:

Total in regular educational institutions of all kinds 21,399,000—100 per cent.

In Elementary Schools

First Grade	4,597,000
Second Grade	2,893,000
Third Grade	2,721,000
Fourth Grade	2,598,000
Fifth Grade	2,207,000
Sixth Grade	1,809,000
Seventh Grade	1,492,000
Eighth Grade	1,244,000
Total	19,561,000 91½ per cent

In High Schools and Academies

First Year	586,000
Second Year	390,000
Third Year	275,000
Fourth Year	208,000
Total	1,459,000 7 per cent

In All Higher Institutions

Colleges and Universities	217,000
Normal Schools	95,000
Higher Professional Schools	67,000
Total	379,000 1½ per cent

The Bureau of Education estimates that of 1,000 pupils who enter the first grade, 111 will enter high school, while only 14 will go through college. That is, 986 out of 1,000 will drop out before finishing college. The effect of the war was to increase this loss. Will you be one of the 986 who fall, or one of the fourteen who go "over the top"?

cently said to me, "My professor of philosophy says that there is no such thing as revelation, that we must give credence only to that which our reason reveals to us." "Well," I said, "how does that make you feel?" "Do you know," he answered, "I felt sorry for the poor cuss, to think that that was all he had!" You need not imitate his irreverent speech, but you can imitate his spirit. Don't let such a man as that professor be sorry for you because you are narrow. It is he who is the narrow one with his horizon bounded by his own vision, while your vision is broad enough to look far beyond the stars and commune with the infinite mind that made them. It is time we shifted those epithets broad and narrow and put them where they belong. Would you not rather take as your guide that great philosopher-poet Wordsworth, who had a supreme revelation and said that he was "One in whom persuasion and belief Had ripened into faith, and faith become A passionate intuition."

It is Heaven

If you and I have that passionate intuition we can afford to be indifferent to the patronizing ways of those who cannot lift their spirits beyond the narrow horizons of their own making. It is that passionate intuition which will keep you steady, which will enable you to show that this culture, scholarship, learning, which is founded upon Christ and on faith in the unseen need not disturb the depths of your spiritual life. It will keep you from ever forgetting that the culture is only the means and the living of the life that is hid with Christ in God is the end.

The student who goes into religious service today goes into a new world struggling to be born. But these strong times are a mighty challenge to you. I heard a leading publicist say a few weeks ago that the next ten years are going to be the greatest years for service that this world has ever known, and you are going to be in that service. Did you ever think how strange it was that a young English poet should write of the days when he came in touch with that terrible social upheaval which we call the French Revolution:

"Bliss was it in that day to be alive
And to be young was very heaven."
But it is heaven, as near heaven as we can get in this world, to be alive and to be young and to have a message, the only message that will save mankind in this time of great need.

Do you remember how in the folk-epics of the Middle Ages, with that strange unity handed down from the days when our nations were one, all the heroes—Beowulf, Siegfried or Roland—had to forge their wonder-working swords for themselves out of broken fragments before they could go out to fight the dragons that typified sin? You are not going out with broken swords, but each with the two-edged sword of his own forging. One edge is the true culture which is centered in the triumphant Christ, and the other edge is the spiritual vision which endures as seeing him who is invisible.

The Present Year in the Schools and Colleges

We have nothing to fear for the future of Christian education in America

By FRANK W. PADELFORD

THE year that is now closing has been one of remarkable interest in the educational world. Immediately following the return of our army from France there was a great increase in the enrolment of students in practically all American colleges. It was evident that this was a direct result of the war. The experiences of those years had demonstrated conclusively the value of an education in almost any branch of service. It was supposed, however, that this interest, plainly stimulated by the experiences of the war, would soon subside. It is plain now, however, that it is not going to subside. The country has become permanently convinced of the value of an education. This conclusion is reflected in the enrolment of our colleges this present year. Despite the hard times and the decreased incomes, the enrolments have steadily increased—nearly every one of our Baptist colleges reports a large number of students this year. The enrolment for the entire country shows a most surprising increase. One college, not Baptist but earnestly Christian, reports that it turned away over 500 applicants for admission last fall.

Not long ago we were told that we had too many colleges in America. It begins to look as though in a short time we should find that we have not anywhere near enough educational facilities for the students who are demanding them. This is being recognized by our large cities many of which are now adding two years of college instruction to the high school courses.

In all this educational advance our Baptist colleges are sharing in proportion as they are equipped to meet the demands. There are none of our Baptist colleges which would be under the necessity of declining to receive more students if they were properly equipped. We can give just as much Christian education through our colleges as we prepare ourselves to give.

This emphasizes the importance of completing the fund in the New World Movement for the schools and colleges.

We cannot complete it too quickly if we really wish to do our part in giving a Christian education to America.

It has been a good year in the colleges so far as the spirit and life are concerned. The colleges have almost entirely recovered from the evil effects that followed the war. Dr. Foster and Miss Greenough, the student secretaries of the Board of Education, have visited many institutions this year. They report a most cordial interest in their messages and a hearty response to their appeals. They have found a hearty Christian spirit everywhere. There is no lack of interest among our students in a vital Christian faith, or in an earnest Christian life.

The attendance at our seminaries has been unexpectedly large. Small classes were anticipated everywhere but all the schools report large classes of unusually fine men. The ministry is beginning to make its appeal again.

We have nothing to fear for the future of Christian education in America.

Baptist Students From Abroad

By EARLE B. CROSS

SIX thousand seven hundred and forty young men and women from foreign lands are studying in the schools and colleges of the United States, according to the records of the Friendly Relations Committee, which represents the Christian forces of America in service to these students from abroad. Probably there are many more than these 6,742, whose presence has not been recorded,—in fact some estimates place the number as high as 10,000. Of the recorded students nearly 3,000 come from the several countries in Europe, notably from Russia; 2,148 from the Far East; China sends 951; Japan, 588; the Philippine Islands, 456.

How many of these students from abroad are Christians? As yet we have no definite information on this point; but a careful survey is being made. The American Foreign Mission Society, however, has the names of seventy-eight students who are related to our missions in the Orient in some way. Especial interest centers in a select group of seventeen of these who are in America by special appointment of our missions. They are graduates of colleges in their native lands, and in many instances they have also completed courses in theological schools and served as pastors of churches. Their selection has been based upon a marked intellectual ability and a capacity for leadership. Upon their return to their homelands, we shall look to them to assume a large share of responsibility for the development of the enterprises of the Kingdom among their own people.

Many reasons have led to the appointment of students for special training in America by our missions in the Orient. With the progress of oriental peoples and the development of civilization according to western influences, a concomitant necessity has appeared for a native leadership among the Christian forces in these lands, which shall be on at least an equal footing with the leadership which is developing in non-religious circles. If young business men, government officials and educational leaders are being trained in western schools and colleges, it is quite as important that a number of Christian ministers, and teachers in Christian schools, shall have had a similar opportunity for contact with the educational institutions of the West. Without this type of leadership, the Christian forces would soon lose their status.

Foreigners can never Christianize China and Japan. If these countries are ever brought to Christ it can only be through the influence and agency of Chinese and Japanese leaders in the Christian constituencies which already exist in those lands. A recognition of this fact has led to a marked change in the method and policies of conducting missionary work during the past decade. An increasing emphasis is being laid upon educational work, always with the warm spiritual atmosphere of the evangelical influences which are indispensable in the missionary enterprise. A host of young men and women are being trained to assume the responsibilities of Christian leadership among their own people in the immediate future. Not all of these young folks are fitted to profit by study abroad. Some few of them, however, who give evidence of exceptional qualifications are appointed for graduate work in America with the purpose of cultivating their minds in a manner which would not be possible in the institutions of their own lands.

This policy of bringing students to America for study is fraught with dangers. Nevertheless, the good which will be accomplished is worth all the risk which is involved. What are these risks? One serious menace is the un-Christian character of much of the life with which these students come into contact in America. Will they be swayed from their Christian faith by the shock of discovering that America is so little Christian? Every possible effort is being put forth to forewarn these students of what they will meet, and to advise them that American Christians did not wait until the task had been fully accomplished in America before sending the good news of Christ to other lands. During the stay of the students in America, they are kept in touch with each other and with the Foreign Mission Society through a monthly newsletter and conferences at stated periods. The churches near which they locate are also cordially ministering to their spiritual life.

When these students return to their native lands they may face other perils to their efficiency. Will there be in the minds of those workers to whom the opportunity of a visit to America did not come, a lurking spirit of envy against their more favored brethren? Will the returning student have pride in his own heart which will destroy his effectiveness? We should pray for these men. Their problem is not simple. They must have the willingness to begin at comparatively insignificant tasks with patience and humility and prove their worth by deeds of service efficiently rendered.

Christ only is the strength of those who go forth to fulfil the Great Commission. In the souls of every one of these students from abroad who have come to America for study at the instance of our mission society, is a flaming zeal and love for Christ. Whether their objective be the ministry, or the gift of teaching, their tongue will ever testify to the salvation through Jesus Christ which comes by faith, their own lives bearing witness to him. In witness of this fact one who knows each of them intimately writes these lines.

CHRIST AND SCIENCE

Referring to the article "Christ and Science," by Mr. Evans, in the issue of THE BAPTIST of March 18, are some of us to infer that we are in bondage to a certain form of philosophy? What is this "Cartesian" philosophy? Mr. Evans assumes the truth of science; the truth of the Darwin theory? States that "Jesus is the truth," and that Jesus did not enter into the realms of science to teach its principles. He closes by stating that "Christ regnant in the world is using science to answer the prayer he taught: Thy Kingdom come." Is there something mysterious about this word "science" that we common folks cannot understand? Does it deal with the known or with the unknown? Forty years ago, when I was in school days, there was a thing which we called science. Applied to chemistry, we had certain ideas of the ultimate elements. Now my son in the university tells me we were all wrong. In astronomy, we studied the laws of the movements of the planets, we worked out times of eclipses, etc., on supposed well known laws. Now comes the new law called law of relativity. According to our old laws the moon was recently twelve miles out of its course. And so nearly every thing that we thought forty years ago to be a truth of science is refuted.

I often heard in those days just such doctrines as Mr. Evans urges. Jesus is the truth; science is merely a guess at some unknown truth. Burbank improved certain forms of fruit-bearing trees, or rather he improved the fruit they bear. He created nothing. He crossed some varieties of stone-seed bearing, or other form of seed-bearing trees, with like kinds of trees, and secured a better fruit, or sometimes a poorer one or no fruit at all. By certain processes, he eliminated seed bearing. But never has he eliminated the law given in Genesis—"after its kind." The rank and file of our denomination I am assured believe that the Kingdom is coming just as it states in the Bible, not through science at least.

Who is "regnant" in this world (age)? I think Jesus would not have consented to our recent deplorable exigencies had he then the guiding hand. He told Pilate that his kingdom was not of this age. He tells us who is "regnant" now, John 16:11—a third person alluded to as the "Prince of this World" (age).

An humble study of God's creations is an incentive to devotion and leads one to a love of the Creator—even the Christ. Many of the so-called truths of science are unproved guesses. Especially is this true of the doctrine that man as a being ascended from a simple form of matter in some way having an organic life. Until it is proved by undisputable evidence, I will not shake my faith in man's creation by a new and separate creative act, as set forth in Genesis. To my mind, there is not any proof contrary, and abundant to confirm. Why should we limit God's creative power to one original act of the creative power, especially if that limitation is contrary to the wording of Scripture. I think the trouble largely lies in lack of faith in the power of God to create at all.

A QUESTION ABOUT THE FRATERNAL COMMUNICATION

In common with our entire Baptist brotherhood I have read with deepest interest the "Fraternal Communication to Northern Baptists." Its wide publicity in our papers and through the mails has brought it to the attention of our people. The esteem in which our constituency holds the sixteen brethren whose names are attached insures attention to its message. The grave importance of the matters it discusses challenges our earnest consideration. The time at which it appears gives to it, in our democratic brotherhood, a weight which I am sure our brethren, the signers, have not lightly assumed. That weight of influence grows out of the fact that it is issued after a prolonged period of aggressive agitation by our Fundamentalists brethren for a convention confession of faith, expressing the doctrinal convictions of that group of brethren. The adoption of such a confession by these brethren at Des Moines a year ago; the mailing of this confession to the local churches, asking them to adopt and to send delegates to the 1922 Northern Baptist Convention instructed to vote for such a confession; and the wide publicity given to "The Columbia Conference" resolutions favoring a statement of doctrine formulated by a committee of twenty from the Northern and Southern Conventions, all of these facts give to this "Fraternal Communication to Northern Baptists" a climatic appeal to our people.

I share the same yearning expressed by the sixteen brethren to promote "fraternity, cooperation and unity among Northern Baptists" but I do not believe "fraternity, cooperation and unity" in the denomination are to be promoted by the proposed confession of faith. Rather, controversy will simply be accentuated thereby. This communication can only be interpreted in the light of the preceding events looking to such an end.

Our convention is organized not to formulate confessions of faith but to administer the affairs of our great missionary enterprises. We have hitherto respected the right of private interpretation and the freedom of the local church by leaving to the churches the adoption of confessions of faith. Shall we now turn aside from our primary function as a convention to make our gatherings theological debating scenes in place of fraternal, inspirational assemblies to forward the interests of God's kingdom?

I cannot but feel that our brethren who signed the "Fraternal Communication to Northern Baptists," though right perchance in desire, are wrong in method when they express through the denominational press agreement to a convention statement of faith. If "fraternity, cooperation and unity" have been weakened by the insistent demand of a party for such a statement already, how can "fraternity, cooperation and unity" be secured by a confession adopted through the demand of that party?

I join heartily with my brethren in the conclusion to their communication and call "upon all our people to join in lifting our denomination to a new and higher plane of communion with God, a more fervent passion for souls, and a consuming zeal for his service and the coming of his kingdom" but I urge this by the refusal to be diverted from the work of establishing the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ to engage in theological controversy, inappropriate and unwise, in our convention and that can under no circumstances be satisfactory to all nor productive of good for the cause of Christ.

SAY IT WITH GOLD

I have been greatly concerned in these days, as I read the "pros" and "cons," and the "posts" and "pres," giving advice in your columns. I am amazed at some of the expressions. There are some on each side that appear to be willing to exclude all from the Baptist ranks who do not agree with them.

I feel we shall never get together by making unwise and exaggerated statements.

I like the suggestion of Brethren Weddell and Robbins, "Let us all observe a 'week of sacrifice.'" May I be permitted to offer an amendment to a phrase in your recent editorial "Say it with money," and ask that we "say it with gold?" An offering of one sacrificial week from every Baptist in our convention will save us. What must we do to be saved? "Say it with gold." We have already given almost double our tithe the past two years, and have now a check for our sacrificial week, and are considering giving what it will cost to attend the meetings at Indianapolis, as we shall not be able to go.

The Patchwork Mother

HERE came a day in the Land of Nod when the king fell exceedingly ill, and as he lay in his royal bed he was all of a chill, and he cried: "Fetch me a quilt!" So they fetched him a patchwork quilt. And you might suppose that, being sick, he would have enjoyed looking at the curious patterns of that quilt; but alas! how could he? He being so flat on his royal back, and the quilt lying out so flat on top of him! But just because he couldn't, he wanted to: for that's the way kings are; or used to be in the good old days when kings were kings and could eat their cake and have it, too. However that may be, no sooner did his subjects hear that his majesty, while wanting the warmth of a quilt on his shivering limbs, also desired it to rear itself up before his eyes in its full beauty, than from all over his kingdom there began coming patchwork quilts and patchwork quilts and patchwork quilts until the very sight of so many at once heated him into a fever.

"They will drive me crazy!" quoth he, which was very unreasonable of him, seeing it was his own whimsy which had evoked them from north, south, east and west, and there were plenty of good housewives shivering all night in their four-posters for lack of those very quilts. But being a king, his remarks always got themselves bruited abroad—softened somewhat by chamberlains, cupbearers and such; so that the first thing anybody knew the ladies were wagging their heads in high glee and nudging each other delightedly: "Did ye hear the latest? How his majesty has such a sense of wit as never was equalled, methinks, for 'twas from looking at the very patchwork which my own hands sewed that he thought of the humorous name now on every one's tongue: 'crazy quilt!' I like to have died with pride to think I gave the poor man such comfort in his hours of pain."

"Tut! Tut!" clucked another lady peevishly, "who said 'twas yours that turned him so inventive? They say there's quilts enough in that palace this minute to stretch from here to Kalamazoo, and some of those quilts are as alike as two peas in a pod, and some you never want to look at twice, and some you wish you'd never seen at all! But I'm certain sure that 'twas my patchwork which tickled the poor soul, for I mind me there's a story about every patch. Why, the pink patches were all off the gown I wore to the first court ball, and the blue patches were given me by the lady-in-waiting to the old queen, God rest her soul. As for the yellow and green patches, I'd have you know they were from the first pants that my blessed twin boys wore. There were pockets in those pants, and at night couldn't I always tell what they'd been up to all day, for Gabriel's would be full of moss and pebbles and sticks, while Ariel's would be full of nails and corks and twine, for he was a born inventor even in those early days, and... what, must ye be going?"

"There's the bread to set," said one lady. "There's the dusting to be did," said another; so nobody ever heard about the purple, red, and orange patches which were even then driving the king of the Land of Nod so crazy.

But what's the good of having chamberlains if they can't be having inspirations in idle moments while the king's so sick abed. So presently the chief high chamberlain knocked at the royal door, and said all sweet and low: "Could I come in?" "Who is it?" called the king.

"C. H. C.," said the chamberlain, in code.

"Oh!" said the king, "step in."

So he stepped. And he told the new thought that had come to him so suddenly. The king lay flat on his back to think it over, then he gave a little chuckle in spite of his fever and said: "The very thing! You can take my ring and write a letter."

So the chamberlain took the ring and used it to seal the letter which announced to the Land of Nod that his majesty was terribly beholden to all the gracious ladies for submitting their handiwork to him, but he could not find it in his heart either to deprive any one household of its chiefest treasure or to select a certain quilt and say: "Behold the winner!" It simply couldn't be done. Not by him, at any rate, with all the court duties, etc., etc. (Very legal and grand it sounded, as hot air has a way of doing.) But this he would do and hereby did do: He commissioned five poor young artists starving in their garrets for lack of inspiration to go out into the realm with canvas and palette and brush to paint for him the loveliest bit of patchwork they could find in the Land of Nod. And he would highly reward the one whose canvas eased his soul. "And hereto set I my seal," it ended, with a splash of gorgeous wax imprinted by the regal ring.

Now artists are queer people. You and I being literal souls would have fared forth to paint quilts—pale sprigged effects with primrose bindings which indeed the first young artist did. And it was a lovely quilt. A king might do worse than look at it. But the second artist had the thing called temperament, which there is no need to define—not with dictionaries in every completely furnished modern home! At any rate he felt he had a soul above mere quilts. Up and up it soared until it hit the very stars and stuck there in surprise, for it dawned on him in some astonishment that there was patchwork for you—those inky clouds applied across the silver moon, that dipper buttonholed against the midnight blue, with Venus embroidered brightly in the left-hand corner of the sky!

"My hat!" he cried, "what an original fellow I am!" So he squeezed his tubes of paint and daubed all night, secure that he alone would get the prize from painting patchwork heavens.

But they are kindred souls, those artists; and the third one sallied forth with never a glance at the patchwork of the village housewives. Over the hills he sauntered until, panting on the crest of a high crag, he looked downward at the peaceful farms below him, and with eyes suddenly unsealed he saw the curious patchwork of the farms—with here a field of golden oats, and there a field of snowy buckwheat, beyond the green of clover pastures, and then a blur of yellow mustard.

"Here's inspiration for you!" cried the artist beaming, and balancing upon his crag began to dabble merrily. "This will fetch the old king's fancy, since half his realm is little farms all broken up in tiny fields. Patchwork? Well, I guess!"

Artist number four we need not dwell on overlong—men whose eyes seem located in their stomachs are ever a sorry lot, and this fellow had the gourmet's fancy that a certain appetizing dish of rare hors d'oeuvre (in a restaurant, mind you!) was the tastiest bit of patchwork in the Land of Nod, and painted the same with meticulous attention to the little humps upon the backs of the green pickles; indeed the very legs of the frogs seemed ready to hop. Yet it was a sordid daub of realism, compared to which real quilts of down and patchwork seemed angelic.

But of course we've saved the best one for the last, although artist number five was a lame young chap with hollows in his cheeks and not five cents to his name to fare forth into the countryside. And he was meditating borrowing that amount from the friendly little body in the flat just under his garret; indeed he got as far as the open door of this Flat That Was Brimful of Children when he saw a rare sight with his eyes. Oh, not a sight that would ever get into the headlines of newspapers, for it was nothing at all but that busy little body sitting in a rocking chair, midway of an afternoon, rocking herself. Yet in a Flat Brimful of Children it is something to have the golden loaves of bread all baked and the monster holes in socks all darned and the kitchen all scrubbed and scoured. At four o'clock of an afternoon, mind you!

"Amazing!" thought the artist, and licked his lips to get up courage to ask for that five cents he wanted. (He was aiming to walk one way, of course). His throat was awfully dry. You can ask for five dollars easier than you can for five cents—it seems more prosperous somehow! But he knew she kept her nickels over the sink in the blue jar marked "Ginger," and he was just clearing his throat to ask her to shake out one of them please, when—

"Mother! mother!! Where are you? Mother, I got an A in spelling!" (You see it was four o'clock and the child with the longest legs was home from school, breathless with sprinting.)

"Did you now? Well, and I'm proud of you! Anyhow there ought to be a good speller in this family, seeing I used to be the last one left standing in the spelling-bee we used to have back in the days when I was a girl. Words are jolly little packages, once you get the hang of them and the feel of them you can't be untidy enough to mix the letters, can you?"

And then came a child with his chin all scratched and bleeding but his eyes all shining blue: "Mother," he laughed, "I ran as fast as the wind. We flew faster than each other! Like sailing it was, but see—I smashed into a tree trunk and I guess something happened to my chin, didn't it?"

"It did!" gasped his mother, gathering his breathlessness up into her arms. "Ah! and it's the dreamer you are, like your mother before ye, laddie! Always playing you're what you are not! But I'm glad you've inherited it, precious, for it's dreaming that smooths the hard places and brings a bit of heaven on earth. And now fetch me the plaster and the anti-septic bottle."

Then came the quiet solemn lassie who sat by the window and sewed her seam contentedly. "I thought," she said, addressing her mother as woman to woman, "that if I put in a few tucks just for trimmings now, I could easily let them down one at one time a little later on as I keep growing longer."

"Even so," said her mother, with amusement, "and I'm thinking if ever I had a double you're it! Letting your head save your hands! 'Tis me all over. Mercy on us, if there isn't the artist-gentleman from upstairs! Was there something I could do for you, maybe? A pinch of sugar, or an onion for the stew, or maybe you'd sit down a bit."

"Thanks, I'll sit. The truth of the matter is, ma'am, all I want is to sit here for maybe five hours."

"Hoot! You're dreadful pale, sir—is it a sudden faintness, perhaps?"

"No, no! It's just the thing called an inspiration. I'm wishful to paint your portrait—yours and your children's."

"Heaven help me!" cried the lady, "are we so beautiful, or what?"

"You're patchwork!" cried the artist enthusiastically. "You've seen housewives point at quilts and say: 'This patch came from the dress I wore at Susie's wedding, and this father brought me from the fair?' Well, ma'am, I've been commissioned by the king to paint the loveliest bit of patchwork in this kingdom, and I don't have far to go to find it. For I see in each of your children quaint patches of your virtues: Your aptitude for spelling now tacked on Josephina's mind; your visionings are now in Martin's soul; your practical common sense dwells in the tips of Lucy's fingers! You've passed these on until your children are composites of your nature, and out of their clear eyes I see shining the same depth of soul you've nourished in yourself. O madam, let me paint you for the king!"

She looked at him, awestruck; "I'm just a simple woman," she exclaimed, "and none of us have gowns fit to decorate a palace wall."

He took her Bible from the table, and, smiling, pointed at a certain Psalm: "That our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner-stones, polished after the similitude of a palace."

"Then take us as we are," she smiled. And he took them!

Moreover, as you must have guessed, it was this picture which the king delightedly selected as his favorite. "What is there in all my kingdom as lovely as this patchwork?" he cried. "Tell me the mother's name, Sir Artist, and by my oath this day shall be named in her honor."

"She is but a simple woman, your majesty, I hesitate to speak her name lest the publicity should shatter the very qualities that hallow this picture."

"There's something in that!" the king agreed, "a simple unknown woman rearing such a family needs the protective halo of sweet inconspicuousness. Yet I long to commemorate the day to such devotion, but how? That's the question."

The chief high chamberlain closed his eyes for half a minute, until his usual inspiration fired him, then he whispered in the regal ear.

"Exactly!" cried the monarch, "go and tell her secretly for me that in her honor this first Sunday in May shall be forever known as Mother's Day!"

The Young Reserves

Mothers Are That Way!

BILL tells me that his mother is most interested in baseball and football and heavy socks and hikes and bikes and "scores." Bill knows she is interested because there is a certain light that comes into her eyes the minute he starts to talk things over with her!

Timothy, on the other hand, tells me his mother is most interested in rocking-horses and kiddie-cars and teddy bears and little tin engines and building blocks and animal stories. Timothy knows she is interested because there is a special light in her eyes the minute he talks about these treasures with her. Even when he builds a tower of blocks to reach to the moon, she never laughs when it topples over and says "Of course you couldn't do it!" She says: "Try again, dear, you can do it better next time!"

As for Peggy, she tells me her mother has always been most interested in dolls and doll clothes and doll furniture and hair-ribbons and tams and middy blouses and fairy stories. Peggy knows she is interested because there's the dearest light that comes into her eyes whenever Peggy brings up such subjects.

Yet Bill's mother and Timothy's mother and Peggy's mother are all one and the same person: Mrs. Hathaway! So isn't it strange about mothers? Isn't it lovely of them to be so many-sided? To be Peggy's special mother to Peggy and Bill's special mother to Bill, and yet satisfy Timothy's needs, too?

Peggy says: "I'm going to be just exactly that kind of a mother myself when I grow up."

"Are you?" I say, very quiet about it.

"Don't you think I can be?" Peggy asks, rather worried by the quietness.

"Indeed yes! Only you'd better begin now, dear. For Timothy's mother never laughs at Timothy's queer blunders—she loves him and loves him and loves him until the first thing any one knows she has loved the blunder clear out of sight. She loves Bill in the same patient way! And you, too. Not long ago you told me you had discovered that 'little girls are the beginnings of ladies!' Well, you're also the beginning now of the kind of mother you will surely, surely be twenty years from now. So where's your own mother's patience? And her tact? And her love?"

"Dear me," sighed Peggy, "I had better get busy! Wouldn't it be nice if there was sort of a fairy story about all this?"

There is! And you can read for yourself about "The Patchwork Mother" on the Chimney Corner page. It was put there specially for you, of course.

Mother's Day

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

NEVER too busy, she was, to hear
The little doubt or the little fear;
Never too busy to set aright
The dreams that haunted the darksome night.

Never too busy to read a book
Of fairy-tales, in some hidden nook.
Never too busy to kiss or praise,
Never too busy to fill our days
With the faith that lives and the joys that start
From the brimming depths of a mother's heart.

Never too busy, she was, to give
The love that will always grow and live—
And we who have taken her gifts must know

That they make a part of a debt we owe,
A debt of hope when the way is hard,
Of cheer when the soul seems battle-scarred,

Of smiles to brighten a tired face—
Never too tired to kiss or praise.
Mother's Day? They are all her days!

WHAT MY B. Y. P. U. DOES FOR ME.
Matt. 25:14-30.

By MABEL BENJAMIN

I have been requested to relate very simply my experience in B. Y. P. U., to tell just what my B. Y. has done for me. I shall do so to the very best of my ability, with the prayer that it may influence some other young Baptist to allow his B. Y. P. U. to mean as much to him.

"Honor to whom honor, tribute to whom tribute is due." First, I cannot, I would not, refrain from taking this opportunity to pay a humble tribute to a loving and efficient junior B. Y. superintendent under whose guidance I learned the first principles of leadership. It was she who sowed the seeds of Christian ambition for greater service, which have since sprung into fruitfulness. "First the blade, then the ear, and after that the full corn in the ear."

I believe that there are three things which my B. Y. has done for me; that is, it has helped to bring me to a better realization of three things. First, of my relationship with God; second, of my relationship with my neighbor; third, of my relationship to my own life. It is only as I see myself alone, in the correct relationship with God and mankind that I may live as a true disciple of Jesus Christ.

1. My B. Y. has helped to bring me to a better realization of my relationship with God. It has done this in several ways. In the first place, it has trained me to express my ideas, crude though they may be, on those subjects pertaining to Christ and his kingdom—subjects which it is sometimes hard for us, as young people, to discuss. In the second place, it has afforded a wonderful opportunity for the broadening of my interest through the B. Y. P. U. of A. conventions. There is something very inspiring in numbers. To mingle with young B. Y. P. U. members from North and South, from East and West, has given me a vision of our work. I shall never forget some of the addresses I have heard at these conventions. They have indeed drawn me closer to my God. I feel, however, that there is one thing above all others which has drawn me closer to my Master. That is a realization of my great need of him who is the loving Shepherd, if I am to be the wise leader that I should be. This need of him has deepened my faith and my prayer life as nothing else could. I have learned to "lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help."

2. My B. Y. P. U. has helped me to a better realization of my relationship with my neighbor. The social factor in any young people's organization is always an important one. My social life has always been centered largely in my church, and as a result I have had many, and lovely friends. But besides giving me friends, my B. Y. has trained me to work with others for others. I have learned that there is no one who is quite such a hindrance to progress in any work, as the one who believes that he has a private wire with God, over which special revelations are sent to him. In B. Y. I have had experience in working with young people and with those in authority in the church—the powers that be, as it were. There is no joy just like the joy of leadership. What is there which affords more fun than to put a big thing over successfully? My B. Y. has given me the privilege of being a leader, of trying my wings. It has been wonderful. It has taught me much.

But more than teaching me how to work with others, it has taught me to work for others. Through its educational program it has given me an opportunity of facing squarely the world's needs as they exist today. The picture has not been a gay one. It has been sad. It is only the glimpse of God's co-workers here and there on his great harvest field that brightens the scene. B. Y. has helped me to see my place in this great picture of life—in God's program.

3. Last of all, my B. Y. has helped to bring me to a better realization of my relationship with my own life. B. Y. P. U. is the department of the church which trains its future leaders. It is only right that it should develop its individual members for their own sakes. My B. Y. has helped me to realize that it is only as I trust in God and serve mankind where he wishes me to, that I can be true to myself. There have been times, I must confess, when I have inwardly rebelled against devoting so much of my time to my work in B. Y.—when I have felt that the results were not as they should be, and it was not fair. But these times pass quickly. The triumphant experiences when I feel that all is well and it has indeed been worth while, come much more often. I do know that "whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, shall find it."

From Everywhere

The spring rally of Baptist young people of Hamilton, Ont., and vicinity, was held April 3 at Victoria Avenue Church. Rev. J. Hind of Guelph gave the address of the evening on "Soul-Winning and Personal Evangelism."

The Montreal, Quebec, City B. Y. P. U. rally will be held, May 8.

One thousand registrations are expected for the Ontario and Quebec B. Y. P. U. Convention meeting in London, May 23-24.

Headquarters offices of the 75,000,000 campaign among Southern Baptists reports that 15,000 young people have dedicated their lives to some special form of Christian service.

The statistical department of the Baptist Sunday School Board of Nashville, Tenn., claims to have enrolled 600,000 in teacher training class last year.

New England organizations are extending a hearty invitation to the Baptist Young People's Union of America to hold its 1923 convention in Boston.

The Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary of Fort Worth, Tex., will conduct a special summer course for junior, intermediate and senior B. Y. P. U. workers, May 29-June 24. The classes will be under the direction of the leading B. Y. P. U. workers of the South.

The East Texas S. S. and B. Y. P. U. Convention met at Longview, April 20-21.

The B. Y. P. U.'s of Texas are aiding in the yearly round-up on the $75,000,000 campaign.

Ohio young people put on a self-denial contribution campaign in the interest of the $100,000,000 fund. The plan called for securing "one dollar from every B. Y. P. U. member before April 30."

The last rally of the city B. Y. P. U. of Huntington, W. Va., was held at Twentieth Street Church, Huntington. Miss Flora Fishback served as chairman of the social committee. There were lots of good things to eat. The city B. Y. P. U. awarded a pennant to the local union putting on the best stunt.

Are you going to St. Paul for the big B. Y. P. U. of America Convention, June 28-July 2? Already more than 5,000 have registered. The latest announced goal is 10,000. Will you be one? Consult local ticket agent for reduced rates. Watch for the May 20 issue of THE BAPTIST.

Dr. E. Y. Mullins suggests that young people can do two very definite things. 1. Enlist young people for attendance upon the Sunday evening services of the church. 2. Increase the circulation of our denominational papers. Of course!

One of Georgia's Regional B. Y. P. U. conventions was held at Cartersville on March 24. Dr. W. J. McGlothlin, president of Furman University, delivered two addresses.

The State B. Y. P. U. Convention will meet at Athens, June 20-22.

Maryland S. S. and B. Y. P. U. workers have closed a successful general training school for church workers. The sessions were held in First Church, Baltimore. Classes were conducted in the junior and senior B. Y. P. U. manuals. Among the speakers were Drs. Hicks, Abernethy, and Agar, also Congressmen B. G. Lowrey and William D. Upshaw, the Georgia "Cyclone on Crutches." Rev. R. E. F. Aler is state B. Y. P. U. director.

Mr. A. F. Holmer of the Twin City Convention Committee of St. Paul and Minneapolis, visited Detroit and Chicago in the interest of the Young People's Convention to be held in St. Paul, June 28-July 2.

The Ohio B. Y. P. U. Convention will be held as an important part of the Ohio Baptist Assembly, July 28-August 6. State Director Holmes is planning a splendid program.

Mrs. Ethel Gullion is secretary of the Life Service Division of the Nebraska Young People's Convention. She is rendering a fine service to the young people of the state who have pledged their lives to some form of Christian service.

Mr. H. S. Foote is president of the Nevada-Sierra B. Y. P. U. and serves as editor of the young people's page of The Bulletin. The B. Y. P. U.'s at Reno, Sparks, and Susanville are wide-awake organizations. This convention claims to have the finest young people in the land. The editor is inclined to agree.

The spring rally of the Bloomington, Ill., Association B. Y. P. U. was held at Fairburg, April 28-29. The rally banquet on the evening of April 28 was a delightful feature of the program.

Special Notice

The topic for May 14 "Helping Our Church" presents an unusual opportunity for a discussion of the Church Vacation School. Send to the American Baptist Publication Society, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. or any branch house for leaflets "Church Vacation School in the Village and Town" and "How to Promote a Daily Vacation Bible School."

The Capital of the Northwest

In its 15,000 manufacturing plants, Minneapolis employs 65,000 wage earners. In one year it expended $131,199,000 for materials and turned out manufactured products valued at $187,874,000. Since the census of 1910, when the foregoing facts were ascertained, the industrial activity of the city has expanded in every way and its manufactured products now are conservatively estimated to be over $350,000,000 annually. This development has contributed to the corresponding growth of 1,129 wholesaling and jobbing firms, so that Minneapolis is not only the center of the flour milling and grain elevator business of the world, but ranks first in the Northwest in implement manufacturing and distribution, tractor construction, automobiles, automobile tires and auto supplies distribution, coal distribution, underwear and woolen clothing, and consequently has become the center of transportation, and telephonic and telegraphic communication for the Northwest.

The importance of its manufacturing and jobbing has made the city the principal market place and the financial center of the Ninth Reserve District. Great financial institutions have been formed to finance its extensive trade, and today the city has fifty-four banks and trust companies. The total of Minneapolis bank clearings in 1920 exceeded $4,002,000,000, representing the transaction of only nine institutions embraced in the Minneapolis Clearing House Association. The bank transactions or turn over for 1920 totalled $14,122,749,000.

Backed by the resources of one of the most productive agricultural sections of the country, by proximity to the principal which it is the commercial capital has been particularly favored.

Minneapolis is the gateway to the ten thousand lakes of Minnesota, plentifully stocked as they are with fish of many varieties. Within a radius of seventy-five to one hundred miles are innumerable big and small game and the vast tracts of forests and cut over lands.

Boost for "Osokie" Delegates to St. Paul Convention

On Sunday, April 23, by resolution of the Chicago Ministers' Conference, plans for the Baptist Young People's Convention at St. Paul were presented in every church in the city. At Austin Church the result was a contribution of $115 toward the growing fund of the local young people's society to be used for part payment of delegates' expenses. This will serve as a fair index of the interest in the coming meeting which is being manifested throughout Illinois.

Through the state transportation leader, plans have been perfected, as in previous years for the care of Illinois delegates and all who wish to join them. Special train will leave Chicago via the Burlington at 10 p. m. Tuesday, June 27, arriving in St. Paul on Wednesday morning. Returning train for Chicago leaves St. Paul at 10:45 Sunday evening, July 2.

The trip has been planned on an "all expense" basis with an eye to comfort, convenience and economy. It will include all rail and Pullman transportation, meals en route, hotel room, convention registration fee, Osokie banquet, and sight-seeing trips—everything in fact except meals at St. Paul and personal incidentals—for the sum of $46 from Chicago; rates from other points in proportion.

Inasmuch as during the last four years over 1,000 of our Baptist young people have publicly dedicated themselves for life service at these conventions, and inasmuch as thousands have there received inspiration and training, it should be the endeavor of every church to send or help, send as many of their young people as possible.

By request, a post-convention-trip to Yellowstone Park has also been planned this year, and instead of returning to Chicago on July 2, those who wish may start for the West. Five glorious days are planned in the Park, entering at Gardiner and leaving by Cody Road. The "tribe" will then travel through Wind River Canyon (Wyoming) and Northern Colorado to Loveland, where motors will be taken for a day's ride through Rocky Mountain (Estes) Park and down to Denver.

The trip includes 250 miles of travel by motor and 2,700 miles by rail through country unsurpassed in its natural beauty, and terminates at Chicago, July 12. The cost of the entire vacation—from Chicago to Yellowstone via St. Paul and return—will be $166.50 per person.

Illinois extends a cordial invitation to delegates from other states to join them. Further information sent upon request. Make reservations through L. W. Kester, Park Ridge, Ill.

St. Paul Convention Rates

The various passenger associations whose authority embraces the entire convention territory, have granted to those attending the St. Paul Convention, for themselves and the immediate members of their families, the rates indicated below, under the following regulations:

From the Pacific Coast states, (the Trans-Continental Association) a rate has been authorized, slightly in excess of one fare for the round trip, permitting stop-overs at all points, both going and returning, within the final limits, selling dates May 25 to August 31, return limit October 31, 1922.

From all other associations, round trip tickets will be sold at one and one-half the regular one way rate, when the fare exceeds $1, by the ticket agent at each local station, upon presentation and surrender of an identification certificate. Parties planning to attend the convention should inquire of their local ticket agents dates of sale and final return limit. These tickets must be validated at St. Paul at the ticket office of the line over which the ticket reads into that city, which will be done upon presentation of the ticket. The same route must be taken on returning, which was used in going to St. Paul.

Passengers may leave to return, at any date within the final limit, but care must be taken to allow time to reach original starting place, not later than midnight of the last day.

Identification certificates may be procured from state transportation leaders or by application to the undersigned.

Religious Education

A Teacher's Americanization Work

By WILLIAM JAMES SLY

Few people realize how much the world owes Christian public school teachers in many phases of world service. A teacher in Willamina, Ore., recently wrote a letter telling of her experience among New Americans in her community. This letter will be of interest to Sunday school workers. She writes:

"I am a public school teacher and a Baptist. The need of reaching New Americans both socially and religiously has often impressed me deeply. Ten years ago when I came to Portland, Ore., from inland Kansas, I organized classes in English among foreigners, greatly to the horror of my cousin who said, 'Are you going to teach Japs?' It was months before I could win the confidence of my pupils sufficiently to get any of them to come to lessons. After that hard beginning, many wonderfully interesting pupils came and also many who were not so interesting, and others whose feelings had been hurt by the unsympathetic attitude of many native Americans towards them. I tried to supplement my English teaching work and make it still more effective by securing American homes in which my pupils might be entertained, and so become acquainted with the finer side of American life. For the same reason, I tried to persuade all I could to attend the Christian churches. Many went. Most of them on their return reported that very little attention was paid to them, and they became discouraged. A few, who were less timid and more persevering became church members. The Young Men's Christian Association also held night schools which many pupils attended. I found the peoples of northern Europe did not need help in learning English so much as others. All the northern peoples, except the Finns, easily picked up our language. The Finns found it very hard unless they had learned Swedish or German in their youth. The Norwegians, Danes and Swedes learned to read and speak very well in a few months, and some of them seemed to be able to make progress independently of a teacher.

"My attention was attracted to the condition of many Greek boys in our community because of their terrible associations. There seemed no places open to them, except degrading dance halls and debasing theaters. Thus the view they have of American life leads them to form strange ideas of us. My love for America and American ideals and institutions was often wounded when I saw the erroneous ideas these boys could not help but form. God save them, and have mercy on the inhospitable citizens who dwell in our hospitable land.

"In one school in which I taught a Greek boy lived with his father, a thrifty, industrious, respectable farmer. On the boy's return from camp (he did not go over seas), I incurred the wrath of some of my acquaintances by asking him to sing some war songs at our community singing evenings, and by asking him to recite a patriotic poem which he composed. In spite of this unsympathetic feeling against him, this young Greek was later elected assistant superintendent of our Sunday school, and today he is well thought of here in our village church. Thus the timely encouragement which a few of us gave him in his critical hours not only saved him from the neighborhood's ostracism, but helped him to rise to a place of honor and service that might well be coveted by any native American young man."

All honor to school teachers who after their arduous tasks in the public schools find time and strength to keep in touch with some of the useful ways of helping our country to solve one of its most perplexing questions—a question, however, that would not be so perplexing if each American citizen had the spirit of this school teacher.

Successful Church School of Missions

The First Baptist Church, Rome, N. Y., Rev. Ivan M. Rose, pastor, reports as follows:

"Five study classes met at 6:50 o'clock Sunday evening. These were followed by auditorium services at 7:45. The average attendance in the classes was sixty-eight, 90 per cent of which were of the adult and later teen age. At the four auditorium services there were 535 people. These were addressed by Rev. R. B. Longwell, Rev. C. S. Detweiler, and Dr. William Axling. The usual Sunday evening attendance has been between seventy and eighty-five.

"Our church people feel tremendously paid for the venture. It has been particularly pleasing to find that the New World Movement funds of the month have far exceeded those of any month since the inception of the movement, save, of course, the campaign month of May, 1920. As a creator of an urgent atmosphere, the school has been an abounding success. One of our very strongest men, who previously has been interested in New World Movement matters mostly from the financial side, praised the educational feature unstintedly. Many wanted us to continue the study weeks longer. Some of our outstanding people have been reading quite widely in reference and supplementary books. We feel without reservation that we have made such a success of the school as will make its recurrence desired.

The effects will last. For instance, we are to have a church committee on literature, through which a number of things are possible, such as workers' library for the church school, reading courses in missionary education, campaign in magazine subscriptions, and perhaps a church book table."

International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for May 21

HILKIAH'S GREAT DISCOVERY
2 Chronicles 34:14-33. Golden Text: Psalm 119:105

Prelude

Manasseh succeeded his father, Hezekiah, to the throne. His was an evil reign of fifty-five years. All that his father had done in destroying idols and evil ways, he undid. Amon, his son, followed Manasseh and was likewise evil, but after two years he was put to death by court officials and his son, the young Josiah, acceded to the throne. His reign was all that his father's and grandfather's had not been. It covered a period of thirty-one years, the calm between two wars of foreign invasion, and during that time he "wholly followed the Lord."

Lesson

During the work that was going on in the temple Hilkiah, the priest found the book of the law given by Moses, probably that part of the book of Deuteronomy, chapters 12 to 26 and 28, which is called the Book of the Covenant. Hilkiah gave the book to Shaphan the scribe (literally, "a man of the books") who carried it to King Josiah. After describing the progress of the work on the temple, Shaphan told of the discovery of the book and read it aloud. The young king was greatly troubled. "Great is God's wrath against us because our fathers have not done as this book commands!" he cried. Then he "sent and gathered together all the elders of Judah and Jerusalem. And the king went up to the house of Jehovah, and the men of Judah and the priests, and the Levites, and all the people, both great and small: and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant that was found in the house of Jehovah." At this meeting he had the people "stand to it" (probably a rising vote), and as long as the king lived they kept this covenant.

Leading Thoughts

1. Josiah made the treasures of the discovered book his own; he put into practice its teachings and a kingdom was revolutionized. 2. "The Bible is God's best gift to man"—Abraham Lincoln. 3. In how many homes is the Bible a lost or a buried book today? 4. An authority states that there are nearly 10,000,000 homes in the United States without a Bible.

Our Own Folks

The American Y. M. C. A. In Jerusalem

An American Y. M. C. A. secretary, Dr. A. C. Harte, has just come back from two years and more in Jerusalem. The news from Jerusalem deals so almost exclusively with Arabs and Jews that an American Y. M. C. A. in that city seems somewhat anomalous. An article written by a graduate of Beirut College and recently published in an Arab newspaper describes this association as it appeared before the war and as it was when Mr. Harte left for home:

"There was in Jerusalem before the war a Y. M. C. A. with a membership of fifty. It had weekly and monthly meetings and lectures. Most of the members belonged to the Protestant community. It had three small rooms furnished only with forty old chairs and an old organ. It owned about 150 books. There was no means of recreation save one game of trictrac. During the war the association was closed for fear of suspicion on the part of the Turkish government. After occupation by the British it was decided to reopen.

"Then Dr. Harte arrived and he began the task of building up the organization. First he found a better and more central location. There he put in all his energy and hope, and he succeeded in winning many members. Next he began the task of building up the library and reading room. Then his attention was turned to the refurnishing of the rooms.

"Now the chief points of our association are a modern scientific and literary library which contains more than 5,000 of the best English books and a number in French and Arabic; a reading room with more than forty magazines always on file; a special department for recreation and physical training. Dr. Harte put at the disposal of the members a piano, a billiard table, many indoor games, then started basket ball and football and is now planning two tennis courts.

"Evening classes in Arabic, English, French, book-keeping, stenography, typing and literary work have been started at very low cost to the students. Weekly lectures are also given by the best speakers in Palestine. Social evenings are held in the wooden hut which Dr. Harte secured and put up next to the association rooms. At present we have 350 members, including 45 Moslem and 30 Jewish young men. This membership includes some of the high officials of the government and the mayor of the city of Jerusalem."

The name of the Young Men's Christian Association, as it appears over the door of the "Y" in Jerusalem, is written in English and in Arabic, and should be in Hebrew also, since there are Jewish members. But here one strikes a difficulty not commonly understood by Gentiles. The word Christian is not permitted among the Jews, and to accord with their usage the sign would have to read, "The Young Men's Nazarene Association." The American secretary, when this problem was brought to him, replied cheerfully that that was a matter to be fought out in the West, if anywhere; that his business in Jerusalem was that of peacemaker, so they would have no sign in Hebrew, but all the Hebrew young men who chose to come would be welcome.

Naturally racial and religious prejudices are strong in Palestine. Jerusalem is divided into Mohammedan, Jewish and Christian quarters, and the dwellers in one district are not expected to invade another. The market-place alone has been neutral ground, and it is the hope of Mr. Harte that the Y. M. C. A. in its building in Jerusalem, its new station at Joppa, and its summer hostel at Ain Karin will prove more than neutral territory; that here may be found the beginnings of real understanding among all the different peoples gathered in the world's Holy Land. At a recent gathering at the association building Jews, Mohammedans and Christians sat side by side on the platform, and when a visitor asked how many peoples were represented in the gathering, those present were asked to answer each in his own tongue. Greetings were spoken in thirty-two languages.

Dr. Harte, a graduate of Wesleyan, before entering the foreign service of the Y. M. C. A., was secretary of the association at Mobile, Ala. Then he served at Coimbo, Ceylon, later becoming general secretary for the National Council of the Indian Y. M. C. A. with headquarters at Calcutta. During the war he represented the "Y" in the establishment of the work for prisoners of war on a neutral and reciprocal basis.

Changes in Department of Conventions and Conferences

The resignation of Dr. Hugh A. Heath, executive secretary of the Department of Conventions and Conferences, who went to Boston May 1 as general secretary of the Massachusetts Convention, is only one of the changes to take place in the department.

Mrs. L. Jesse P. Bishop, associate secretary, also presented her resignation at the recent meeting of the administrative committee, because of her generous desire to leave the department free for any future adjustment of plans, made necessary by the present financial crisis, and the necessity for reduction in the expenses of the General Board of Promotion.

Mrs. Bishop's resignation was laid upon the table, pending the presentation of the report of the special committee on organization and program for the next fiscal year. In the meantime, she will occupy the same position as at present in the department, that of associate secretary. Tribute to Mrs. Bishop's achievements in the department, her unflagging energy and loyalty, and the remarkable results brought about by her was paid by various members of the administrative committee.

Miss Lucinda M. Johnson, a field worker of the General Board of Promotion, who for the past year has been doing such excellent work as secretary in the Department of Conventions and Conferences, will return to her work on the field on May 1.

Southern California

By EDWARD P. BRAND

The writer has at this time spent two weeks in Southern California. He feels very favorably toward the Baptist work in this part of the country.

Easter was a great day in all our churches in and around Los Angeles. The Temple Theater holds 3,500 people. Dr. J. W. Brougher, the pastor, had the temple full at both services and hundreds were turned away. At the morning service he baptized forty-nine candidates. At the First Church, Dr. Francis had a crowded house, morning and evening, and had baptism at both services. Pastor Knights at Long Beach and Dr. Skevington at Hollywood, Mr. Parkmand and other pastors reported very encouraging work on Easter Day.

The Baptist Pastors' Conference in Los Angeles is well attended and the meetings are quite interesting. Dr. Harper, general superintendent for Southern California, gave a strong and helpful address April 9, and Rev. F. G. Davies gave a fine address on the boy problem April 16. The reports in the Pastors' Conference show the pastors and church to be very much interested in the great onward movement. The churches are planning to pay up in full their pledges and are also giving many thousands of dollars in new subscriptions. There seems to be almost entire harmony among the churches in Southern California on the great missionary campaign. There also seems to be a oneness and harmony on doctrinal positions. Every one whom I have heard preach or speak seems to be very conservative in his theology. So far as I have been able to learn, there is not a Baptist in Southern California who would question the resurrection of Jesus Christ, or his death or the inspiration and authority of the Scriptures. The people all seem to be Fundamentalists in doctrine, but I have found none who want to make a Fundamentalist party in the Baptist denomination. The people turn out in great numbers to hear the gospel preached in its simplicity and power.

There are five white English-speaking Baptist churches in San Diego. Four of them are small, but one, of which Rev. Frank D. Holden is pastor, has 1,200 members; 600 pupils are enrolled in the Sunday school and 500 were present on Easter. They have a very large church building and it is well filled on Sundays. I attended a very good prayer meeting in this church. The pastor asked all present from Illinois to hold up the hand. Perhaps a dozen or fifteen from Illinois responded in that prayer meeting.

Frost has done much damage to the fruit crop in California during the past winter and this spring. The cities of Los Angeles and San Diego are growing rapidly. The best advertised city, I think, in America is Los Angeles. It is growing very fast and everybody seems to be booming it. It, perhaps, has more than 600,000 people. Some of them claim more than 800,000 people. San Diego has an enrolled population of about 80,000, but there are at this time 20,000 navy men and marines and other government employes, besides an enormous number of tourists in the winter time.

A Great Year In a Great Church

The annual meeting of First Church, Minneapolis, occurred April 17. The reports rendered, following the election of officers, were the most enheartening the church has ever known. They showed a membership of 2,519; amount of money raised for all purposes during the year to April 1, $126,934.15. Subscriptions to the new buildings now amount to $411,656.53. The total resources of the church itself are $932,202.61; its liabilities reduce this to a net valuation of $889,587.61. The total valuation of the Northwestern Bible Training School resources, $280,028.01, making a grand total of values of $1,192,230.92. The estimates for the school property are extremely low; the real value is much larger.

Dr. Riley celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as pastor of this church March 1. When he went to the church it had a membership of 662, which was immediately reduced to 585. Its total annual receipts were $14,700, and its property value, $160,000.

Two great buildings will be erected during the year, one of them a three-story and high-basement building on a lot 112 by 147, providing class rooms and all up-to-date appointments for the conduct of a Sunday school numbering 5,000. This same building will contain also offices for the varied forms of church work; and office, class rooms and reception rooms for the Northwestern Bible Training School work.

Dr. Riley has a present salaried force of assistants, in church and school, of twelve. The latest accession to the force is O. L. Stixrood, engaged now as salaried superintendent of the Sunday school. He is one of Minneapolis' best young business men and has already proved himself a Sunday school expert.

The plans for the auditorium, which will seat 3,000 people, and this up-to-date Sunday-school building, are complete and the contracts will be let within a few days.

Seventy-fifth Anniversary Logansport, Ind.

As early as 1830 the Baptists organized a church at Logansport, Ind., and work has been carried on continuously ever since that date. But the original church did not live over twenty years, when the Second Church, which had arisen as a protest against slack discipline and lack of denominational cooperation, fell heir to its property and its field. From April 4, 1847, to the present this later body has continued to labor successfully until a strong church has resulted. The seventy-fifth anniversary of its founding has just been celebrated.

The growth of the organization has been gradual but notable. Its charter membership consisted of twelve men and women. It now has 800 members. In the beginning its Sunday school had only two classes, one for children and one for adults, but it now has over forty classes and an enrolment of 775. Three houses of worship have been erected. The earliest one was a little frame church with almost no equipment and was built entirely by donated labor and material. The second one was a commodious structure for those days, and served the community well for more than half a century. The new building is a great working plant with all modern equipment and is practically free from indebtedness.

Several leaders have stood out in the progressive history of the church. Among the laymen, the name of E. S. Rice, composer of the hymn, "Shall We Meet Beyond the River," is easily first. He directed the music for sixty years, was secretary of the church school for a like term, and was the financial strength of the church for half a century. His liberal giving and great vision made possible the venture to build the present church plant. Pastors have been uniformly excellent. Not one has ever been asked or pressed to resign, all have been beloved and capable men. Three stand out for long pastorates, Dr. Silas Tucker, 1860-1871; Dr. H. L. Stetson, 1878-1887; Dr. F. E. Huckleberry, 1895-1905. These men did noble work in solidifying and strengthening the structure of the church. Dr. J. F. Fraser was the leader in the building of the new church and also in the period of transition from the stolid march of indifference to the quick step of a new vision which has led the church to grow faster in the last decade than in any other period of its history. Dr. E. L. Dakin was also a strong factor in modernizing and popularizing it in the community.

During the week of April 2 to April 9, programs of reminiscence, of challenge and of inspiration were given on Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday respectively. Dr. F. M. Huckleberry, now of Franklin, Ind., gave the historic address on Tuesday. On Thursday Dr. C. M. Dinsmore of Indianapolis made a masterly address surveying the challenge to Baptists and to the Logansport Church. Sunday, Dr. J. F. Fraser, of Louisville, preached morning and evening on "Faith and Fidelity" and "The House of God." Great crowds came and inspiration for future work and growth resulted. The present pastor, Rev. M. C. Tunison, edited a beautiful anniversary book with a good historical sketch and more than thirty pictures of former pastors and leaders, church buildings, and scenes and groups of all present boards and organized classes.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN

Rev. Lawrence Kelly, associate pastor at First, is "carrying on" very acceptably since Dr. Villers left us, with supplies every other week. Evening congregations and Bible school are increasing. Several choice young men have recently come for confession and baptism. The Philathea class, Mrs. W. H. Dorrance, teacher, stands at the head for pledges to the Continuation Campaign in the city and state. In addition the class is raising a scholarship fund as a memorial to Miss Esther Dorrance who passed on to glory one year ago.

Woodward Avenue was compelled to turn people away at all services on Easter. Baptism at three services. During the past two weeks sixty have been received for baptism. Dr. J. W. Hoag has built up a wonderful organization to aid in the varied problems of a great down-town church.

Warren Avenue had its greatest day on Easter. There were 350 in Sunday school and fifteen were baptized. Pastor Bowyer is doing a fine work.

Jefferson Avenue was full to overflowing at every service on Easter. There were thirty-five baptized. Already this congregation is talking about the need for the great auditorium which is yet to come. The church will entertain the annual meeting of the Detroit Union.

Highland Park has continued along its aggressive evangelistic way. During the year 137 have been received, of which sixty came by baptism, five on Easter. Never has the church seen such crowds. The Sunday school has recently outclassed the First Church in attendance.

Temple had 1,192 in Sunday school on Easter. No wonder they are demanding a church house adjoining. There were seventy-five received by the church during Passion week. Pastor Brown is leading a victorious host.

Hudson Avenue has not forgotten the supreme purpose during the anxieties of starting a big building enterprise. Four were baptized on Easter with thirteen recent accessions by baptism. A consecration service on the new site, Grand River and Clarendon Avenue, will be held Sunday afternoon at 3:30. Pastor White is proving himself a wise and aggressive leader.

Springwells is taking on new life week by week. Recently twenty-five have been received. On Easter 430 were in attendance in the Sunday School.

Immanuel has had a splendid year with constant accessions. On Easter five were received by baptism.

Redford will long remember Easter, 1922. There were six received by baptism, among which were the mayor, a banker and other leading men. The new auditorium for this growing church will be built this present year.

Wyandotte has prospered so signally the past year that a full time pastor is to be called. Rev. W. B. F. Brown who has served this church so faithfully has won the respect of the church and community.

Beulah has had baptism every Sunday for two months with seventeen coming on Easter. It was a great day in every way. Rev. James S. West has done a wonderful work since becoming pastor of beautiful Beulah.

Birkett Memorial has been crowding the walls of its fine edifice. During the past six weeks twelve have been baptized, four coming on Easter.

At River Rouge as the result of special meetings led by Rev. H. H. Ford thirty-six made decisions and twenty-one have already been baptized. Rev. H. C. Wedel, pastor, reports a very prosperous year.

Stanton Park: Church membership has increased 40 per cent since January 1, and of these 72 per cent were adults. Pastor Waechter has enlisted the membership in a calling campaign which reached 500. Easter was a great day in attendance and in every other way.

Monier: This mission has been organized into a church. It is expected there will be thirty members by letter, experience and baptism inside a month. There is a wonderful future before this new Grand River Avenue church.

St. Clair Heights, formerly Calvary: A new house of worship on Hurlburt Avenue, just off East Warren Avenue, is on the schedule for this year. For the quarter nine were baptized and the Bible school greatly overcrowding the present house of worship.

Conley Memorial: Pastor Shaw reports fourteen baptisms and increasing Bible school and congregations. A mission Sunday school is sustained.

Bethel, Royal Oak, is steadily growing in numbers and spiritual power. There were eighteen baptisms of late. Others will follow.

Farmington, one of our oldest Michigan churches, now in the area of the Detroit Union, but which has been closed for some time, has been reopened by Rev. H. H. Ford. Three were baptized Easter day. This will yet be a good church as Farmington promises to be one of Detroit's choicest suburbs.

Among our foreign-speaking churches and missions the past quarter has been a gracious time. The period of unemployment is fast passing, while the spiritual tide is rising. Here are a few figures on baptisms: Italian, eight; First Hungarian, two; Serbo-Croatian, two; First Polish, twenty; First German, fourteen were baptized and a great missionary collection taken. The Easter attendance overflowed the church. Ebenezer, German, had a great day Easter when $1,400 was given for missionary purposes.

These reports cover only a portion of our churches and missions, but they convey some idea of the fine spirit of evangelism that is universal among the churches. Never has there been evidenced a greater growth in all departments of church work, especially in the Sunday schools. The great Sunday School Institute held in Detroit last fall has certainly borne rich fruitage. Several points of new advance work must be taken up very soon.

Chairman Holmer, of the promotion committee of the St. Paul Convention B. Y. P. U. A., was in the city this week to meet the presidents of our local B. Y. P. U. and as a consequence the number going to St.

Paul in June has been largely increased.

Rev. George W. Bates, former pastor of the Clinton Avenue Church, has accepted the call of the Riverside Church, Toledo, Ohio, and is already on his new field. He will continue his services as transportation leader for Michigan for the St. Paul Convention.

From May 1, 1922, the office of the Detroit Union will be in suite No. 325, Ford Building. The business of the union has so grown in volume that increased quarters and a large vault have become necessary. Six new churches are either under way or already planned for this year, under the auspices of the union.

PROSPECT PARK CHURCH, BROOKLYN, reports the largest crowds on Easter Sunday in its history. At the evening service thirteen were baptized. Monday evening following Easter, Sunday school and the ladies' auxiliary gave a reception to Pastor and Mrs. C. E. Morris in recognition of their sixth anniversary. Mrs. Morris was presented with a beautiful bouquet of carnations and the pastor received a steel filing cabinet, gifts from the Sunday school. In six years the active membership has been doubled and the gifts to missions increased 1,300 per cent. Pastor Morris came direct from his graduation at Newton Seminary to this field.

THE ANNUAL CANVASS at Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, had for its budget a total of $81,000 for current expenses and benevolences, in addition to $20,000 pledged on the building fund for the year for May 1, 1922. Of the $81,000, $52,000 was for benevolence, the balance for current expenses. Before the church year began, by an every-member canvass, both budgets were oversubscribed, the benevolent budget going over the top by $4,000 to $5,000. The current expense budget followed with approximately $1,000 oversubscribed. The continuation campaign, especially for the New World Movement, netted approximately $2,000 raised for that, in addition to the extra pledges taken for the New World Movement work for this next year. Much of the additional will be designated for aggressive local work among the weaker Baptist churches of Rochester. The membership of the church is now over 2,200, 123 having been baptized this year.

NEW JERSEY

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the First Church, Bayonne, N. J., C. H. Rannels, pastor, was held April 19. All the reports showed constructive progress, thirty-two new members were received during the year, twenty-two by baptism. The church has no debts, but has a balance in the treasury. Five were baptized Easter Sunday.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

At the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Baptist Brotherhood, held Monday, April 17, plans were formulated for the annual spring rally to be held on Thursday, May 4, at 6:30 p. m., at the First Baptist Church, Pittsburgh. The speaker for the evening and the guest of honor is Rev. C. Wallace Petty, the pastor of First Church, his subject being "The Code of a Comrade." Dr. Petty began his work with First Church on Easter Sunday. The event will take the form of an informal reception by the Baptist leaders to Dr. and Mrs. Petty. The luncheon is open to ladies, and will be largely attended.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

OLNEY CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA, has witnessed many changes for the good of the kingdom since the coming of Rev. P. V. Slawter as pastor last October. Immediately it was necessary to make room for increasing membership of Sunday school and church. A large addition was put on the church building and a splendid basement made for social occasions and the pastor's large class of men. Over fifty new members have been added to the church since last November, eighteen of whom were baptized on Easter Sunday, which was one of the biggest services ever held in the church.

MAINE

CANTON: Pastor F. M. Lamb who, by agreement with his church, spends part of every year in general work as singing and preaching evangelist, has returned from a successful series of meetings with Dr. W. R. Wood of Haverhill, Mass. Dr. Wood will receive many new members. At the Easter concert in Canton 170 persons were present.

SOUTH BERWICK: Rev. E. A. Elwell has resigned the pastorate of the South Berwick Church and will go to the West Medford Church, Medford, Mass. During the two years of Mr. Elwell's pastorate at South Berwick, great throngs have attended the services and the church edifice has been repaired at large expense.

WATERTOWN: Rev. Walter Quarrington, pastor: Easter morning there was baptism of young people and of older ones in the evening, about twenty persons being baptized. The women have now carried their Continuation Campaign beyond the $1,000 mark.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

AT THE FIRST CHURCH, Manchester, Rev. C. P. MacGregor, pastor, 58 in all were baptized on Easter at the morning, Sunday school and evening services. This large ingathering was a result of recent church evangelism conducted by the pastor.

REV. H. R. WHITELOCK, pastor of the Peoples' Baptist Tabernacle, Manchester, baptized fourteen Easter Sunday as a result of recent meetings. Easter baptisms are also reported at Franklin, Alton, First Church, Concord, Rochester. The pageant "Dawning Light" was given with marked success at the Pleasant Street Baptist Church, Concord.

THE REGULAR MEETING OF THE convention board was held April 11. Money was appropriated for the holding of a pastors' retreat at the Colby Academy, New London. This conference of pastors is being planned for July 5-7.

VERMONT

REV. E. WEBBER CHURCH, pastor at North Troy, recently received three by baptism and expects a goodly number on Easter Sunday. April 18, he went to Wallingford to assist Rev. Dirk van Der Voet in special meetings for two weeks.

FIRST CHURCH, BENNINGTON, Rev. William G. Towart, pastor, has sustained serious loss by the death of Dr. F. S. Pratt, who for 27 years was treasurer of the church and for a long time deacon and one of the most faithful workers and generous givers. Dr. Pratt some years ago gave up the practice of medicine and became interested in the Rockwood Woolen Mills. He had the ability to make money and also the heart and hand to give, so every good cause will sorely miss him.

CONNECTICUT

THE BAPTIST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE of the New Haven Association met in Immanuel Church April 17, Rev. John B. Pharr, pastor. Dean Charles R. Brown, of the Yale Divinity School, delivered an address on "Christian Science." Dean Brown could speak intelligently and with a first-hand knowledge of facts relative to this cult, as he spent considerable time in Boston, studying the tenets of Christian Science.

Mississippi Valley

MICHIGAN

FIRST CHURCH, PONTIAC, held two weeks of meetings, closing Easter, in which the church was much blessed. At the Easter services the church was so crowded that people were forced to stand both on the main floor and in the balcony. The pastor, Rev. C. S. Knight, baptized twenty-three candidates and preached two appreciated sermons.

ON EASTER SUNDAY, Rev. Geo. Woolcock, pastor of Ovid Church, baptized seventeen who made a public profession of their faith in Christ during the Littrell and Moody Revival Campaign. Others will follow soon. The church was greatly refreshed and the whole community stirred by the wholesome messages of these young evangelists.

WISCONSIN

STEVENS POINT: Evangelist Linden of Madison helped in a three weeks' series of meetings. Thirty came into the church on Easter Sunday as a result. There is a 300 Bible school. The Easter offering was given for a new schoolroom. This is a growing church in a live city, the pastor, Rev. James Blake, came seventeen years ago and has a call to stay five years more.

PASTOR STEPHENS, EVANSVILLE Church had the joy of baptizing eight persons Good Friday evening. Easter morning ten received the hand of fellowship in the presence of a large congregation.

MINNESOTA

THE COMING OF DR. ALLYN K. FOSTER to Carleton College was a very real event in the religious life of the student body. His addresses, group conferences and personal interviews gave hope, vitality and right of way to the religious interests of our most thoughtful young people. While it is very generally known that the theology of childhood will not usually square with the facts of science as confronted in college courses we have been slow in attacking the problem directly and fearlessly with the student group itself. This is what Dr. Foster does and with superb success.

KANSAS

FIRST CHURCH OF LYONS decided at its last business meeting to build a new church house costing $10,000 and well equipped for Sunday school needs. The work will begin not later than June 1, under the leadership of Rev. S. L. Busford.

IOWA

PASTOR G. W. FOGG, of Corydon, baptized two candidates on Easter Sunday. There have been nineteen additions to the church since its report last fall. The pastor held a special service on Good Friday. Preaching upon great themes of the Christian faith has lately attracted much interest on the part of outsiders.

NORTH DAKOTA

GRAND FORKS: The annual business meeting was held on Wednesday evening, April 19. The church had met all its financial obligations with a margin left over. The total expenditures for current expenses and benevolences were $13,400. The treasurer of each of the auxiliary organizations reported a balance on hand. The ladies had raised over $1,300 for missions and other purposes. The Bible school and young people's organizations have been very active. There are three W. W. G. organizations, a Children's World Crusaders, and a troop of Boy Scouts. This church will entertain the State Convention June 1 to 5. It also sends its pastor to the N. B. C. at Indianapolis. A committee of laymen worked to have all pledges to the N. W. M. paid up by April 30. This church subscribed $1,670 over its quota, $35,000. The present membership is 467. The pastor baptized six on a recent Sunday evening. There are more ready to be received for baptism. A committee is now at work on a thorough revision of the church by-laws.

REV. R. W. HOBBS, First Church, Fargo, baptized five on Easter Sunday.

REV. L. R. JOHNSON, First Church, Bismarck, baptized four candidates Sunday following Easter.

EASTER SUNDAY SERVICES at First Church of Ironton were started off at 9 a. m. with a record-breaking attendance in the Bible school, 367 being present, sixty-five of whom were in the men's Bible class. The Bible school was followed by the regular morning worship, which was largely attended. At the evening service twenty-one were baptized, making a total of seventy-eight additions to the church since the coming of Rev. M. A. Summers as pastor seven months ago.

IMMANUEL CHURCH, Portsmouth, had a record attendance at sunrise prayer meeting on Easter, 249 at Sunday school, which is only nine less than record attendance. Baptized two in the afternoon and welcomed five adults into church membership in the evening.

MRS. MARY ANN SIBLEY, a member of the Amboy Church died on March 27. Funeral services were held from the church, Rev. H. A. Thompson officiating.

EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS at First Church, Newcomerstown, with Pastor H. C. Fletcher preaching, are continuing in the fifth week. Forty-two have manifested a desire to live a Christian life, thirty-six of whom have united with the church.

GIBBARD AVENUE, Columbus, Rev. Chas. Bebb, pastor, baptized four candidates Easter Sunday. Ten others have been approved for baptism. Seven were received by letter and one by experience recently. The Sunday school reached the high mark of its history on Easter.

AT THE CLOSE OF TWO WEEKS of meetings, conducted by Rev. B. B. Crimm, the cowboy evangelist of the South, Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, received on Easter Sunday 110 new members, nearly sixty of these having been baptized by the pastor, Dr. W. W. Bustard, at the morning service. This is the second time within four months that over 100 people have been received at one time. Dr. Bustard brought Mr.

Grimm north for the first time in his evangelistic career.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIX have united with First Church, Canton, since May 1, 1921, fifty-two having been baptized as a direct result of the meetings held recently, with Rev. Dan F. Rittenhouse as the evangelist for ten days, and Dr. H. F. Stillwell for two days. Sixty-nine have united with the church as the direct results of this meeting. This has been the best year that the pastor has had as a minister. The Bible school is in a flourishing condition, having average attendance of over 600 during April. It looks now as though financially the church would equal the record of the year previous.

REV. WALTER B. HILTON, of Linden, N. Y., preached at Oberlin April 11, and the church has asked him to make another date in the near future. April 16 the choir rendered a cantata and Mrs. Edna R. Hubbard discussed "Why the Thank Offering." The church is going forward with its various lines of work even though pastorless.

ILLINOIS

FIRST CHURCH, GIRARD: Rev. Jesse R. Hastings has been pastor for three years, during which time 100 members have been received into the church, seventy of them by baptism. The church has grown in every department and the Sunday school nearly doubled in membership. Last year the church building was remodeled and this year was finished free from debt.

ON EASTER SUNDAY, at Dekalb, a white rose was placed on the Cradle Roll for a little life which had ended at the close of one year. The next Sunday, the baby's father brought Harold's birthday offering for missions, all that had been in his bank.

REV. T. M. PORTER began work at Edgewood Church, Rock Island, March 26. He also serves at Andalusia. There were six baptisms at the Edgewood Church on Easter.

EVANGELIST F. M. DUNK, of Normal, state evangelist, has concluded two weeks of meetings at First Church, Jacksonville, Rev. A. P. Howells, pastor. There were thirty-nine decisions, twenty-one were baptized on Easter Sunday and four received by letter. Others will be baptized later.

FIRST CHURCH, SAN DIEGO, Rev. F. O. Belden, pastor, on Easter Sunday received into its membership by baptism twenty persons, mainly young people. The church on that day raised about $3,400 as a special offering to missions, over and above their former pledges. This church recently elected nine deaconesses, and adopted by-laws prohibiting their trustees and deacons and deaconesses from succeeding themselves in office.

FIRST CHURCH, FRESNO: There are seventeen life-work recruits in our intermediate and senior B. Y. P. U. Two sophomore students at Fresno State College will be licensed by the church for the ministry soon. A large delegation will be sent from the young people to the B. Y. P. U. Assembly at Asilomar July 21-31. One hundred and sixty-two new members were welcomed during the associational year, fifty-three by baptism; present membership 912. The Bible School is in a drive for an attendance of 600. Pastor J. F. Mills recently returned from First Church of Sacramento, where he conducted services two weeks, a part of the state plan of evangelism; fifty made a confession of Jesus as their Saviour. He speaks on "Church Architecture" at the San Joaquin Valley Association, May 9th, and will preach the annual sermon at the state convention at Chico.

AFTER A SIX MONTHS' SOJOURN in Los Angeles Rev. C. G. Roadarmel, who left Valparaiso, Ind., two years ago because of poor health, recovered sufficiently to accept a call to the Inglewood Church. He is closing his first year and has been called to continue another year before returning to Indiana. Between forty and fifty have been received into the church, half of them by baptism. At the last quarterly business meeting the treasurer reported all bills paid and $250 in bank. This little church pays promptly its $500 annual subscription to the New World Movement. Recently an aged woman bequeathed to the church, property and money amounting to some $6,000. As soon as the property can be sold at good advantage a new auditorium will be added to the present Sunday-school chapel.

COLORADO WOMAN'S COLLEGE

DENVER, COLORADO

Colorado Woman's College is but twelve years old.

It has graduated from the Preparatory group 156 students, from the Fine Arts group 119, and from the Liberal Arts group 137.

It finds its chief justification in its contribution to the training of young women for intelligent, Christian home-making. Through this service the College is rooting itself in the life of the denomination.

Colorado Woman's College conceives it to be its task not only to train in a general way but to train specifically for Christian conviction and purpose as dominant and controlling factors in the life of all the young women who present themselves for training.

lows: Oakland's average attendance for January-February 305; three weeks of the contest show total attendance 1,393 or 52 per cent increase; average per cent of attendance to enrolment for the three weeks shows Oakland 77.6 per cent; Easter Sunday attendance, 560 or 93.6 per cent increase. Los Angeles' average attendance for January-February, 547; three weeks total attendance, 2088 or 27 per cent increase; average per cent of attendance to enrolment for the three weeks shows Los Angeles 79.9 per cent; Easter Sunday attendance was 762 or 39.3 per cent increase. In other words Oakland School is ahead to date in this contest. Los Angeles is in to win and has decided to stay with it on a steady gait of increase. Brother E. C. Lyon, president of the Lyon Fire Proof Warehouse Co., a member of the Oakland Church, has contributed a loving cup to be presented to the winning school.

DR. FRANKLIN W. SWIFT of Rochelle, Ill., has closed a series of evangelistic meetings on the Pacific Coast with First Church of Bellingham, Wash., where there were over 100 conversions, many of whom have already signified their desire for baptism and church membership. Dr. Swift is now with First Church, Loveland, Colo., where the campaign has opened with enthusiasm.

Summer Conferences

Five Baptist summer conferences will be conducted within New York State under Baptist auspices during the summer of 1922.

The summer session of Keuka College, July and through August 12, will give major emphasis to religious education and training for Christian leadership for young women.

The Baptist Pastors' Summer School meets at Cook Academy, July 10-22. This school is conducted by the Rural Church Commission of the Baptist Convention of the state, cooperating with the American Baptist Home Mission Society. A strong faculty has been secured.

The World Wide Guild House Party meets at Keuka College, August 14-20.

The Baptist Pastors' Summer Conference, for pastors and their wives and families, meets at Keuka College, Aug. 21-27.

The Summer Assembly of the Baptist Young People's Convention of New York

meets at Cook Academy, August 7-13.

Detailed information concerning each of these schools will appear in due time. Denominational loyalty is fostered by attending Baptist summer conferences. The denominational program will be emphasized. All lines of church work, majoring with the Sunday school, will be amply treated in the lectures and classes. Good tables, fellowship, recreation, inspiration, —all these and spiritual quickening are assured. Strong Bible courses feature each gathering. Every church should be represented by delegations.

Obituary

ELIZABETH J. BARSS

Mrs. Elizabeth J. Barss, of Wolfville, Nova Scotia, died at Ann Arbor, Mich., April 13, in the sixty-eighth year of her life. Mrs. Barss was born in England, came to this country in childhood, and lived for many years in Rochester, N. Y., where she joined the East Avenue Baptist Church under the pastorate of the late Dr. Henry L. Morehouse. In 1891 she married Rev. J. Howard Barss, Wolfville, Nova Scotia. She was a woman of sterling character, cheerfully filling her place in life, and always engaged in good works in the church and community. She was a sister of the late Andrew J. Townson of Rochester, N. Y. She is survived by her husband, her son, J. Ernest Barss, a student of medicine in the University of Michigan, by her two sisters, Miss Margaret Townson, of Los Angeles, California, and Mrs. Ernest D. Burton of Chicago, and by her brother, John J. Townson, of Carlisle, England.

Thomasine Allen, missionary in Sendai, Japan, writes, "Obara San was just in, and I asked her if she wanted to send a message to you all. She said, 'Tell them that even though America and Japan are far apart, yet we who worship God are all one family.'"

Your Boy and Girl, by A. T. Jamison. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.25 net.

There are many books on the study of the child and one sometimes gets lost among them. And yet parents generally welcome a volume in simple, untechnical language which tells them the things they want to know. Dr. Jamison has for more than twenty-five years had the oversight of a large institution for the care and training of boys and girls. He has been successful. In this volume he tells parents who realize the failure of old methods what the new psychology has to suggest to them. The book is copyrighted by the Sunday School Board of the Southern Baptist Convention.

The Bible for School and Home. Vol. 1. Genesis, by J. Paterson Smyth. Geo. H. Doran Co.

The first volume in a series of simple commentaries prepared expressly for use in the week-day church school, the Sunday school and the home. Excellent for teachers who wish to give young people an intelligent idea of Genesis and its lessons. The book will be a revelation to those who think that only in the hands of those who hold traditional views of the first book of the Bible can its teachings be made religiously powerful.

Sermons for Special Days, by Frederick D. Kershner. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.25 net.

Every pastor is called upon to prepare sermons and addresses for special occasions. He also must follow in some degree the church year. Suggestions regarding topics and treatments which have proved popular on such occasions are always valuable. This is what is provided here. The able professor of Christian doctrine in Drake University has given us twenty-one of his best. The sermons are logical, suggestive and with a fine literary finish.

BEWARE OF THE "FAKERS"

A physician must possess a diploma, a minister must be ordained by his church, a lawyer must be admitted to the bar and have a state license to practice. Any one of these men may not be any too good even if he is holding these insignia of his having passed certain tests. But at any rate he has some of the qualifications for the pursuit of his calling.

Now as to the organist: Any blacksmith or sign painter who has taken a term of lessons can call himself an organist and the world does not seem to care. The welfare of people's bodies and their business is not involved and they train their ears to be patient when it comes to the matter of music.

Sometimes the gullibility of church authorities is something to make one weep. A favorite form of appeal to them is to describe yourself as a great organist from some foreign country—one of the world wonders from somewhere or other in Europe. The great success of such men as Bonnet, Yon, Courboin, Dupre, has shown the "fakers" the way. Their fees on paper are very high and their advertising matter is most flattering to themselves and their alleged abilities. But their prices are very flexible, it appears on examination, and their desire to be generous leads them to play for a very small fraction of what they ask at first. The public comes, sometimes in droves, and goes away more firmly convinced than ever that an organ recital is not much on which to waste an evening.

Of course it is not easy to devise a cure for frauds in the organ world any more than elsewhere. The "Ponzis" will continue to gather in their money. But one word of advice to churches may not be amiss. Do not engage a concert organist without at least consulting your regular organist and ascertaining to your own satisfaction that the itinerant, no matter how highly he rates himself, really is a man worth admitting to your church and to your organ bench.—The Diapason.

CLIPPINGS

William Herbert Bush drew a crowded church for a Bach program which he presented at the First Baptist Church of New London, Conn., in February at an evening service. Mr. Bush had the assistance of violin, piano and vocal soloists and himself played three of the great works of Bach.

Dr. Ray Hastings has completed ten years of uninterrupted service as organist of the Temple Baptist Church of Los Angeles. The Temple Herald, bulletin of this large church, refers to the anniversary on its front page and also reproduces a likeness of Dr. Hastings. This church is known from ocean to ocean and the Herald calls attention to the fact that its organist is also known across the continent.

Mrs. George Forsyth has resigned her position at St. Paul's Cathedral, Oklahoma City, to accept that of organist of the First Baptist Church. She began her new duties Jan. 22. The First Baptist Church has a fine four-manual organ built by the Bennett Company. On the evening of Jan. 29 the choir of the church sang Dubois' "The Seven Last Words," with Mrs. Forsyth at the organ.

The Berean Baptist Church of Chicago, Dearborn and Fifty-second Streets, dedicated its new organ late in February with a genuine festival of music. The exercises were under the direction of Isaac T. Yarbrough, director of music, and Miss Estelle C. Bond, the organist. The organ was built by M. P. Moller and replaces the one destroyed by fire last June. It is a fine two-manual of eighteen speaking stops. It stands in a special chamber above the choir gallery and the console is detached. Monday evening, Feb. 27, the Berean choir of sixty voices sang and Walter E. Gossette gave groups of organ selections. Gounod's "Gallia" and Gaul's "Holy City" were presented by the choir. On Feb. 28 the program was given by the Providence Philharmonic Society, Albert H. Jones, director, and Mrs. Juliet K. Cameron at the organ.

MUSIC REVIEW

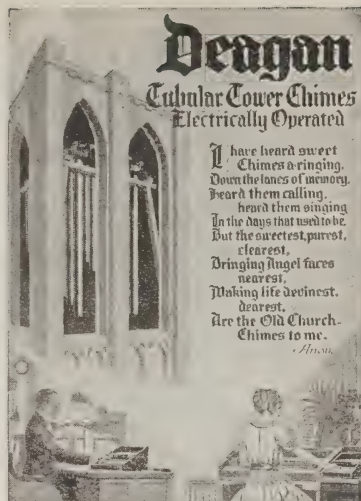

From J. Fischer & Bro., New York.

God Hath Sent His Angels,
H. Brooks Day.....($0.15)
Come Unto Him, James P. Dunn.....($0.12)
How Lovely are Thy Dwellings,
Rhys-Herbert.....($0.15)
Words of Joy, Rhys-Herbert.....($0.12)
In the Meadow, William Lester.....($0.15)

The first four titles listed are interesting anthems for choruses of mixed voices, of moderate degree of difficulty, devotional in character, and of a good grade, musically considered. The number by Day is a massive chorale-like chorus, best fitted for festival occasions. The second and third titles are quieter in mood and more sustained in tone, just the attractive, colorful prayer-like offertory numbers to afford the proper starting point for the sermon. The last Rhys-Herbert anthem is another joyful massive composition, virile with the feeling of evangelical faith.

Of a different type is the chorus by the editor of this page. It is a lilting waltz movement—another version of a chorus originally set for two-part chorus of women's voices, and issued in that form some few months back. Encouraged by the evident success of the part-song in this latter form, the publisher has now met a declared demand by setting forth a version for chorus of mixed voices. The music is of no degree of difficulty to set it outside the repertoire of the average chorus choir, it is effective, with attractive melodic swing, and appealing sentiment. A good number for the spring choir concert!

The study of music always pays—not perhaps in actual money returns; but in something beyond money value—the development of the artistic sense and appreciation of the individual.

Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes Electrically Operated

I have heard sweet
Chimes a-ringing,
O'er the lanes of memory,
Hear them calling,
Hear them singing
In the days that used to be,
But the sweetest, purest,
Clearest,
Bringing angel faces
Nearest,
Making life divinest,
Dearest,
Are the Old Church
Chimes to me.

Tower Chimes are the Memorial Sublime

Their location becomes a landmark: the sublimity of their music is in harmony with man's feelings of reverence—an outpouring of musical solemnity and worship.

Just the mere touch of a finger upon the electric keyboard in the organist's console, or the minister's study, brings forth the full power of the magnificent, sweet yet sonorous tones of Deagan Chimes.

What more fitting memorial, what greater philanthropy could be bestowed upon any community than the installation of a set of Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes? May we send you more complete information?

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

THE new building of the Park Avenue Church, formerly Fifth Avenue, is situated at 593 Park Avenue, New York City. It is Gothic in design. Its plan places the rooms for the various departments one above the other, thus conserving space and at the same time offering greater facility for church activities. The main church auditorium occupies the street floor.

Fresh from the Field

On May 6 representatives of the Federal Council presented to President Harding and Secretary Hughes a memorandum urging that the United States become a member of the Permanent Court of International Justice. It is said that forty-five states have already become members and supporters of the Court, of which eighteen nations have indicated their acceptance of the jurisdiction of the Court as "obligatory in any or all of the four legal categories enumerated."

A letter just received from Rev. F. W. Harding, missionary of the Foreign Society at Tura, Assam, reports that on his field 932 converts were baptized during the current year 1921. This is the largest number in a single year in the history of that field. When it is remembered that this field is in the midst of the hill country of Assam and the population is composed mostly of wild hill tribes, this evangelistic achievement is most remarkable.

A shakeup of the boards and organizations of the Presbyterian Church is predicted for the meeting of the General Assembly which opens in Des Moines, Iowa, May 18. The report of the committee on reorganization will provide for the creation of a general council of twenty-seven members, with a full time paid chairman, who will hold office for five years. The general council, which will be the general assembly ad interim, in addition to the paid chairman, will be composed of the stated clerk of the general assembly, the moderator of the general assembly, the retiring moderator of the general assembly and his predecessor, one representative chosen by the boards from each of the four newly organized boards of the church, and eighteen members, representing the entire church at large. The chairman of the council will be the highest paid official in the church. It is further expected that the sixteen boards and organizations now functioning will be reduced to four. Certain of these departments may be located "where it is deemed best," and some seem to think that Chicago will be in line to obtain one or more.

Mrs. C. H. Tilden, missionary at Jorhat, Assam, in speaking of her cook, a Mohammedan, who is to be baptized soon, writes "It is very hard for Mohammedans to become Christians. Their relatives will go to any length to prevent it, and they are severely persecuted. Our cook has some property in another part of India, but he told me the other day that he was not going home because he was afraid that his people would compel him to stay. He says he will forget the money, and his old religion, and customs, and remember only Christian things."

W. P. Lovett, of Detroit, in addition to his duties as director of the Detroit Citizens League, has been waging for the past year the Michigan state campaign for reorganization of county government, a proposal with law enforcement angles in harmony with the general anti-saloon movement. An amendment to the state constitution is the present objective, to be secured by initiatory petitions. For the past two years Mr. Lovett has been president of the National Association of Civic Secretaries, cultivating civic and moral influence among good citizens, especially Christian voters, throughout the country. He writes that there never was a time in American history when it was so essential as today for Christian forces to stand together in organizations for good government, civic righteousness, international peace, and practical cultivation of brotherhood in the industrial field. He is in the field much of his time delivering lectures and addresses on these topics, and organizing local voters' leagues.

Raymond Robins has been chosen to deliver the commencement address at Franklin College. Mr. Robins is one of the most versatile men in the public eye. He was temporary and permanent chairman of the national convention of the Progressive Party in 1916. He has been an arbiter in many industrial disputes. The commencement address will be at 10 a. m. on Tuesday, June 6.

The Utah Gospel Mission, of Cleveland, Ohio, has begun the publication of an eight-page paper called "Light on Mormonism." Published quarterly, the price for an annual subscription is twenty-five cents, or seven copies are sent for a year to one address for a dollar. It is as rational a publication on Mormon matters as we have seen.

His Mother's Version

A BIBLE-CLASS teacher was telling of the various translations of the Bible and their different excellencies.

"I think I prefer the King James version," he said; "though the revised is more scholarly."

His friend smiled. "I prefer my mother's translation of the Bible to any other version," he said. "My mother has translated the Bible into the language of daily life for me ever since I was old enough to understand it. She translates it straight, too, and gives its full meaning. There has never been any obscurity about her version. Whatever printed version of the Bible I may study, my mother's is always the one that clears up my difficulties."

Representatives of sixteen denominations of the Chicago Church Federation including 796 churches in the Chicago area reported additions to church membership during the church year to the number of 32,646. This is a gain of 12 per cent on the total Protestant church membership of 300,000. Nearly two-thirds of the additions reported were on confession of faith. Some of the denominations reported 15 per cent increase in membership during the year. Fifty-three Baptist churches reported 1,996 new members.

Rev. Charles A. McAlpine, whose course in Religious Publicity is attracting wide attention, has been invited to deliver an address at the annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at Milwaukee in June.

On a recent visit to the First Church of Suifu, West China, Missionary D. C. Graham had the pleasure of seeing forty-seven new members baptized into the church, the largest number ever baptized at Suifu in one half year. During the year there were eighty-eight baptisms and eleven additions by letter, a total of ninety-nine, bringing the membership up to about 400, an increase of more than 30 per cent. The inquirers' class was the largest in the history of the church, 130 men and five women attending. Some of the inquirers' were Chinese scholars, some were teachers, some were business men and most of the others were farmers. Of the 135 inquirers, forty-one were baptized. Many of the others will probably be baptized next year. In one outstation nearly twenty inquirers are ready for baptism but they could not come to the class because of the rains and robbers.

On the Banza Manteke field, Belgian Congo, according to a report from missionary John E. Geil, the every-member canvass has resulted in a large increase in giving. The salaries of teachers and evangelists have been increased. Notwithstanding this increase, as well as the high cost of living and the fact that the natives have purchased many school books and other supplies, all sections of the Banza Manteke field have surpassed the giving in previous years and the work of the new fiscal year begins with substantial balances in the treasuries of the native churches. During the year 1,160 have been baptized and there has been a net increase of nearly 100 in the church membership on the field.

The fifty-first annual meeting of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society will be held in Cadle Tabernacle, Indianapolis, Ind., June 19, at 10 a. m., and succeeding days, to act upon any report that shall then be presented, to elect officers and to transact any other business that may properly come before the meeting.

Plans for the one hundred and first commencement of Colby College have just been announced. Special features for this year include a memorial in honor of the one hundredth anniversary of the graduation of George Dana Boardman, Colby's first missionary to the foreign field, on Sunday evening, June 18. Monday afternoon, June 19, the students will present a college play on the campus; this is an innovation this year. Tuesday afternoon, June 20, the new grandstand, erected in honor of the 600 Colby men who served in the World War, will be dedicated. In the evening the college address will be delivered by Dr. Edward Howard Griggs. The commencement address on Wednesday, June 21, is to be given by Dr. Nathaniel Butler, of the University of Chicago, formerly president of Colby.

At a Bible conference in Ukhrul, Assam, attended by more than 200 delegates from over a dozen centers, it was decided to make a special effort during the current year to bring the gospel to bear on the hearts of the people as never before, and to set apart four suitable evangelists to take charge of the four areas surrounding Ukhrul. Over 2500 rupees were pledged in a very short time at one of the morning meetings, men, women and even young children vying with one another in having their names and offerings recorded. As a result four evangelists are now at work.

The Arizona Convention meets with the First Church, Phoenix, May 10-14. The church is sending the pastor, Rev. E. H. Shanks, to Indianapolis. Since his coming to the church in October, 132 new members have been received.

Broken Mainsprings

Some time ago we found our timepiece doing strange stunts. It would run a while and then stop a while. As a timepiece it was worthless. The watchmaker looked it over. He found every wheel, jewel and other vital parts of its anatomy in place. The watchmaker shook his head and said, "There is something wrong with the mainspring." And so it proved. Now the watch ticks away the hours month after month. It is dependable. We know some folks, not readers of THE BAPTIST, who have training and ability but they lack dependability. We wonder if there is not something the matter with the mainspring.

World Safer for Some Democrats

Rev. A. W. Tandy, of Mason City, Iowa, during the world war said in an impassioned address: "I'll tell you what this warfare and struggle is for. It is to make the world safe for democrats." The editor a few minutes ago received a check for $69 signed by the aforesaid Tandy. It is for subscriptions to THE BAPTIST and Missions. By so much is the world safer for one Democrat.

Here's Loyalty and Good Sense

Did you ever stop to think what it would mean to you to be miles and miles away from any other Baptist church? Rev. W. F. Robbins is the pastor of the churches at Arthur and Valley Center in Nebraska. The field is genuine frontier. The pastor is a missionary covering a wide territory. Last year he tried to get a list of subscribers to THE BAPTIST and partially succeeded. He now sends us a list almost equal to 33 per cent of the total membership of these churches. This shows this pastor's good sense. He will thus make it possible for these families to keep alive their interest in the work of the denomination.

The Navy Orders Copies

"Please send ninety-five copies of the recent number of THE BAPTIST containing an article by Chaplain Neyman of the navy to Capt. E. W. Scott, Bureau of Navigation, Washington, D. C. Captain Scott has agreed to mark and send one copy to each chaplain in the navy. B. R. Petrick, Captain Chaplain Corps. Send bill to me." THE BAPTIST and its readers are interested in the work of the chaplains in both army and navy.

sults and theory of prohibition, shows that answers were received from 154 presidents of colleges and universities in forty states. Of this number, more than 130 declare that their campus believes thoroughly in both the theory and fact of prohibition. The negative answers are almost all from New England and New York.

The brotherhood of the church at Cazenovia, N. Y. is on the job. During the past year the men have by request visited a dozen or more nearby churches to conduct meetings of an evangelistic nature. They have found that they need the actual work to supplement the Bible study carried on regularly in the meetings of the brotherhood. On April 25 the auditorium of the church was filled at the open meeting at which there were delegations from Manlius, New Berlin, New Woodstock, Delphi, Tully, Fenner, and several persons from the Delaware St. Church of Syracuse. The pastor, C. C. Winter finds the men of the brotherhood real supporters in his work.

Rev. H. G. Weston Smith, Greenville, Pa., has prepared a four-page pamphlet on "Baptist Church Membership," which is intended to be used as instructional material for prospective and new members and for those old members who are not duly informed of what Baptists stand for. There are contained twenty-six questions with careful answers. As a whole the pamphlet is well done. It may be obtained in quantities from the author at 3 cents a copy in lots less than 100, and at 2½ cents a copy in lots of more than 100.

The First Church, San Francisco, has extended a call to Dr. J. J. Ross, pastor of the Second Church, Chicago, Ill., and much in demand of late as an instructor in Bible conferences.

The Sunday schools of the First Church, Los Angeles and the First Church, Oakland are having a membership contest. Oakland has been giving Los Angeles a merry race. The attendance at Los Angeles April 2 was 641 and at Oakland 405; on April 16 the figures were 762 and 560. Los Angeles shows a gain of 39 per cent and Oakland 83 per cent. It looks good for Oakland but Los Angeles wires, "But Beware."

The Daily Telegraph, of Bluefield, W. Va., began on May 4 the printing of the New Testament in serial form and plans to continue the practice until the last chapter of Revelation has appeared in its columns.

Rev. John H. Carstens, until recently religious work secretary at the Y. M. C. A., Grand Rapids, Mich., is now connected with the Chicago Daily News in the department of church advertising.

"Never before have we found such general response to our efforts," declares Rev. M. L. Streeter of Tavoy, Burma. "While Mr. Duff of the Rangoon Indian work was visiting Tavoy, one of his faithful preachers baptized forty-five Telegus in Mergui. At the same time Mr. Duff baptized eleven Telegus and two Tamils in Tavoy. On my last trip to Mergui, nearly 100 Christians of various races participated in the special communion service."

Theology has the following to say on a matter which is interesting many of our churches just now: "In this recognition of Christ as the life of Nature, I see the guarantee that theology and science will come to complete accord. They are but pictures of Christ's working taken from different points of view. Theology tells us the Why, while science tells us the How. We need have no fear of evolution, for evolution is only the common method of Christ, a method, however, which does not fetter him, because his immanence in nature is qualified by his transcendence above nature. Immanence alone would be Christ imprisoned, as transcendence alone would be Christ banished. Reason and faith are not antagonistic to each other. They are working toward the same end—the discovery and unfolding of the truth as it is in Jesus."

surveys, has been published by the committee and the Church Federation of St. Louis. The folder which contains this summary is perhaps unique for the mass of data given in small compass and for the attractive and popular way in which it is presented. The church population was found to be 39 per cent Roman Catholic, 36 per cent Protestant and 3 per cent Jewish. One-fifth admitted no interest in the church. The 300 churches are spending $2,500,000 a year in regular church and mission work and are growing noticeably faster than the population, but "five members gained annually result in only one member gained permanently." Of these churches it is recorded that a dozen, located in downtown districts are beginning to meet the social challenge of their neighborhoods. Fifty years ago, however, a migration from "undesirable" neighborhoods began and the annual move ever since has amounted to from one-third to one-half of St. Louis. This resulted in "a constant turnover in attendance and an uprooting of interests." The churches moved too with the result that "Now East is East and West is West, and never the twain shall meet," unless an adequate program is devised. Although St. Louis is a prosperous city, over one-half of her people are found by the survey to be living below the average of human welfare and 30 per cent of them under "distinctly subnormal conditions."

Laymen's Missionary Conference

By FRANCIS C. STIFLER.

The Laymen's Missionary Conference held at the Hotel LaSalle, Chicago, May 3-4, had the atmosphere not of the preachers or of the board secretaries, but of the laymen. At the opening session there were fifty-one unordained men out of ninety. And the clergy spoke only when they were called upon. Every pastor who bears the world's need upon his heart will welcome the revival of the laymen's missionary movement which for twelve years before the launching of the Interchurch did so much to cultivate the missionary spirit of the men of the churches. Dr. W. S. Abernethy of Calvary Church, Washington, testified at the Wednesday session to the transforming influence of the movement in its early years upon a little church of which he had just become the pastor. A group of ten laymen were brought to see the meaning of the Great Commission so clearly that not only did the interest in missions grow but the plans for local expansion suddenly became realized.

The reorganization of the movement contemplates nothing different from its former status—that of an unofficial representative body for the promotion of the missionary program of Christianity among the laymen of the churches of the various communions. No conditions exist which would put its activities in conflict with other movements and a response must be made to the growing feeling among many earnest laymen that there is an increasing need for unofficial and friendly association among the men of the churches which shall afford for them what the highly-developed woman's work has done for the women in their missionary circles.

The executive committee members elected were: B. S. Pearsall, Elgin, Ill.; W. T. Jennings, Sterling, Ill.; H. R. Baldwin, George H. Stineback, J. Wilbur Messer, Wade Fetzner, J. R. Howard, and John P. Hovland, Chicago.

Members of the general committee are: Fred C. MacMillan, Des Moines, Ia.; E. M. Bowman, New York; A. E. Hyde, Wichita, Kas.; J. M. Patterson, St. Louis, Mo.; A. E. White, Newton Center, Mass.; Conray P. Hall and John L. Bates, Boston, Mass.; D. D. Spellman, Frank J. Weber, R. H. Weber, and S. S. Kresge, Detroit, Mich.; J. T. Henderson, Knoxville, Tenn., and Carl L. Milliken, Portland, Me.

Lowering Religious Education Costs

The American Baptist Publication Society announces a further reduction in periodical costs to the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention. This reduction will start with the quarter beginning July 1, 1922. Falling markets are at last beginning to be manifested in a slight measure in our manufacturing costs, and we are glad to pass on the saving in expense to our patrons.

With the approval of the Board of Managers I am announcing a flat reduction of 5 per cent on all orders for periodicals and graded lessons received for the period beginning July 1, 1922.

Gilbert N. Brink, General Secretary.

The Baptist

What if We Fail?

AS these lines are written, the financial year of the Northern Baptist Convention is over. As the figures now are, so they will stand.

The people of the churches are waiting anxiously to know the results of the great effort which has been made. Whether these are good or bad the churches wish to know. They feel instinctively that in the long run absolute frankness and a fearless facing of the facts is the only profitable policy.

How near have we come to securing the more than $18,000,000 which was needed for this year? How far short have we fallen? Is the total sum in hand only $11,000,000? Or is it more? What does a deficit of six or seven million dollars mean to the denomination? How is it distributed? How is it to be met?

We are all hoping for the best; let us be willing to face the worse. God still lives and rules. His will shall be our joy. If he calls us to humiliation and hardship, we may yet say, "The will of the Lord be done." The Lord chasteneth whom he loves and although the affliction may not be joyous for the season, afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness.

Of course we shall keep our heads. We must not be stampeded into hasty and unwise action. And yet there are some things which at once suggest themselves, growing out of the experience of the last two years. Experience is a poor teacher if we do not learn something from it and do not adapt our organization and methods to the lessons which have been, even though partially, learned.

Many are assuming that there will be reorganization of some kind. The committee which is giving its attention to plans for the coming year will naturally and necessarily give thought to this matter and will probably have some recommendations to make. Various people have discovered, they think, that we are over-organized and that our democracy suffers. There must be, they say, both simplification and unification of method. This, we are sure, does not mean that we should go back to the old system of government by boards, over which the denomination had but slight control, or to the old-time competition in the churches between societies. We have gained vastly in our denominational consciousness during the last few years and shall not surrender this gain. And yet it may be true that local traditions and local authority have been too much lost in the process of centralization and must in some way be restored. Such adaptation should not be impossible.

We have discovered also that there must be more human publicity for the New World Movement. No great enthusiasm can be generated for campaigns and programs, which are impersonal affairs at their best. The zeal of the churches will be kindled in proportion as there is brought about a more direct contact with the missionaries and missionary work of the denomination. Most of us are interested in people; in some way the entire missionary task must be better visualized.

The word "retrenchment" is a hard one to speak. And yet families and business men have been facing it for many months past, and why should churches and the denomination refuse to face the fact? In some way the money in hand or in prospect must be made to go around. If there is not enough for the whole task, it must be distributed in the best possible way. We can hardly bring foreign missionaries home, for it is cheaper to keep them on their fields. And yet it may be that somewhere there are economies which can be effected by discontinuing temporarily some forms of work. We understand that the finance committee of the convention is now grappling with this problem and it will be fair to await its report.

There must be no let-up in the campaigns for stewardship. Now is the time to stress this matter. In spots more generous giving should be urged but everywhere there is need of more general systematic giving. Along this line we are at present less than 50 per cent efficient. Shall we learn the lesson?

The laymen's organization has been developed for just such an hour as this. Let the good work go on, not spending itself in mass meetings and general campaigns but reaching in the most definite ways into the local churches.

We think also that the time has come for a restoration to the women of the large and important place they have always had in the denominational task. The New World movement threw much confusion into our woman's work. Something has been done of late to emphasize the importance of their task and to restore morale, but by far the last word has not been said on the subject.

Perhaps most important of all, we need to have at once an understanding in our own household. We have not been seeing eye to eye; cannot we do so? A genuine piety among preachers and people would help. An insistence upon life in Christ would be useful. The need is not only of emphasis on the right thinking but also upon the fruits of the Spirit. We recommend to the ministers that they read over again the story of Paul's contest with the Judaizers. Shall legalism conquer the free spirit? Baptists who have been the great champions of religious liberty and freedom of conscience, as Secretary Hughes points out in another column, must not fall again into bondage. Neither must they lose their own particular witness.

Finally, let there be hope, courage and zeal for the future. That plain, sensible folk called Baptists will not be content to mark time or retreat. The promises of God still hold good. We must claim them, and in the spirit of Jesus possess them.

Editorial Comment

NOW IS THE TIME

Churches which during recent weeks have been making heroic efforts to raise their quota for the New World Movement should know that now is the time to begin on the new year.

It is easier to accomplish big things in fifty-two weeks than in four. Much needless anxiety and labor is saved when efforts are spread over the longer period of time.

Whatever adjustments may be made at the coming convention, Northern Baptists will not be willing to go back to a lesser program or to the old system of ceaseless competition between societies. Collections in the new year should begin at once, and should be accompanied all the way by a program of missionary education which will bring workers and work in all our far-flung fields vividly before the churches. People like to know the people and the work for which their money is being spent.

THE "SPIRITUAL SOMETHING" WHICH GROWS

A writer in a popular magazine attributes her success to her religion and then defines this as follows: "It just then came over me that I had a spiritual something in me which would grow the more I drew on it, and would shrink away if I didn't draw on it—for strength, courage and intelligence. Them three words covers 'most any ground pretty thorough. And I commenced to draw at once, with good results."

Now, of course, no really thoughtful person would claim that such a statement is an adequate description of religion. But it does recognize the fact that human powers grow with use and atrophy through disuse and the further fact that in our subconscious life, whatever may be their sources, are powers which are merely waiting to have us draw upon them. People who fail to draw on their own resources are a part of the tragedy of the world—the poets who die with all their music in them. There is here also, it may be, the recognition that deep within our being comes that touch of the divine upon the human spirit by which we become conscious of the things which are eternal. One may live unaware of this, or he may, by effort come into distinct accord with that Spirit.

There is more to these lives of ours than we often think. Make the test by drawing upon yourself more heavily than you have ever before done.

THESE FIGURES MEAN SOMETHING

"A statement came out from Washington a few weeks ago in which it was said that 13,878,671 people had given written expression of opinions in reference to the work of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament. It is not at all surprising that such a number of people were interested; the number is doubtless many times the figure named. The startling fact is that more than one in ten of the population—of the adult population probably one in six,—would take the trouble to let their interest be known. Only today another set of figures met my eye. They show that of 435 members in the lower house of congress, 281 are members of Protestant churches and that only eighteen are Catholics, or more than fifteen to one. The showing in the senate is in about the same proportions.

"Two-thirds of the members of both houses of congress are members of Protestant churches. That means that they could alone shape the policies of the government. They could even override the veto of the president. They could defeat any treaty. In short, any policy on which their votes could be united, would win. Any legislation against which they would combine must go down in defeat.

"These men represent the very churches that wrote the eighteenth amendment into the constitution, that backed up the Washington Conference—13,000,000 strong. They represent our best traditions, our highest Christian ideals. Down beneath their political creeds, beneath their economic hopes and fears, beneath the national or sectional alignments are their Christian ideals of brotherhood, of truth and honor and old-fashioned righteousness. The sub-stratum of their characters is seamed with fine gold laid there in the plastic hours of childhood, reinforced by ancient prophets and modern apostles, and overlaid with the tender traditions of home and church. Some things are big enough and majestic enough and fundamental enough to smite down through the trivial, the false, the fictitious and the partisan and find that solid sub-stratum on which all worthy things rest. Then something happens, has always happened, will inevitably happen. An upstanding, God-fearing, outspoken Christian American manhood will vote for those things that matter, and crash will go the sham and self-interest and partisanship that bar the way to progress.

"When will they? When the mothers that bred them and that bear their children, the churches that nourish them and the preachers that teach them, clearly sound forth the truth; square their life by the message of the Master and keep flaming hot and white a holy passion for righteousness."

The above paragraphs were written by W. W. Pinson, general secretary of the board of missions of the M. E. Church, South. Think them over. They mean something. Their significance will become the greater as men reflect on how many crying social reforms lag even in these wonderful states of ours.

THE BUSINESS OF SLANDER

Recently Dr. Frank Norris, of Fort Worth, Texas, assisted Dr. Straton in special meetings at Calvary Church, New York City. In a report published in the Fort Worth Telegram Star for April 2 is this sentence: "He disclosed that the main thing the denominations were after today was not souls but money. He declares that even Baptist machines have become commercialized."

Commenting upon this reported statement, Dr. R. H. Pitt, editor of the Religious Herald, of Richmond, Va., says: "It is high time that this business of going around slandering and discrediting the organized forces of the various Christian bodies should be halted. If the sensational free-lances in the ministry insist upon making so irresponsible, reckless and mendacious utterances, there is no way that we know of to prevent them. But for the sake of the kingdom of Christ and of due truth and sobriety of statement where great interests are involved, let respectable, influential and God-fearing ministers at the very least refrain from giving currency and respectability to misrepresentations so gross and libelous. Surely business of bringing railing accusations against the people of God may be left to the arch-enemy of human souls, who is usually very diligent in looking after business of this kind."

Enough said! Let the matter go at that.

EROTICAL DEMENTIA

A young Chilean, in love with Peggy Joyce, about whom moths have fluttered in the past, shot himself. A newspaper gives the name of erotical dementia to his disease. One young woman, expert in handling rich men, blotted out his whole universe. Missing her exclusive smiles he decided that it was just as well for him that the sun should rise no more. He did not know that a few years of time would have cured him of all his woe. Pity him? Yes, perhaps so, but pity more a world which is so full of folly.

For other persons, there are other causes for the extreme actions of which they are guilty. But there is much dementia. The world is full of fools, old and young. For each of them, the one obsession obscures the sun, blots out the universe. The sore finger seems of more importance for the moment than the otherwise sound body.

Men and women need to come down to earth. Nothing of material sort is so important as they seem to think. A host of ills would vanish like the morning dew if only people could acquire a true sense of values.

"THE HAPPIEST MAN I KNOW"

So Dr. Frank Crane calls himself. And this is his reason: "I am doing what all my life I have wanted to do—and they're paying me for it."

Explaining why he left the ministry, although he maintains that he has not left the pulpit but only moved on to a larger charge, he says in the American Magazine for May:

"I did not want to preach, as my fellow ministers did, to convert anybody. Why should I want to convert them, when probably they were really as good as I? I wanted to preach, as a poet wants to write, as a painter to paint, as an architect to build. It was the pure impulse of self-expression. I had glimpses of spiritual truth, visions of the laws of life and of the beauties of nature; and I wanted to reveal what I had seen."

Such an impulse doubtless exists in every minister who is a thinker. But it is subordinated to the practical ends of the gospel. Men like Mr. Crane are more common in other denominations than among Baptists. Yet every man who sees visions must wish to reveal them. And of what use is the revelation unless it leads men to action or to better or happier living?

CONSPICUOUS MARKS

The mud-thrower loves a conspicuous mark. Such an one is easier hit and the mud shows up to better advantage. Many a small man attracts attention to himself by his deftness in slinging dirt. His reward is the same even though the mud does not stick.

Leaders in the New World Movement have made good targets. Before one gives over-much heed to wild assertions made against them, he should ask whether his own record is invulnerable and also whether, under the peculiar conditions, he or others could have done better. Many of these men and women have given notable exhibitions of sacrificial service and have probably made no more mistakes than have been made by pastors and deacons and business men during the same period.

The denomination would commend itself to the non-Christian world if it should cultivate the habit of appreciating its servants. It has not always done so. And sometimes its servants have been the most ardent critics of each other.

THE SOLUTION OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S PROBLEM

The young people of today are no different from the young people of other times. The material with which they deal has changed somewhat, but they themselves are the same. What they want and have always wanted is action. They are not willing to acquire in their teens the soberness and dignity of age. Scolding about such things as dresses and dancing, and the like, is very futile business and seldom works out good results. Give them something to do. The boys who sit on the curbstone and say, "Gee, there is nothing in this town for a kid to do," are not young pagans; they are simply normal fellows, with their full share of animal spirits, who crave action. Why not give them action without attaching a moral to it? Nobody who is young enjoys doing things just because he ought to do them. He does them because they are good fun. Wherever a church or community has displaced a policy which is marked by a row of negatives with a policy of definite doings, there is to be found a church which has solved the problems which elsewhere are the vexation of parents and pastors.

THE "SPELL" HATRED CASTS

What is the trouble with Europe? What is the force which from the beginning has threatened to wreck the Geneva Conference? The answer is easy. Hatred! Suspicion! Greed! Self-seeking!

The Turk would be no problem today were it not for the jealousies and rivalries of European nations, and especially Italy, France and Great Britain. There would be no Armenian problem if each European nation was not suspicious of every other, and concerned in securing from the wreck of things all that is possible for itself. Hatred has cast a spell over the earth; its fascination is luring even nations to destruction.

Isn't it time that love was given a chance? The Christian church is in the world for just such critical hours as this.

The Baptist Service to Religious Liberty

An address delivered at the laying of the corner stone of the National Baptist Memorial to Roger Williams and Religious Liberty at Washington, D. C., April 22.

BY CHARLES E. HUGHES

THIS memorial is at once a tribute and a pledge. It is a tribute, in this capital where the services and ideals of those who founded and preserved the Union are fittingly memorialized, to one of their great forerunners—to the pioneer who first in America erected the standard of religious liberty. It is also a tribute to that earnest group of believers who, amid scorn and persecution, were steadfast to their distinctive tenet which was to become the vital principle of our free institutions. It is a pledge that this principle shall be held inviolate.

The conception of religious liberty is so familiar to us that we find it difficult to realize that it is not a natural one; that it is one of the late fruits of political experience; and that when first declared it was deemed of all doctrines the most pernicious and dangerous. It is distinctively an American doctrine, for here the principle first found effective expression in governmental institutions. "Of all the differences between the Old World and the New," says Bryce, "this is perhaps the most salient. Half the wars of Europe, half the internal troubles that have vexed European states, from the Monophysite controversies of the Roman empire of the fifth century down to the Kulturkampf in the German empire in the nineteenth have arisen from theological differences or from the rival claims of church and state."

The Province of Monarchs

It was inevitable that monarchs, believing themselves to occupy the throne as of divine right should exert their sway over the consciences of their subjects. It was natural, deeming itself to represent the divine rule upon earth, that the church should seek either direct control or pervasive influence over political institutions. Nor was religious liberty the aim of the leaders of the Reformation. It was recognized to be the province of the head of the state to ordain the religion to be observed within the state, at least to the extent of stamping out heretical doctrine. It was a position easily understood and plausibly defended. What would become of the state without religion? Would not subversive religious views and pernicious doctrines threaten the very existence of the state? And who should suppress them if not the ruler of the state? How could pure religion be maintained if the state did not define it and support it by its authority? Never was political precept deemed to be more solidly based in unanswerable logic. Thus was found the ready justification for civil disability, proscription and persecution. "The chief duty of the magistrate," it was formally declared, "is to defend religion and take care that the Word of God is purely preached." He was to remove and destroy "all false service of God."

The Magistrate Not to Meddle

Against this almost universal opinion; against the voice of authoritative dogma and of philosophical exposition in its support on the part of the learned, with rare exceptions; against what was conceived to be the essential defense of both civil and religious institutions — what chance remained for freedom of conscience and of equality before the law? There were indeed a few scattered prophets of the new era. And there was one group, condemned and persecuted, to whom the light was given when the brightest intellects of Europe were clouded. To the Anabaptists, the most scorned of sects, belongs the imperishable honor of declaring and persistently urging the fundamental doctrine that rulers of states should not intervene in affairs of conscience and that civil disability should not be predicated upon religious belief. Said they, "The magistrate is not to meddle with religion or matters of conscience, nor compel men to this or that form of religion, because Christ is the King and Lawgiver of the church and conscience."

This demand for religious liberty was not an incidental declaration or an effort to obtain a mere immunity for religious practice. Others might flee from persecution only in turn to persecute those who disagreed with them. Others might pledge toleration or maintain a passive resistance to authority. The Anabaptists were not asking to be tolerated; they were not content with passivity; they were fighting for a cardinal principle of their faith. Persecution intensified their struggle, but it was not sufficient for them to escape persecution.

Their demand for the absolute freedom of religion from civil control was an essential part of their conception of religious truth and was pressed with the ardor of the deepest religious feeling. They went to the root of the matter—the relation of the individual soul to its Maker.

This contribution is the glory of the Baptist heritage, more distinctive than any other characteristic of belief or practice. To this militant leadership, all sects and faiths are debtors. Let this memorial proclaim the indebtedness in the capital of the Republic where the once despised dogma has become the foundation of the civic structure.

The soil of Europe was not congenial for the growth of the radical doctrine of religious liberty. Tradition, the supposed requirements of organized society, political authority, ecclesiasticism of whatever name, the learning of the schools, were all against it. Even toleration, as the word implies, fell far short of its advocacy. There was only the persistent effort of weak things which were to put to shame the things which were strong. The seeds of liberty were blown across the Atlantic and found fruitage here.

The New Prophet

But it was a long process. The New World, despite its freer atmosphere, was affected by the traditions of the Old. Freedom to worship God was one thing. Freedom for some one else to worship God was quite another. Of course, persecution was only for error. Was it not desirable to stamp out error? Was not punishment clearly needed if one continued after warning to sin "against his own conscience?" In the colonies there were various religious establishments reflecting variety of origin and creed and all the inveterate prejudices and hatreds to which age-long religious strife had given rise. Even the truth cannot prosper without leadership, and liberty waited for the appearance of the prophet of the new thought. Able, well trained, aflame with zeal, came Roger Williams. An exile, banished by the theocratic religionists because of his treasonable demand for freedom of conscience, he was, as his enemy put it, "enlarged" out of Massachusetts. And in Rhode Island he founded the commonwealth where for the first time religious liberty was a foundation principle. To him, who established the liberty of the soul in the New World; who, not with indifference to religious truth but with profound religious conviction, demanded the emancipation of the spirit of man from the fetters of civil rule; who pointed the coming nation to the true pathway of a free people, to Roger Williams—preacher, prophet and statesman—we erect this memorial of lasting obligation of men and women of all creeds and races.

Soul-Rape

These were his principles: "The civil sword may make a nation of hypocrites and anti-Christians, but not one Christian. Forcing of conscience is a soul-rape. * * * Persecution for conscience hath been the lancet which hath let the blood of the nations. * * * Man hath no power to make laws to bind conscience. The civil commonwealth and the spiritual commonwealth, the church, not inconsistent, though independent, the one of the other. * * * The civil magistrate owes two things to false worshippers—(1) permission, (2) protection."

And in 1663 his fundamental tenet was embodied in the following memorable and discriminating language of the charter for the colony of Rhode Island:

"No person within the said colony, at any time hereafter, shall be in any wise molested, punished, disquieted, or called in question, for any differences in opinion, in matters of religion, who do not actually disturb the civil peace of our said colony; but that all and every person and persons may, from time to time, and at all times hereafter, freely and fully have and enjoy his own and their own judgments and consciences, in matters of religious concerns, throughout the tract of land hereafter mentioned, they behaving themselves peaceably and quietly and not using this liberty to licentiousness and profaneness, nor to the civil injury or outward disturbance of others."

This was the ancestor of the provisions of our Federal Constitution adopted 124 years later: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof"—and of the familiar provisions of similar import of the respective State Constitutions.

These Constitutional declarations are not forms of words conveying an abstract idea. They have definite and well understood practical implications. Men of all religious beliefs stand equal before the law. They are not to be punished by reason of their creeds or forms of worship so long as they respect the public peace and the equal rights of others. No one is exposed to civil disability either as a witness in our courts or with respect to qualification for any public office by reason of his religious faith. Nor are the people to be taxed and public moneys to be used for the support of any sort of religion.

Self-Restraint and Liberty

This principle of our institutions also carries with it an inhibition, respected by all good citizens, that no one should seek through political action to promote the activities of religious organizations, or should intrude differences of religious faith or practice into our political controversies. The extent to which we manifest that self-restraint marks our degree of attachment to the liberty we proclaim. The right to religious liberty has become a truism, and we are so familiar with this conception that we are likely to forget at what cost freedom of conscience has been won and also the danger to which we are constantly exposed of a recrudescence of bigotry. The hardest lesson mankind has had to learn is that the religious truth which is held to be most precious can not prosper by attempts forcibly to impose it upon others. Strong convictions, especially religious convictions, are apt to develop tyrannical purpose and no faith is so pure but that it is ever in danger of being made the instrument of the mistaken zeal of those who would deny to others the right to think as they choose.

Enemies of Religion

It is a sound instinct that couples civil and religious liberty in one phrase, in our description of free institutions, however distinct theoretically they may be. The effort to dominate the conscience of men by the use of civil power has always been destructive of civil liberty itself. If there are any who would pervert our institutions to make them servants of religious dogma, they should be regarded as enemies of both religion and the state, as the success of their endeavors would undermine both.

The principle of Roger Williams is not only one of absolute justice with respect of equality before the law, but it is the essential principle of religious culture. When we look beyond form and ritual to the spiritual life of which they are the expression, it must be realized that its vital breath is the liberty of the soul in following its highest aspirations. It is only in the atmosphere of religious freedom that we may hope either for protection against error and delusion or for the maintenance of that spiritual power upon which all progress depends.

Is There Danger That Humanitarianism Be Substituted for the Gospel?

By CHARLES S. DETWEILER

WE believe that Christianity is not simply the life of God in the soul of man, but is also the life of God in the environment of man; that he who believes on the Lord Jesus Christ gets his house saved as well as himself; that just as Jesus made tangible and visible for us the eternal life of God amid earthly surroundings, so we are called to manifest that life in the home, the shop, the office, and in all our social contacts. In so far as we have in ourselves the salt of devotion to Christian principle, we shall transform conditions about us. Recreation will be safeguarded for our youth, and industrial and commercial relationships will be Christianized. There is no limit to the changes that might be effected in the world by Christians of consecration and conviction; government could be purified and even international relationships might be lifted up to the high plane of unselfish consideration for the welfare of other peoples.

But the more we emphasize the social aspects of the gospel, the greater need of assuring ourselves that we have a gospel to preach. Service and sacrifice are the fruits of the gospel of forgiveness and regeneration. We cannot get these fruits if we fail to cultivate the plant on which they grow. It is a question just how much social work can be carried on by Christian agencies without endangering their spiritual and evangelical bases. There is abroad a wide-spread feeling that ministrations to the physical man have here and there overshadowed and dwarfed the religious activities of well known and great organizations. Theoretically from the Christian standpoint all of life is sacred. Our bodies are temples of the Holy Ghost. Holiness to the Lord is to be inscribed upon the bells of the horses, and upon the pots and kettles in the kitchen. We proclaim the sovereignty of Christ over the whole of life—over business and recreation, art and literature. That is the New Testament ideal; but to realize it demands uncommon consecration.

Judged by this ideal the Puritans lived a very narrow life. Their idea of saintliness was physical attenuation and spiritual austerity. Their churches were unattractive and their worship without appeal to the aesthetic taste. And yet they were men and women of tremendous power and productiveness. As Robertson Nichol suggests, they worshipped God in a bare and cramped room, but they had fire enough to heat it; we their children worship in a larger and more beautiful room, but are we able to heat it?

Conflicting Ideals

We have observed in missionary services that these two ideals, which ought to be harmonized, are often in conflict. There are missionaries who are Puritanical in their outlook upon life. They will have no social contacts, except in so far as they can directly and by word of mouth evangelize them. Temperance reform or social betterment does not interest them. The institutional aspect of Christianity repels them; the mystical aspect alone is their life. Generally speaking this is the prevailing type among independent and undenominational missions. The work of the regular mission boards, which is projected upon broader lines, often merits their disapproval and their charge that humanitarianism is being substituted for the gospel.

On the other hand, there is frequently to be found in the utterances of modern missionary administrators ground for this charge. For example here are quotations from three such men in a recent widely circulated book: "The missionary must find new ways of identifying himself with the social and philanthropic organizations that are seeking outside of the church to do the same things that he is seeking to do in the church. He must realize that there are many honest, spiritually-minded people outside of the church who are doing much for the kingdom. He must seek fellowship with these men and work shoulder to shoulder with them."

Another writes: "When the day comes when our business is organized, not on the principle of individual self-seeking, but on the Christian principle of social service, American international trade will become a powerful agency for carrying the Christian gospel into all the life of all the world." Query: Is the Christian gospel nothing more than the Christian principle of social service? Contrast this with the following from the late Dr. Denny:

My Mother

By JESSE RODMAN WILSON

I OWE my mother eternal love and reverence because her life apart from all her words is my richest heritage. I say "apart from words" because her silent, unconscious influence helps me most. For the exchange of our deepest thoughts, we never need words. Occasionally I pour out my heart in words to others, but mother and I, loving each other differently, rest in the full possession of each other's heart, expressed or interpreted by only a look or a caress or an intuition of love.

If I have sinned, she calls for no confession or explanation. Somehow she understands and forgives. And by a similar "somehow" I know she does. No words of reproof are necessary, for her life reproves every wrong thing in mine. Neither are there words of counsel, yet she radiates her will and her judgment in a way that brings to me a restraining or an impelling wisdom in all my decisions. But not more than this, for she never shows any disposition to interfere with my freedom of thought or action. At times she has wished I had acted differently. Occasionally she has not understood or approved my choice or purpose. But at such times she steadily believes that if I am wrong I will change or if right she will come to understand and approve. Her faith, her pride, and her hope are my constant inspiration to the highest and noblest endeavor. Because of her and through her, faith in God and the consciousness of his presence and love began, and they have come to be the most fundamental and natural realities of my life.

Only one thing can explain the power of this inarticulate influence. It is her mother love—the kind of love the Apostle Paul describes when he says:

"Love suffereth long, and is kind; love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself; is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not its own, is not provoked, taketh not account of evil; rejoiceth not in unrighteousness, but rejoiceth with the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things."

Whenever I read this, I see my mother. It is a portrait of her and of all real mothers. Such love needs no words to make its influence felt. It transcends eloquence and knowledge and even faith itself. In her heart and life it makes her closest akin to God, and it is this wonderful love above all else that makes her forever MY MOTHER.

"Forgiveness or reconciliation is in a strict sense everything in the Christian religion. It does not need to be eked out with anything else. God trusts to it to keep the sinner right with him. I do not hesitate to say that the sense of debt to Christ is the most profound and pervasive of all emotions in the New Testament; and that only a gospel which evokes this, as the gospel of atonement does, is true to the primitive and normal Christian type."

Government Official a Fellow Worker

The third one writes of the splendid idea of altruistic mandates exercised by the strong nations for the weak and more backward ones, as proposed in the covenant of the League of Nations: "It is a theory of colonial administration which enthrones unselfishness and altruism in the political sphere even as in the missionary and religious sphere. If these ideals are realized, then the missionary may avowedly recognize the government official as his fellow-worker for the uplift of humanity and the advancement of the kingdom of God." Again we ask whether the basis of our missionary appeal has changed, and are we seeking simply the uplift of people? Have we indeed given ground for the accusation that humanitarianism is being substituted for the gospel?

The answer to our question will be found, we believe only by visiting the mission field. In actual contact with the problems of human need a higher synthesis of the two opposing ideals is generally worked out. The most conservative missionary when brought face to face with the misery of the neglected masses tries to provide something in the way of a school or a medical clinic or other form of social service in addition to his evangelism, efforts that his more liberal brethren would call human uplift.

The missionary of the liberal type when thrown upon his own resources in a field where no foundation has been laid, will be found to be developing the mystical and experimental aspect of his ministry in a way of which his conservative brethren had thought him incapable. In a word, the stern necessities of conflict with evil in the name of Christ tend to bring about a rapprochement of the two types of his devoted followers. We can generally trust the missionaries who are actually on the field doing the work to accept no substitutes for the gospel.

Echoes of Victory Here and There

Reports are yet incomplete in the great effort of Northern Baptists to pay their debts and to carry on. The following may be taken as straws.

New Jersey Comes Within 12 Per Cent of Record

New Jersey Baptist pastors, church workers, laymen and women were never more loyal and sympathetic with the ideals and goals of our denominational leaders than today. Of course, we all want the most efficient and economical organization and administration of our Baptist work, for as leaders and people, our common objective is to "crown Him Lord of all."

Our New World Movement total of $556,000 THIS HARD YEAR means more than last year's record of $632,000. We acknowledge that many of our faithful folks have not the money they once had. AND they certainly do have more worthy ambitions for their local churches. They have increased current expense budgets 50-200 percent, are planning new buildings, demanding adequate equipment, fostering religious educational programs, preparing a trained leadership, concerned about a genuine revival that shall permeate the whole life, even unto the earning and spending of money. Our churches are increasingly doing a comprehensive and constructive work.

No greater impetus has been given them than that which has resulted from the impact of the New World Movement. God sometimes gives us blessings on the side we are not looking for. The by-products of the New World Movement are worth all it costs.

A greater day is ahead—or our pastors and church leaders either could not or would not be responding as they are, considering all the circumstances.

If the Lord's work must seem to be retarded temporarily, we will remember that it is His work, not ours alone. If He can stand it, we will. He is not worried about it; He may be ashamed of us.

—J. EARLE EDWARDS,
Supt. of Promotion.

A Message to Ohio Baptists

You will be glad to know that for the fiscal year ending last week your contributions for missionary, educational and other forms of denominational benevolence at home and abroad reached the splendid sum of $626,437.99.

Considering the very severe financial condition which has affected the whole state this is a great achievement. We have abundant reason for gratitude to God, whose blessing made it possible, and for appreciation of all whose service and sacrifice made it actual. I also extend my hearty thanks to the hundreds of workers who have co-operated so finely with this department in its very difficult task.

We are now in the new fiscal year, and just as our church work needs constant financial support, so do our many forms of benevolence. In order to keep up the work of our splendid organizations and save the needless expense of borrowing money at heavy interest charges it is very important that all members make weekly payments to the benevolence treasurer of the church, for prompt remitting to this office and our forwarding to the various organizations through the General Board of Promotion in New York. The next remittance should be made May 15.

We have now completed two years of the operation of the Ohio Board of Promotion. During that time nearly $1,300,000 has been collected, which is nearly three times the amount collected in the two years preceding the launching of our New World Movement, and this has been done at a cost of only a trifle over ONE PER CENT of the sum collected. This cost includes many hundreds of dollars for travel of missionaries and the holding of conferences and institutes, all of which benefit the churches as well as the objects presented.

Our New World Movement, which is simply the name for the enlarged program in all the lines of work we have been doing for many years (one for over a century), has therefore amply justified its establishment and is fully worthy of the complete confidence and cordial support of every Baptist. I earnestly hope that every one who has not yet made a subscription for its support will do so at once—pledge cards will be sent on request.

May our Heavenly Father richly bless you in all your service for Him, both in your church life and unto the uttermost part of the earth.

—F. G. CRESSEY, Director of Promotion.

Connecticut Women Go Over the Top

The following telegram was received by Dr. John Y. Aitchison from Mrs. J. D. Rough, Connecticut Continuation Campaign chairman, on May 1:

"Faith is the victory. Connecticut women have gone well over the top in Continuation Campaign. Will send report of the amount as soon as possible. Will you not join us in a prayer of thanksgiving for this wonderful evidence of God's presence and power?"

South Pasadena W. W. G.'s Earn $12 Each

"Many of them earned every penny by serving others, even to doing housework. They have given an average of $12 each," writes Mrs. Harriet A. Brough, first vice-president of the South Pacific District of the W. A. B. F. M. S. and the W. A. B. H. M. S. "On Friday was at Pasadena. An offering of $33,000 had been taken on the previous Sunday, more coming in. Offering at First Baptist church, Los Angeles, last Sunday was $8,000; more coming. I understand that Mrs. Edmands, our state president, is hopeful as to results from her constituency."

Utica Boys and Girls Set Good Example

Rev. William B. Lippard, associate secretary of the Foreign Mission Society, is responsible for the following item:

"While I was at Utica, Sunday, April 9, at the Park Church, the pastor, Rev. C. J. Oxley, at the close of the service brought to the platform about a score or more of boys and girls, ranging in age from five to twelve, each of whom had made a pledge to the New World Movement when the movement began, and who had paid their pledges to date in full."

Dr. F. B. Palmer writes from Colorado: "We have hope in Colorado of coming up to our record of last year in payments on New World Movement pledges, namely 92 per cent of the amount due. We have received just about enough new pledges to take up the shrink in the old pledges."

Word from Massachusetts is to the effect that collections this year will be about 90 per cent of what they were last year. Some of the churches, like the First Church, Fall River, have paid in full the amount due to date.

Illinois Baptists have sent to this office during the year the sum of $431,134.48, which is approximately 20 per cent below last year's figures. This does not include sums of money paid direct to various agencies in the state as well as to the national societies which amount is considerable. No complete record of this is now available. All things considered this is a creditable showing. Financially this state has been hit hard. Then too, this is the second installment on a five year pledge, and many paid up in full last year.—A. E. Peterson.

North Dakota

Rev. Fred E. Stockton, General Superintendent of Baptist missions in North Dakota is reported greatly encouraged by the hearty and generous response by many of the churches despite six years of crop failure, and general business depression. North Dakota Baptists have never before made such a showing in an effort to meet world needs. The continuation fund campaign must be regarded successful, and the payment on pledges toward the New World Movement is reported almost phenomenal.

Last summer was the dullest in fifteen years in the New York City police courts, according to the Record of Christian Work, which says: "Even though only partly enforced, prohibition has caused a remarkable slump in New York police court cases since Governor Miller signed the Mullen-Gage law. New York City has been admittedly the wettest city in the United States, and until this year summer was the busiest time of the year for the police courts. Almost every Saturday and Sunday nights in the picnic parks where a $1 entrance fee entitled the guest to all the beer wished without additional cost, stabbing and shooting affrays were frequent, together with accidents of all kinds. The police courts were always full on Monday mornings, and the Sunday and Monday papers full of headlines featuring both crimes and accidents. Although drinking is not altogether a thing of the past, crimes due to it have dropped to almost zero, and the police court on Monday is easy for the magistrate and blue for the police court reporter."

The Message of Baptists to our Century

Baptists are "firsts" in religious liberty, on mission fields, in literature and in song

By ARTHUR S. PHELPS

SOME one has counted fifteen varieties of Baptists in the United States. I don't know. There are the "Regulars," white and colored, North and South; the "General" Baptists—and Baptists that want to be generals; the "United" and "Separate" Baptists; the "Six Principle" Baptists—and Baptists that seem to have no principles; the "Seventh Day" and the "Free Will" Baptists—who have used their free will to excellent purpose in uniting with their brethren. I am sorry to say there are some "Hard Shell" Baptists, and still more sorry to say there are some soft shells. The colored man said to his friend: "I done dreamed of hebbin, las' night; an' all de denominations was gathered aroun' de great white frone; an' de Baptisses was squat up agin de frone." "How dey come dar?" "Why de Lawd say de Baptisses am such onreliable rascals he have to have 'em whare he kin keep he eye on 'em."

Growth Phenomenal

How wonderfully God has blessed us as a denomination! Our growth in numbers has been phenomenal. In 1776, we numbered not more than one in 100 of the population. At the close of the Revolutionary War we had only three churches west of the Alleghenies; now we have more than 40,000. Our institutions of learning have increased from one, Brown University, till now we have of all kinds, 203. From 50,000 members we have grown to more than 6,000,000. While the 5,000,000 population of the United States in 1776 have increased twenty-two-fold, we Baptists have increased one-hundred-twenty-fold. If this keeps on, we shall bye and bye have more Baptists than there are people. The Congregationalists and Episcopalians have about one-seventh, and the Presbyterians one-third, of our membership. In several states we have more members than all other denominations added together. In North Carolina it is a common saying that "you can't chop a tree down without killing a Baptist." A colored man in Georgia was asked: "What is the principal geological formation in Georgia?" He said, "De what?" "What is the principal geological formation in Georgia?" He said: "I reckons it mus' be de Baptisses." Dr. F. B. Meyer said: "I believe the whole world will yet be Baptist." And P. S. Hudson said: "The whole world is becoming Baptist as fast as it can with any sort of decency."

God is in our influence, in the work that we have wrought. In a special Sunday-school rally at First Church, Richmond, a historical exercise was held, in which the following dialogue formed a part:

Who was the first modern missionary? William Carey of England, a Baptist.

Who was the first missionary from America to the heathen? Adoniram Judson, a Baptist.

What denomination sent out the first Negro missionary to Africa? The Baptists.

What is the greatest book next to the Bible, and who wrote it? "Pilgrim's Progress" written by John Bunyan of England, a Baptist.

Who was the first to put the Bible in the Sunday school and have it taught by unpaid teachers? William Fox of England, a Baptist.

Who is recognized as having been the greatest preacher of modern times? Charles H. Spurgeon of England, a Baptist.

Who organized the infant class, and wrote the first book on that department in Sunday school? H. A. Howland of Boston, a Baptist.

Who was the founder of the great Baraca Class movement now enlisting hundreds of thousands of young men in the Sunday school? Marshall A. Hudson of Syracuse, N. Y., a Baptist.

Who founded the first public school system in America? John Clark of Rhode Island, a Baptist.

Who founded Vassar College, the first great institution of learning for women in America? H. P. Jewett, a Baptist, with the financial aid of Matthew Vassar, a Baptist.

Who was the first and greatest apostle of religious liberty in America? Roger Williams of Rhode Island, a Baptist.

What denomination has the largest Protestant theological seminary in the world? The Baptists, at Louisville, Ky.

What denomination was foremost in the advocacy of American independence? The Baptists.

God has been with us in our hymns of praise. Dr. Blackwell prepared a list of these which he called "The Harp of the Heart." Excerpting and rearranging a few of these, we are surprised at the richness of our Baptist contributions to this form of literature:

When the Christian world would sing of the greatness of our Lord Jesus Christ, what hymns spring first to their lips?—"Oh, could I speak the matchless worth," by Samuel Medley, a Baptist; "Majestic Sweetness sits enthroned," by Samuel Stennett, a Baptist; "My hope is built on nothing less," by Edward Mote, a Baptist.

Would we voice the craving of the human heart? We would choose: "Father, whate'er of earthly bliss," by Anne Steele, a Baptist; "There is a gate that stands ajar," by Mrs. Lydia Baxter, a Baptist; "Come thou fount of every blessing," by Robert Robinson, a Baptist; "The mistakes of my life have been many," of which the music was written by Robert Lowry, a Baptist.

Would we hymn the praises of Christ,

The Educated Man

ONE thing has become perfectly clear as a result of the war. The place of the educated man and woman in America is now fixed. The position of leadership can never be taken from them. If this had never been true before, the war has determined it now. The race may not be to the swift nor the battle to the strong, but the leadership of the world's life must be to the trained and educated men and women."

we should select, "All hail the power of Jesus' name," written by Oliver Holden, a Baptist. Of the Book of books, "Tell me the old, old story," of which the tune was written by W. H. Doane, a Baptist.

When our country would select a national hymn in which to voice our patriotism, we choose "America," by S. F. Smith, a Baptist. But space would fail us to tell of such hymns as "How firm a foundation," by Geo. Keith, a Baptist; "I need Thee every hour," by Annie S. Hawkes, a Baptist; "He leadeth me," by Joseph H. Gilmore, a Baptist; "Where is my wandering boy," by Robert Lowry, a Baptist; "The morning light is breaking," by S. F. Smith, a Baptist; and I may be permitted to add one of my dear father's hymns, "Savior, Thy dying love."

When various denominations assemble in a union meeting and wish to express the spirit of united Christian fellowship, there is only one hymn with which to voice it,—"Blest be the tie that binds," by John Fawcett, a Baptist. And when all is over and we look through the gates, we sing Robert Lowry's, "Shall we gather at the river?"

This leads me to say that we owe to the world a culture in the highest intellectual gifts. Despite the investment of our millions in education, we Baptists have fallen far behind the front rank in the education of our children and training of our ministry. The percentage of our boys and girls who go to college is shamefully small. The Congregationalists and Unitarians are far in advance of us. We who would never think of allowing a doctor who had taken a short cut into his profession to take a short cut into our appendix, will place the souls of our children and our intellectual future in the hands of a minister who has taken a short cut into the ministry. We ought to be at least as careful in the choice of a minister as we are of a cook. Our ordaining councils have a very serious indifference to answer for to the denomination. "Ignorance is not so damnable as humbug, but when it prescribes pills it may happen to do more harm." No wonder that Mark Twain says: "To be good is noble; to tell others how to be good is nobler and no trouble."

"Too Easily Satisfied"

How little literary culture there is among the masses of men! The bareness of most lives! I believe it was President Dwight of Yale who said: "The value of an education is, that it gives its possessor interesting ideas." Think of having to spend your life with a man, and that man yourself, who has no interesting ideas! To have to get up in the morning with yourself, eat breakfast with yourself, go down to business with yourself, come home with yourself, and have no company that can either furnish thought or respond to it. On many a tombstone might be carved the inscription, "Too easily satisfied." A friend of Jenny Lind, the great opera singer, who had often wondered why she retired from the stage at so early a period as forty years before her death, one day found her sitting with the Bible in her lap, and gazing at a marvelous sunset, and ventured to ask why Madame Goldschmidt had abandoned the stage: "When," answered the great artist, "it made me think every day less of that"—pointing to the sunset,—and nothing at all of this,"—pointing to her Bible,—"what else could I do?"

Baptists are to aid in teaching the world the last chapter in Christ's biography. Have you thought the last chapter in the Revelation was the close of the New Testament? You are in error. If Christ still lives, the story of that life is still being written, and Christ's friends ought to have a copy. Our denominational press conveys that thrilling story from heart-beat to printer's ink. The footsteps of his modern journeys grow every day more distinct as the world grows smaller. In the year '94, the United States sent a message of greeting for the new year to the other nations of the world. That message traveled 1,180,000 miles and was back in ten seconds. We have learned that our neighbors are not only they whose land joins ours on both sides, but also they whose land joins ours at the center of the earth. I should be ashamed not to have a Baptist paper and "Missions" on my table. They are the fifth gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Zeal and Charity

This teaching will be accompanied by a broad minded charity. The Christian life begins with zeal, and ends with charity; charity is the ripest fruit of Christian character. No man is fitted to respect the opinions of others, unless he has opinions of his own. Dr. Albert Hatcher Smith says: "The only conviction of many a church member is the conviction that he has no conviction." The Golden Rule teaches us that if we wish others to credit our sincerity, we must credit theirs. We have reason to be proud of the fact that ours is the only denomination—with a history old enough—which has never persecuted others for a difference in religious convictions. The scars of our own suffering are still too tender for us to inflict them on others. We are permitted to think for ourselves. There is no priest's padlock on our Bibles; nor does our press share the silencing cowardice that characterizes many prominent dailies, who seem to think that one-third of the church membership of America should dictate to the other 96,000,000 of our population. To the Baptists belongs the credit of establishing the legal separation of church and state in America, a separation now approved by all Protestant denominations. Thomas Jefferson said that the constitution of the United States had been founded on the teachings of the Baptists.

The mission of Baptists is a mission of loyalty. That is why we practice baptism by immersion,—in common with more than half of American Protestant church members, the form that occupies first place in the Episcopal prayer book. Close communion is not distinctively Baptist doctrine: for (1) several other denominations hold it; and (2) many Baptists reject it. Close communion holds that only those that have received some form of baptism should partake of the communion; open communion holds that every disciple, whether baptized or not, should be permitted to partake.

We ought to know why we practice immersion. Those that say: "It makes no difference what denomination you belong to" are less particular than they are about their boarding-house. If there is a piece of nonsense abroad without a keeper, it is the assertion: "It makes no difference what you believe, so that you are sincere." This theory killed a member of my first church. When I began my ministry in Denver, a nurse went to the medicine chest to bring Mrs. A. her medicine. In the dark she selected the wrong bottle, and killed her patient. It made all the difference what she believed, although she was perfectly sincere. There are four reasons why we ought to know why we practice immersion:

1. A church member never ought to believe anything just because his father or mother did. I knew a man in Connecticut who when his sons came home from

Madonna Mother

*MYSTERIOUS realm beyond the skies,
Who bears thy life in glad surprise
To bless the homes of earth and time?
Thy gift and pain, Oh mother mine.*

*Our Father's house, Oh mansion fair,
Who guides our feet to glory there?
The dearest friend of earth's fair clime,
Thy beck'ning hands, Oh mother mine.*

*Madonna of our earthly home,
Before our Heavenly Father's throne,
Protect and guide by power divine,
Thy child, Oh angel mother mine.*

W. A. Sharp.

school and said the world turns around, flew out upon such nonsense: "I will prove to you that the earth stands still," he declared; and that night he set a pan of milk on the front gate post; and showed his sons triumphantly in the morning that it had not been overturned. Yet they insisted on believing differently from their father. 2. You will be asked why Baptists divide Christendom on a mere form. 3. You may lose your children to an inferior form of faith—thousands of church members in America have no reason for the choice of their denominational preference except a social reason—and make a divided family. 4. You will be led to over-emphasize baptism. The common charge that Baptists lay more stress than other denominations on baptism, and the companion charge that Baptists believe baptism essential to salvation, are disproved by the fact that Baptists, and those that share their views, are the only denominations that require conversion first. It is historically easy to show how sprinkling and infant baptism originated: they came through an over-emphasis on baptism, through the belief that baptism was essential to salvation. In the early history of the church some men came to believe that if one died without baptism he was lost; and with that belief in view, they found themselves confronted with a convert that was ill and unbaptized; to immerse him would endanger his life; and so a substitute was invented. He was sprinkled. But suppose the infant should die unbaptized? Best to insure his safety in another world by sprinkling him in good season. How else can he be declared "a child of God?"

Set down five reasons why Baptists practice baptism by immersion:

1. It alone translates the word baptizein. This is the regular Greek word for expressing the idea of submersion. In profane literature, when a ship sinks or a man is drowned, or a dish washed, this word, or the word baptein, from which it is derived, is employed. A man asked a member of another church, a Greek scholar, "How would you say in Greek, 'I immerse you in water?'" and he answered: "Baptizo en hudati." "Then," said he, "how would you translate into English, Baptizo en hudati?" It is a significant fact that the Greek Church itself practices baptism by immersion. If our English translators had been fair, as for example, the German translators were in Luther's version of the New Testament, and used the English word dip or immerse, as the Germans used their word taufen, the confusion caused by a specially invented transliteration, baptize, would have been avoided.

The Sunlighted Grave

2. Immersion alone symbolizes burial and resurrection which. Paul twice declares, is the significance of the symbol of baptism: "We are buried therefore with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the father, so we also should walk in newness of life." It would be against the law to sprinkle earth on the head of a corpse and call it burial. If it be replied that baptism being only a symbol, a little water is as effective as more, we respond that, baptism being a symbol of burial and resurrection, sprinkling then becomes a symbol of a symbol and reduces the ordinance to a caricature.

3. Immersion is a sacrifice of pride and thus becomes, so far, a protection to the church. Other things being equal, a candidate is less likely to pass through a difficult ordinance, if insincere, than an easier one.

4. Immersion follows the example of Jesus, a decided advantage to his followers. He went down into the Jordan and John baptized him. It is inconceivable that the Lord would have entered the river, wetting his garments, in order to be sprinkled, which could better have been done on the bank. There is a deep joy in following the footsteps of Jesus into "the only grave through which the sunlight streams clear to the bottom."

5. It follows the commands of the New Testament as recorded in the Great Commission and the sermon of the Day of Pentecost, in which Peter commands: "Be baptized every one of you." When the colored man was asked: "Why are the colored people nearly all Baptists?" he answered: "Because my people hain't got sense enough to 'splain away de Scriptures." The reaction of our pedit-Baptist friends: "I do not have convictions on the matter," or, "I don't agree with you in this doctrine," are not apposite. The question is not one of anybody's convictions, or personal opinions; the question is: "Are you ready to obey Jesus Christ? or will you say to him: Lord, I love Thee, but I will not follow either Thine example or Thy teaching?"

If a union of all Christians is ever effected, let it be on the teachings of Scripture that are held in common by the majority of church members. Around the risen Christ, if at all, we shall clasp hands in Christian union. And then,

"with yonder sacred throng
We at his feet shall fall;
We'll join the everlasting throng
And crown HIM Lord of all."

The New Park Avenue Church Building

Here the church will work out its future along the same lines emphasized by Fifth Avenue Church

By EUGENE C. CARDER

THE new building of the Park Avenue Church (shown on front cover), formerly Fifth Avenue, New York, is nearing completion as rapidly as the orderly progress of the work will permit. It has, however, been in use for all services of the church and its organizations since Sunday, April 9.

The old building at 46th Street was built more than sixty years ago and the church worshipped in it all the intervening years save for a brief time a few years ago, when there was a temporary union service held with Calvary Church on West 57th Street. The building is at 593 Park Ave., corner East 64th, and is built on a comparatively small plot, 80x90 feet, so its structure entailed some problems. These have all been met in a unique and effective manner by the combined skill and personal attention and interest of the architects and builders. The cost of lot, building and equipment totals $1,416,000.

Promise for the Future

The site of the church was chosen because of the great promise of the Park Avenue section as a residential quarter of the better type and the fact that the Fifth Avenue Church has been always a family church and expects here to work out its future along much the same lines as have been before emphasized.

The building is Gothic in design. The front is supported by two large buttresses, between which is a nave window surrounded by carvings in stone embodying significant ecclesiastical and architectural symbols. The tower or belfry of the building rises through various transitions to a commanding position above the main entrance to the building. Here will later be housed a complete set of chimneys.

The plan of the church places the various departments one above the other, the main church auditorium occupying the street floor. The men's class has a large and attractive assembly room below the level of the church auditorium with a surprisingly high ceiling, a seating capacity of about 500, and an equipment adequate for every department of their work. On this floor there is a commodious kitchen fully furnished for the serving of large or small groups.

Above the nave of the main auditorium there are two full floors providing commodious quarters for the women's class, the young people's society, the women's society, the Sunday-school assembly rooms and class rooms. There is another kitchen in the rear of the women's class room designed for use in connection with all the smaller social occasions calling for dining-room service of any kind. All of these various rooms, together with the church offices and the pastor's study, are reached by two large passenger elevators which serve the nine floors, beginning with the men's auditorium below the street level and rising to the Sunday-school chapel at the top of the building.

The exterior is finished in limestone and granite. The clerestory windows are of grisaille glass in colored geometrical patterns. The large nave window on the Park Avenue end of the church is a center of interest to all who visit the edifice; first because of the beauty of the glass and the wonderful balance of the coloring; and second because of the subjects which the artist has used in his conception of a window that would fit the history and traditions of the Fifth Avenue Church and also spell out the promise of the new work at Park Avenue. There are six panels in the window each of which features the portrait of an outstanding Baptist who has made a lasting contribution to the world's life. The first figure is that of John Milton and by his side in the next panel stands in life size outline the portrait of John Bunyan. The third Englishman to find a place is William Carey who occupies one of the two central panels. Then there come the three great American Baptists, Roger Williams, Adoniram Judson, and Francis Wayland. This window is a memorial to Joel W. Mason and Mary Thomas Mason and is provided for in a bequest by their son, Joel S. Mason. The church interior is finished in imitation stone and a deep religious atmosphere has been attained by careful treatment of the various details.

The organ, a noble instrument of four manuals, with an echo organ located to the north and just above the west gallery, is being built by the Hook and Hastings Co., of Waltham, Mass. It was designed in all its detailed specifications by Mr. Archer S. Gibson in collaboration with Mr. Harold Vincent Milligan, the organist of the church. It is the gift of John B. Trevor and his sister in memory of their father, John B. Trevor.

Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin has been pastor of the church since 1912. Rev. Eugene C. Carder has been his associate for the past three years. The first pastor was George Benedict, 1831-1848. After this pastorate came Rev. Thomas Armitage, who served for forty years, 1848-1888. The Rev. W. H. P. Faunce, now president of Brown University, had a most prosperous pastorate from 1888 to 1898, he being succeeded by the Rev. Rufus Johnson, who served from 1898 to 1907. Then came the Rev. Charles F. Aked from 1907 to 1911. The Board of Trustees has included in its membership in the past John D. Rockefeller, William Rockefeller, Col. Joel S. Mason, J. A. Bostwick, Edgar L. Marston. At present the church is served in this capacity by Howard L. Ballard, Frederick A. Cole, Charles H. Paddock, Eugene McK. Froment, John D. Rockefeller Jr., Dr. D. Emmett Holt, William M. Crane, Perry C. Todd, and A. LeRoy Chipman. Mr. John F. Conney is in his fifty-second consecutive year as deacon.

A feature of the work of the Park Avenue Baptist Church from which much is expected is the young men's Bible class. This class has had a great history and continues as one of the outstanding men's classes of the country. Founded in 1884 with Charles Evans Hughes, at that time a young lawyer making his way in New York, the class has had a succession of able leaders. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., was for many years the regular teacher and continues very active in the councils of the class at this time. Arthur E. Bestor, president of the Chautauqua Institution, is the present leader.

The Park Avenue Baptist Church has an extensive program of missionary and charitable interests. To the New World Movement the church voluntarily assumed an apportionment of $1,000,000, an amount in excess of the regular apportionment of $800,000. The church has paid into the treasury of the New World Movement the past year the sum of $204,375 and is pledged to contribute similar amounts over the entire pledge period.

A Personal Evening

On Wednesday, April 19, 390 sat down to dinner in the men's class room. Following this an interesting program was carried out. Dr. Woelfkin presided and introduced as the first speaker John D. Rockefeller, Jr. To the apparent consternation, as well as to the delight of Dr. Woelfkin, Mr. Rockefeller made his remarks in a most personal and intimate vein, taking as his subject the fact that Dr. Woelfkin was that very week completing ten years as pastor of the church. At the close of his remarks he presented to the much moved and greatly beloved pastor a gold-headed cane, suitably inscribed, and made from the wood of the pulpit in the old church behind which Dr. Woelfkin had preached for the ten years of his ministry. This touch of the personal and intimate in the fellowship of the evening set the tide of interest and delight running strong and prepared the people for other experiences of joy and promise. Mr. J. Howard Ardrey spoke on the financial status of the building fund and announced that the committee had just been advised that one of the members of the church, Mr. William Rockefeller, had agreed to pay $100,000 toward the $300,000 yet to be raised to render the building and its equipment free from debt. This offer, together with the continuing offer of Mr. John D. Rockefeller and his family, to pay dollar for dollar on all funds raised, left a sum of $50,000 to be raised by the congregation in addition to the more than $200,000 already subscribed.

Winning Letter in New York "American's" Contest on Effects of Prohibition

July 6, 1921.

To the Prohibition Editor:

This county-seat of 2,000 souls, trading center of productive farming country, once supported five drinking places for folks, but none for animals. It supported a rickety jail that never lacked a multiplicity of boarders. Its peace justices, were busy; its poor-master was busier.

It was a lawyer's paradise. During court weeks the town went wild breeding more law-suits than the courts settled; and the various court sessions were so long that they nearly overlapped; so it was just one durn thing chasing another.

Now it's different. Business booms. We have a beautiful jail, often without a boarder. Poor-master isn't in our vocabulary. A solitary justice plays Rip Van Winkle. One needs seven-league boots to find a lawyer. Judges come here to rest up. We have a place or two where a horse or a long-legged dog can drink—that's all.

Yours respectfully,

Some Recent History of the Papacy and Baptist Responsibilities

Intellectually, commercially the Roman church has become a dangerous rival to state and private institutions

By D. G. WHITTINGHILL

THE Roman papacy, like all other political and religious institutions during and since the war has suffered immensely. The dissolution of Austria, the estrangement of France, Belgium and Italy—all Roman Catholic countries due to the "Germanophile" policy of Benedict—the moral supremacy of Woodrow Wilson and the economic losses because of Europe's impoverishment may all be put down to the Vatican's damage. However, notwithstanding the pope's futile efforts to obtain a representation in the Peace Congress of Versailles and subsequent conferences, he has used every possible means to regain his lost influence. The unstable conditions of Europe, both morally and materially, have greatly facilitated the Vatican's task. The breaking up of empires and the dissolution of smaller states have driven many people into the arms of what appears to be the only stable institution in Continental Europe—the Roman Catholic church.

Many Mistakes

The Roman papacy, notwithstanding its self-asserted infallibility, has made many mistakes, diplomatically and politically, in the recent past, which have contributed to its damage, but at the same time other acts have turned out to its advantage, at least for the present. Let us take note of its record in order:

1. Diplomatic gains of great importance have been made. The Vatican has nuncios, envoys and delegates in all the capitals of Europe and in many of South America, Asia and Australia. The countries recently brought into diplomatic relations with the Roman church are: England, France, Holland, Greece, Lettonia, Jugoslavia, Roumania, Czecho-Slovakia and China. In nearly all of these new states the Vatican has received special concessions. The inordinate desire of France to have the assistance of the Vatican in the Near East induced her to send Monsieur Jonnart to Rome before his appointment was actually confirmed by the French senate. Poland must always have a Roman Catholic as the head of the state! This fine piece of constitutional justice (?) was accomplished by the present Pope Pius XI while he was papal envoy at Warsaw! In Czecho-Slovakia the sailing has not been so smooth. A great many of the clergy have taken unto themselves wives, many of the better people strongly desire a national, independent church while the services are conducted to a large extent in the native tongue. This state of affairs is, of course, greatly irritating to Rome, but the memories of John Huss and the energetic work of the present Protestant president will be most difficult to counteract.

Not only in this state but in others in the Near East the democratic principles characterizing these republics have made negotiations with Rome very difficult. However, the papacy seems inclined to yield now to local conditions in order to increase its influence and obtain precious political advantages. The Vatican above all things desires to maintain its "dignity and liberty of action!"

Today the Roman church has one of the most numerous and important diplomatic corps in the world. This intense seeking for diplomatic relations with the new states began during the war. In this period Lloyd George sent a representative to Benedict XV. For some reason, not approved by everybody in England, he is still retained in Rome! It may be because, as Jonnart says, "the Vatican is the finest observatory in the world." Even free America has been invited to fall in line with the other nations, but President Harding very wisely said that he could see no good reason for such action.

2. Politics has been the Vatican's special field of activity for centuries. The last pope was preeminently a politician. The present one promises to follow in his train as he has retained the former secretary of state—Cardinal Gasparri—a thing almost unheard of heretofore. The clerical party, though not the most numerous, holds the balance of power in parliament. The socialists, unlike their companions in Germany and France, have always refused to work in harmony with the government papacy. Many who have hitherto been unfavorable to the Vatican's claims seem to desire to make peace between the Quirinal and the Vatican. The obstacles to such a reconciliation are very great and indeed almost insurmountable. The papacy would prefer to have the famous question settled by an international agreement, but the Italian government could hardly submit to such a solution without compromising its dignity and prestige as a sovereign state. Patriotic Italians, however, are not very anxious to make peace with the Vatican even when so much is at stake in a material way. They have not had time yet to forget and forgive the extreme partiality shown by the papacy to the Central Empires during the world war. A parliamentary investigation clearly brought out the proof that the revolutionary socialists and the papacy were the chief causes of the great military disaster of Caporetto! If it were necessary the writer could bring forth other proofs of the baneful influence of the Roman church in Italian national politics.

3. Socially the Roman pontiff has left nothing undone to reassert himself in the midst of universal chaos. The recent founding of the Catholic University of the Sacred Heart at Milan with great pomp and marked solemnity cannot be passed over as a thing of little importance. In fact, this event has caused both alarm and diffidence, especially among the liberal elements. At present this school has two faculties: philosophic and juridico social. The professors propose to "educate the heart and elevate the souls of men" as well as to prepare them for the ordinary duties of civil life. The rationalistic, if not atheistic atmosphere generally surrounding the state universities and the manifest apathy of both faculty and students so evident since the war, have created a demand for an institution with high Christian ideals. The Roman Catholics have been wise enough to seize such an opportunity.

A Dangerous Rival

Private schools in convents and monasteries abound everywhere, many magazines and newspapers devoted to the spiritual and material interests of the church are published in every part of the nation while multitudes of books and tracts are widely diffused. Even the cinematograph is largely used to extend the power of the Roman church. The political press is also to a considerable extent under the influence of the Vatican. Frequent communications from the clergy, including the pope and bishops, keep the interests of the church constantly before the people.

Not only intellectually but commercially and industrially the Roman church has become a dangerous rival to state and private institutions. Banks, employment agencies, compartment stores, insurance companies, "holy shops" for the sale of religious objects, distilleries, manufactures and farming represent some of the many agencies of this many-sided institution. As it is evident, all of these activities in civil life tend to bind multitudes

The Value of Play

IN their play children learn to observe quickly, to judge, to weigh values, to pick out essentials, to give close attention; they learn the value of cooperation, to recognize the rights of others as well as to insist on their own being recognized; they learn the meaning of freedom through law; they learn the value and function of work and the joy of accomplishment. No wonder that play is regarded by many as the most important educational factor of them all. A child who does not play not only misses much of the joy of childhood, but he can never be a fully developed adult. He will lack in many of the qualities most worth while because many of the avenues of growth were unused and neglected during the most plastic period of his life.

Nosworthy and Whitley in "The Psychology of Childhood."

which fact has given a magnificent opportunity to the Roman church to make itself felt in national affairs. Unfortunately the papacy has never forgotten the "wrongs" which it suffered in 1870 and is patiently awaiting the opportunity to acquire its lost temporal power. The last cabinet crisis was uselessly and indefinitely prolonged by the preposterous claims and dictatorial attitude of the clerical party. The control of the public school system is doubtless one of the principal aims of the Vatican. As a proof of the above assertion the clericals have compelled the prime minister, Hon. Facta, to accept one of their member as minister of public instruction!

The "Roman question" has been brought to the front of late by the friends of the by material ties to the Roman church. Boycotts, strikes, underselling and similar arms are frequently used by the "holy church" to further its ends.

4. Religiously the Roman church has both gained and lost as a result of the war. The general state of misery and uncertainty has driven many, hitherto indifferent, into the arms of the church, while others, whose philosophy of life in these troublesome times has not been able to square the circle of human existence, have given themselves to "the world, the flesh and the devil." Doubtless many of Rome's adherents remain faithful to her because of the "loaves and fishes" which are offered to them in the form of hospitals, orphanages, asylums, endowments, dowries for poor girls, scholarships, pilgrimages and many other kinds of material help. While the church gives freely with one hand, with the other she receives just as much, if not more. Legacies, donations, lotteries, public and private collections, the sale of religious objects, the price of religious services such as baptism, communion, marriage, burial, indulgences, sacred vows, miracle-cures, prayers for the dead, Peter's pence and especially state aid all contribute to fill her coffers. Without doubt church attendance has greatly increased since the war both among Catholics and Protestants. It is a great pity that Catholics cannot have more of the Gospel and less of "varnished paganism" when they attend church!

The above represents briefly, and consequently inadequately, the most important conquests of the Vatican in the recent past in Europe and at the same time gives a general view of the present state of the Roman church in Italy. What is true of Italy would apply to every state in continental Europe except Germany, Scandinavia, Holland and Switzerland. In eastern Europe where the Greek church has dominated hitherto, the confusion and general corruption seem to be as bad as it is in Latin countries. Between the eastern patriarchs and the Roman pontiff there is little to choose!

The present favorable state of affairs in which Romanism finds itself is due almost exclusively to the following causes: (1) The union of church and state; (2) a marvellous organization; (3) state aid; (4) a Jesuitical policy of "all things to all men"; (5) a subservient press; (6) a superb equipment—cathedrals, churches, convents, schools and parsonages—representing masterpieces of architecture, sculpture, painting, music and fine tailoring; (7) social prestige; (8) a loose system of morals; (9) numerous and various works of charity.

Europe since the war has been declared by many to be the greatest mission field in the world! In some respects this is true. Baptist responsibilities are as great as the needs of Europe. Our doctrines are peculiarly adapted to improve the religious, social and political conditions of this continent. On this point we are all agreed. But how are we to do this great work? We have just seen how strongly entrenched are the Roman and Greek Catholic churches in this field. We also know something about the means and methods hitherto used especially by the Roman church to accomplish its purposes. With our limited means and personnel what hopes of success may we count on? We cannot "fight the devil with fire" without compromising ourselves! We neither have nor desire state aid. Even if it were desirable, we have not the means to do "social work" on a large scale. Will the simple preaching of the gospel by illy prepared men in obscure places in hired walls meet the present requirements of Europe? Without doubt the various missionary societies working in Europe have already answered this question and are doing their best to overcome these difficulties.

In my humble opinion two things are of the utmost importance at present: theological education and literature, both occasional and periodical. Local training schools in each country are not sufficient. We need two or three institutions for higher theological education to complete the work of the local schools. The Roman church has constantly brought her best men from foreign parts to Rome where they study in schools like the "Propaganda Fide" or the Gregorian University. The wisdom of this could hardly be doubted.

As to literature we are all agreed that the churches must be supplied.

What is equally important is a large amount of periodical literature, especially weeklies, for the general public instruction regarding our doctrines. Only by means of the press can we reach the better classes as we have done so successfully in Italy. Today Baptists are better known than any other denomination which fact is mostly due to our press. Our two reviews and two newspapers are read by thousands in this country, not to mention readers in every country in Europe except Russia!

An Order for the Reception of New Members

By HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

I WANDERED into a prayer meeting the other night, where thirty young people were being received into church membership on confession of faith and twenty adults by letters from other churches. The service was so impressive and interesting that it ought to be passed on to other Baptist churches.

The chairman of the board of deacons stated that the group coming by letter from other churches had presented their letters; that these had been duly examined and that those who were coming before the church were heartily recommended by the board of deacons for membership. He then called the roll, and as each one's name was called he or she arose and remained standing until the whole twenty were on their feet. The minister then spoke as follows:

"Dearly Beloved: You have come among us as a confessed follower of our common Lord and Master Jesus Christ, and have signified to us your desire to enter the fellowship of this church, and to unite with us in work for the extension of his kingdom. We welcome you most heartily to our church life and service, and pray that our association may bless both your life and ours. It is our earnest desire that this Christian fellowship shall exist not only in name, but in deed and in truth. As you come among us, therefore, we would ask you to make answer faithfully to the following questions:

"Do you here reaffirm your public confession of Jesus Christ as your Saviour, and your promise to obey him as your Lord and Master?

"Do you reconsecrate yourself in all sincerity to the kingdom of God; do you again resolve to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with your God; and are you ready to spend and be spent for those for whom Christ died?

"Do you promise to be a faithful member of this church, to be earnest in prayer and in the study of the Scriptures, to be present regularly in the House of God, to increase the church's usefulness by your service, and to adorn its fellowship with a life of love?"

As he finished, the chairman of the board of deacons began again to call the roll. As each one's name was called, he answered "I do." When the twenty had responded, the pastor said, "And may the blessing of God rest on our fellowship."

Following this the chairman of the board of deacons stated that those who were coming on confession of faith had already met the board; that they had given an intelligent account of the faith that was in them, and that it was the conviction of the board that all who were presenting themselves were ready for church membership. The deacon then called the roll, as before, and all the young people rose. Then the minister said:

"Dearly Beloved: You have come among us at this time to confess Jesus Christ as your Lord and Master; you have signified to us your desire to enter the fellowship of this church, and to unite with us in work for the extension of his kingdom. We welcome you most heartily to our church life and service, and pray that our association may bless both your life and ours. It is our earnest desire that this Christian fellowship shall exist not only in name, but in deed and in truth. As you come among us, therefore, we would ask you to make answer faithfully to the following questions:

"Do you here make public confession of your faith in Jesus Christ as your Saviour, and do you promise to obey him as your Lord and Master?

"Do you consecrate yourself in all sincerity to the kingdom of God; do you resolve to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with your God; and are you ready to spend and be spent for those for whom Christ died?

"Do you promise to be a faithful member of this church, to be earnest in prayer and in the study of the Scriptures, to be present regularly in the house of God, to increase the church's usefulness by your service, and to adorn its fellowship with a life of love?"

Following this the deacon again called the roll, and each one answered "I do." Then, while all remained standing, a prayer of consecration was offered.

It seems that this is the regular order for the reception of new members, and that to each one, as the right hand of fellowship is given, is presented a card on which are printed the words used by the minister, with space for the signature of the member, and that of the pastor and the chairman of the board of deacons. These cards are kept as reminders of what they have promised, by those who come into the church.

The Open Forum

TITHING OR NON-TITHING STEWARDS

Two recent articles in the Open Forum have opposed a tithing stewardship. In both instances the writers have put up men of straw. Tithing is neither Jewish nor Christian stewardship in the sense in which the writers refer to it. Stewardship is more than tithing. Tithing refers to substance only. Stewardship refers to the whole life in all its relations. Christians who are tithing do so as an expression of the stewardship of their substance, and as an acknowledgment of God's ownership of all things and not because of any Jewish laws about tithing, or Jewish practice of tithing. Tithing is a divine law that reaches back to the origin and meaning of worship itself and was observed centuries before the Jewish nation had an existence. Nor is there any hint or suggestion anywhere that this primary divine law has ever been abrogated. It has just as much claim on men today as it ever had.

Giving according to prosperity is not a new thing peculiar to the dispensation of grace. "Every man shall give as he is able according to the blessing of Jehovah thy God which he hath given thee." Deut. 16:17.

Much is made of the old worn-out contention that tithing is a great hardship and "a grave injustice" to those with small incomes. But it will be time enough to present this objection to tithing when these anti-tithing writers discover any small-income tithers who are complaining that tithing is a great hardship. We challenge them to find a single instance to strengthen their contention. Tithers are the happiest givers in the world. Nobody needs to complain for them. At the same time it is a fact that hundreds of small-income tithing stewards, when blessed with substantially increased incomes, have increased the percentage of their giving. Non-tithing givers are notably slower to do that than are tithers, and so the giving according to prosperity fails to work with those who are supposed to be governed by that principle.

If there is any meaning or force, any point or pertinence, in the contention that Christian stewardship does not, and should not, include tithing and that "we should give according to our prosperity" (which means one thing to one man and quite another to another), it will follow, of course, that by Christian stewardship that rules tithing out much more will be given than is given by tithers. But it isn't. The facts are, and they have been proved again and again, that tithing stewards give from twice to four times as much as so-called Christian stewards who do not tithe. This whole anti-tithing contention fails to produce results and is all too often an excuse to cover over the downright meanness and stinginess of some professing Christians. That class readily grasp the argument in defense of their niggardly selfishness. The legitimate conclusion of the contention is that haphazard and go-as-you-please giving is more honoring to God, and more according to the grace of God, than faithful tithing stewardship is. It leads also to the conclusion that small-income people should be excused from giving altogether.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION

Science, a true science, is not the enemy of religion but the friend and handmaid of religion. It is not the concealer of God but the revealer. Science leads us into the holy of holies of God's existence and presence. The astronomer from his observatory looks out beyond the stars and discovers the infinity of God's universe. The physicist in his laboratory looks through his microscope and he, too, in the atom discovers the same infinity. In what we call life the biologist in the one-celled organism at the beginning of life finds immortality. He finds immortality at the beginning, as the theologian by his logic of facts discovers it, and the Christian by the experience and witness of God and eternal life knows it in his soul. The chemist breaks up and breaks down that which we call matter. In doing this he arrives at that which is not matter but at that which in the electron can best be described as a point of force.

The unbelief that the scientist discovers in the study of the facts of life is the unbelief that is in his own heart. For he who seeks God and wishes to find God that he may worship God, love and serve God will find God everywhere. But he who does not wish to find God that he may worship, love and serve, will not find God anywhere. That man is blind. Though God present himself before his face he sees him not because he is blind. Like Herod seeking the infant Jesus he fails, and for the same reasons, the sin, the selfish ambition, the murderous purpose of the heart. He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is the Rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

God's Sunshine

*SOME murmur when their sky is clear
And wholly bright to view—
If one small speck of dark appear
In their great heaven of blue.
And some with thankful love are filled
If but one streak of light,
One ray of God's mercy, gild
The darkness of their night.*

—Richard Chenevix Trench.

THE HOSPITAL PASTOR

After due consultation with a number of representative and prominent physicians of Omaha, it was deemed wise that the writer visit certain specialists at the Mayo Clinic. Thus it happened to be my good fortune to arrive with many others on March 22 in the city of Rochester, Minn., all in the eager quest of health. There I found help and everything done that could be done for my welfare. Delightfully pleased was I to meet on the day of my arrival the town pastor, Rev. J. H. Beaven, who was willing and ready to render any possible assistance.

Considering the daily throngs and the consequent impending duties involved Mr. Clark, the hospital Baptist pastor, must have his time fully occupied; nevertheless I was agreeably surprised and made happy by his early visit in my room. The permanent value of such a visit is the effectiveness of the unique service rendered. His conversation was radiant with the light and liberty of the gospel. As he prayed one realized the immanence of our blessed Redeemer and most gracious Lord. What a benediction is a visit from such a ripe saint! The imparting of a ray of divine light to the weary pilgrim is calming like the smile of God. How cordial is the welcome even of the poorest and most loathsome sufferer to the voice of Christian sympathy! Thankful we may well be as we daily remember in our prayers the sick and the departing who have the watchcare of this faithful soul-specialist. It cannot be said of the Minnesota Baptists or of Mr. Clark by the sick body and soul at Rochester. "No man careth for my soul."

WEST OF BUFFALO

I am glad that you have opened the question of bringing the denominational headquarters farther west. For the unity of the denomination, for efficiency and for economy it must be done. No doubt there were good reasons for going to New York, but those reasons have passed away along with the Interchurch Movement and similar inevitable results of post-war conditions.

I believe that the general workers would welcome a change, and I know all the great West and Central West would. New York City seems a long distance from the West, but more than that, it is not a normal American city. Religious conditions are depressing. Problems there have but little in common with those of the rest of the land. Residence there has a tendency to unfit the workers for the wisest consideration of the great national problems of the denomination. New York is strikingly provincial, and this is a handicap to our workers. So let us move to "somewhere west of Buffalo."

The Chimney Corner

Long Live the Little Prince of Wails

ISADORE PROSNOVITCH had no use for babies. You could rave all you cared to about their ten small fingers curling like the tendrils of a vine, or about their dear little mouths looking like pink rosebuds,—Isadore would look at you politely out of his solemn blue eyes and say calmly: "Maybe! I guess me baby don't got none of them things, missus."

And when once you hear about Isadore's baby you can't be surprised that he had his own dark view of infants under two years old; for the truth of the matter is that Isadore's mother and Isadore's father, as well as Isadore's brothers and sisters were away from home working all day long, so the entire job of "minding" this particular baby fell on poor solemn five-year-old Isadore. Moreover there are babies and babies. Isadore's was the other kind: the kind that squalled and bawled and wailed and howled and fretted and fussed until the neighbors wore frowns an inch deep in their foreheads and wished that baby was 10,000 miles away. But that is nothing to the wish poor Isadore had!

Yet every day he did his solemn best to startle the baby into forgetting to cry. It would have made your heart ache to see him go through his few little tricks. When the baby first began to wail, Isadore would solemnly turn somersaults from one end of the kitchen to the other, and the wailing stopped as long as the somersaults lasted. But the moment Isadore grew exhausted there was a howl that could be heard a mile away.

"Vell," Isadore would sigh, "now I tink I better joost stan' on me head."

So very solemnly and elaborately he stood on his head as long as ever he could, and the baby was quiet to watch him. But surely you know about how blood rushes to one's head in that upside-down position, and when poor Isadore was forced to stand upright the cruel baby wailed and whined and roared until the frantic neighbors banged on the walls and the floors above to show their disapproval.

"Vell," sighed Isadore, "I tink now I takes you down on the alley." So he tottered carefully down the steps with the heavy baby in his arms, then sat on the curb with the baby on his knee pointing out stray dogs and peddlers' carts and passers-by who might amuse the cross-patch child. And it is here that Miss Jennie found him.

Miss Jennie was a helper in the Christian Center and she thought it was a sight to cry over to watch such a very little boy play nursemaid to such a very wailing baby. So straightway she led them to the Center where she hoped a bath would help to quiet the loud wails!

With mingled horror and delight Isadore watched her preparations as she filled a tub with water, water that looked very, very hot—for the little clouds of steam sailed upward toward the ceiling. "I tink she must be going to boil the baby," he whispered to himself, "she vill boil him like potatoes is boiled, und he vill die!" But he said nothing. Not one single word. He simply watched and watched, as she laid out towels and soap and a small round can. Then she undressed the baby who squalled his wailing as he looked hopefully at that square and solemn brother-person, who at wails like these really ought to stand on his nice yellow head. But no, Isadore had handed over all responsibility to the crisp white nurse; so the clothes that had been sewed on to stay all winter were ripped off regardless of howls and yells and frantic squeals. But just as the nurse was ready to put the little cross-patch in the tub, Isadore simply had to say: "Vell, I tink this vill kill him sure!" And somehow, there was a certain satisfied accent in his voice that made the nurse swing around on her heel and stare at Isadore doubtfully.

"Isadore," she said severely, "surely you wouldn't want to lose your dear little baby brother, would you?"

He stared back at her out of his honest blue eyes. "Yes'm," he admitted, "if it's all the same to you'm, please."

"Oh, but that's wicked, cruelly wicked!" she cried.

"Yes'm," agreed Isadore, his eyes as honest as ever. For what did this lady in white understand about babies anyhow? Wait till she knew his baby and heard the very worst of his wails which could last hours on hours. But the lady evidently decided the bath had better come first, then conversation; so into the water she plunged the astonished baby who was actually speechless with the shock at first, then utterly furious. But in spite of squalls the lady saw her duty, and she did it! Oh, how she lathered soft soap-suds all over that baby's body—how she doused it with fresh water—how she rubbed it dry with a towel—then covered it with sweet powder. After which came a clean little night dress. And wonder of wonders, that baby began to coo.

Isadore leaned nearer. Yes, it was a bona fide coo! Next the baby began sucking on a bottle of warm milk, and actually . . . dozed . . . off . . . to . . . sleep. It was beyond belief! Isadore held his breath as the lady laid this contentment personified in a crib, and then led Isadore into another room where they sat down.

"How old are you, Isadore?" the lady asked.

"Goin' onto five'm," he answered.

She sighed at his solemn face: "Have you ever played, dear? Or smiled? Or laughed?"

"Vell, once I laughed," Isadore said, "once I hides me baby under a store counter and I tinks: 'now I lose him for sure,' und I smiles on the lady what keeps that store und she smiles on me as I hurries out. But just then the baby he squawk something fierce, und the storekeeper she guess what I done—tryin' to lose him on her, so she says to me: 'I'll learn you not to smile no more, you awful little brudder.' Und she puts spankings on me something terrible. So I don't smile no more on nobody, see?"

The missionary lady sighed: "Oh, Isadore, you can smile on me safely, dear, for we are going to be friends. And I'll even make you come to love that poor baby. Did you know he only wailed because his clothes were mussy and sticky, and because he was fed—well, what did you feed him, anyhow?"

Isadore put his head on one side, trying to remember: "Vell, I tink he eat most anything what's left over, like coffee und sausage und pickles und cheese—"

"Horrors!" gasped the lady when she heard this list of all-wrong things, and carefully explained about a diet of milk to make babies smiling and pleasant and lovable. Isadore tried his solemn best to listen, but his eyes kept wandering around the fascinating room where pictures and playthings and even the little tables seemed made especially for someone his size. And no sooner had he

Slumber Song

By ALAN LESLIE

HUSH thee! my little one, if you would hear
The stealthy old Sandman drawing near;
Coming this way on velvet-clad feet,
Softly, quietly,
creep, creep, creep!

High over head he waves his hand,
Filling the air with golden sand;
While heavy lids droop and are weighted down
O'er eyes of blue,
of gray and brown.

The Sandman smiles through the sifting sand
And scurries away to Slumberland,
Knowing that eyes that laugh and weep, Held fast in Dreamland will sleep, sleep, sleep!

—"Good Housekeeping."

thought this than the lady delightfully said: "This is the kindergarten room where you are going to play every single morning from now on, Isadore, while your baby stays in our Day Nursery with fifty other babies whose mothers are working. Won't this be a good plan?"

"Vell, all right," gulped Isadore, "only vill you learn me how to play?"

So with love and care and friendliness, Isadore lost his solemnness; and the helpers in our mission did their level best to make him love the baby whom they nicknamed "the little Prince of Wails" (W...a...i...l...s, of course!) but who had lost his wail by this time, and had a rosebud mouth and tendril fingers.

Moreover, Isadore's mother came to visit the Center and this is what she said after she had been all over the building: "Ven my little Issy, he tell me of the place he comes on, every morgen, I slaps him hard und tinks he makes me one grand lie. 'Ach, there ain't no such a place,' I says, 'cept maybe up in heaven mit angels to wash dirty kids und play mit stupid little boys! But now, missus, I sees it heaven on earth, this building, mit room for everybody. Say? Dast I bring the odder kids what works in factories? Dast they join a class at night und learn them how to sew? Or maybe I ask so much, yes?"

But you know the answer! And today the Prosnovitches, big and little, flock to that Center of ours as eagerly as the little Prince of Wails, himself; as for Isadore, he not only knows how to play, but has learned a number of stories to make him appreciate babies better:—stories of the baby Moses in the bulrushes, and of the baby Jesus in a manger, and of other babies whom this same Jesus, later on, held in His arms and blessed.

"I tells you what I tinks," says Isadore with his solemn smile, "I tinks those there Baptists what builds us this here Center has blessed all the little kids joost like Jesus onct done it!"

And I agree with him, don't you?

The Young Reserves

The T. Y. Children

ONCE upon a time there was a Lady-Who-Did-Something-For-A-Certain-Child. A delightful little "something" that was tied up in a delightful little box and fastened with a delightful little ribbon. It had been lots of fun to get it ready and this Lady-Who-Did-Something-For-A-Certain-Child thought what immense fun it would be for the child to untie that ribbon and jiggle that box before opening it, not to mention the fun of the "something" itself! So off she sent it.

Now part of the fun of sending off delightful boxes is being thanked for them afterwards, of course. I am sure you have discovered this for yourself many a time; so you can't blame this lady for thinking whenever the telephone rang: "Very likely that is Sarah to thank me for the box."

But it was just the butcher about the steak, the first time. And the next time it was the shoemaker about a bill.

Then when the postman came to the door with a letter she thought: "From Sarah, of course, about the box."

But it was from the baker advertising chocolate cookies!

So then she remembered how busy Sarah was—school and playtimes and music lessons and practicing and meals to eat and hands to wash....it took time for a girl to think up a letter, such a letter as this unexpected little "something" deserved, and maybe telephoning was not in Sarah's line.... She would probably have to wait a bit longer to learn how Sarah liked surprises.

And the dreadful part of this story is that she is still waiting!!! For all this happened last January, while May is now here! Of course there is always a sequel to tales of this kind, and the sequel to this one is that in April Sarah fell sick.

The kind of sickness that kept her in bed for week after week. It was very dull and tiresome lying in bed, and some of Sarah's friends (young and old) thought what fun it would be to send Sarah one surprise a day! Something for her to look forward to; the little scheme had been going on for nine days (a "nine day's wonder" such as you read of in books, I think!) when Sarah naturally caught on.

"Something comes every single day!" she chuckled, and on the tenth day it was only natural for her to be on the look-out for the tenth surprise. But she waited and waited and waited and waited and waited....in fact, to cut a long day short, she waited till bedtime and nothing came. Nothing!

"Oh!" cried Sarah into her pillow, "I thought it would be a nice surprise again." And the next day she told her dearest friend that not a single surprise had come; this friend looked much mystified, saying in a puzzled way: "Now isn't that the strangest thing? For that was Mrs. Bright's day, and she's the cleverest, dearest person to think up surprises. Such pretty ones, such dainty ones, all tied up in funny little boxes with cunning little ribbons. She loves doing things like that. Sometimes she does them out of a clear sky, for no reason at all except that she loves children. You know, Sarah, I think she must have plain forgotten you. I can't think of any other reason, can you?"

Sarah said no, she couldn't! But all that day she knew in her heart of hearts why Mrs. Bright had not sent another present; and that night at bedtime she told her mother all about it.

"But Sarah, I told you to write and thank her, dear," said her mother.

"I k-kept m-meaning t-to, b-but I f-for-got," cried Sarah. "I'll do it the minute I can sit up in bed to write. It's five months late already, oh dear! oh dear!"

For Sarah has now joined the ranks of the T. Y. children, and often says this little poem to herself:

"Hearts, like doors, open with ease

To very, very little keys,

Never forget that two of these

Are: 'I thank you!' and 'If you please!'"

If there were more Thank-You children in the world there would be dozens of lovely surprises coming their way, you see!

Have You a Little Imp in Your Home?

IF YOU don't believe in fairies, and the elves are not your friends, And you have no faith in brownies or in gnomes,

Let me give you just a glimpse

Of the ugly little IMPS

That invade today so many happy homes.

IMPoliteness is an IMP whom every child should try to shun,

And older people too, without a doubt.

IMPatience is another

Who will cause you lots of bother

'Less you send him quickly to the right-about.

IMPertinence and IMPudence are naughty little twins,

And, oh, it is astonishing to see

The mischief that they do;

And, my dear, if I were you,

Their comrade I would never, never be.

One little IMP will sit astride a pencil or a pen

Whene'er there is a problem hard in view,

And draw his mouth way down

And whine out with a frown,

"IMPossible, IMPossible to do!"

IMPrudence and IMPenitence and IMP-ulse are three more

(Though the latter is not always under-ban);

And there are more, no doubt,

Who are hovering about

To get us into mischief if they can.

Of little foxes you have heard, who spoil the lovely vines.

These ugly IMPS are dangerous, too, you see.

Let us raise a battle-shout!

We may put them all to rout!

Oh, what a glorious victory that would be! —Pauline Frances Camp, in St. Nicholas.

WORK IN THE PHILIPPINES
Matt. 13:44-46

Available Literature

Send to the Literature Department of the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City, or 125 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill., for the following leaflets: "The Bible and Kindergarten Training School," 5 cents; "Miss Suman's Brownies," 2 cents; "The Philippines: Missionary Cameraplogs," 10 cents; "The Philippine Islands: Missionary Surveys," free; "Rafaelo and Seven Bells," 5 cents; "Map of the Philippine Islands showing our Baptist mission stations," 35 cents.

I. Description of the Islands

The Philippine Archipelago consists of a group of 3141 islands lying off the eastern coast of Asia. In area they measure 115,000 square miles, or a little more than the state of Arizona. They are in the same latitude as South India or Central America. The surface is rugged and mountainous. There are twelve active volcanoes in the group.

The climate is tropical. The temperature ranges from 70 to 100 degrees. The wet season during which the rainfall is heavy, usually occurs between July and November. Violent storms are frequent. The coolest period of the year comes in our winter months, though Christmas might seem like a summer day to us. The spring months are the dry season in the Philippines.

The mountain sides and hills are covered with an abundant growth of trees, shrubs, and undergrowth. The rarest of orchids and beautiful palms grow profusely. The principal agricultural products are tropical fruits, coconuts, rice, tobacco, hemp and sugar. Fine timberlands abound. Coal, iron, copper, and a number of the less common ores are found in the mines.

II. People

Only about 400 islands of the Philippine group are inhabited. The total population is about 9,000,000. The original inhabitants were Negritos. Seven-eighths of the present population are of Malayan stock blended with Spanish immigrants. Socially they are divided into two classes, landowners and peasants.

The characteristic Filipino is small and slender in build, has a yellowish-brown complexion, high cheek bones, and very bright black eyes. The warm, humid climate accounts for the slowness and indolence of the people. They are responding well, however, to education and industrial training. Many bright minds are being discovered and dormant powers are awakening.

III. History and Government

The islands were discovered by Ferdinand Magellan and named for Philip II of Spain. Spanish rule never was peaceful or successful. Revolution and strife, religious and political, characterized the period until the victory of Admiral Dewey in 1898 placed the people under the American flag. It is the American policy to educate and prepare the native inhabitants as rapidly as possible for self-government.

IV. Government Education

The government has established a public school system patterned after that of America. The legislature has within recent years set aside $15,000,000 for primary and intermediate schools. A university has been established at Manila.

V. Religion

The aborigines, or Negritos, are pagan. Fire-worship, ancestor-worship, and spiritism thrive among them. The Asiatic Malays hold to Mohammedan traditions. Charms are widely believed in. Some tribes practice witchery. Some have a "medicine man."

Under the Spanish rule Catholicism was forced upon the people. Beautiful cathedrals were erected, but lives were untouched.

VI. Protestant Missionary Work

Dr. J. B. Rodgers, a Presbyterian, was the first Protestant missionary regularly appointed for work in the Philippines. He began his work April 21, 1899. May 2, 1900, Rev. Eric Lund arrived on the field as the first Baptist missionary.

Dr. Lund had worked a number of years in Barcelona, Spain. He took with him a young Filipino, Braulio Manikan, whom he had met at Barcelona. The latter, a Roman Catholic priest, had lost his faith, departed from the Philippines to study civil engineering in Europe when he met an English Baptist business man who led him to Christ. Baptized by Dr. Lund, they went together to establish a missionary work among his own people. They translated tracts and the Gospel according to Mark into his native language, the Visayan, and later completed the translation of the New Testament.

Nine months after the work was started 13,000 peasants signed a statement and presented it to the missionaries, to the effect that they were Protestants, and pleaded for the gospel to be preached to them. Other denominations entered the field and the islands were divided among them in order to prevent duplication. Baptists are especially responsible for Panay, Negros and Samar. The first Protestant house of worship dedicated in the Philippine Islands was a small bamboo chapel at Jaro.

Iloilo, capital of Panay Island, is one of the largest cities in the Philippine Islands. It has a population of 32,000 and forms the center of a field of two hundred thousand. In this territory are thirty-four Baptist churches with 2,077 members. The latest report (1921) gives 183 baptisms for the preceding year. There are fourteen schools, the most noted of which is the Boys' Industrial School at Jaro, two miles from Iloilo. The Bible and Kindergarten Training School for girls also is located at Jaro, making it a Baptist stronghold. Baptists and Presbyterians have united in the maintenance of a hospital and nurses' training school at Iloilo.

Work in Bacolod, a prominent city on the west coast of Negros, was begun a year later, 1901. A substantial chapel has been erected there. Dormitories, a private academy for boys, a kindergarten, and a dispensary are maintained in Bacolod. Four hundred thousand people inhabit this field. There are twenty-nine Baptist churches in their midst, with 1,760 members, 253 baptisms, and nineteen schools.

Capiz is also located on the Panay Island, on the northern coast. A hospital, a "Home School" for boys and girls, and a self-supporting church comprise the work of this center. Surrounding territory contains a population of 325,000, with seventeen churches, 1,080 members, sixty-five baptisms, and five schools.

Latest available statistics (1921) give a total of eighty Baptist churches in the islands having a total of 4,917 members. Five hundred and one baptisms were reported. Thirty-eight schools are maintained, enrolling 1,920 pupils. Six families and nine single women, aided by 173 native workers, were laboring in the Philippines at the time the survey was made—Adapted from Service.

"The Strategy of Foch"

This will be the subject of an address to be delivered by Rev. Bernard C. Clausen, pastor of First Church, Syracuse, N. Y., before the young people of Chicago Baptist Association, at First Church, Elgin, the evening of June 1. Under the leadership of Mr. John Singleton, president of Chicago City B. Y. P. U., special cars will be provided over the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, leaving Chicago about 6 o'clock, standard time.

Registrations for the St. Paul Convention, June 28 to July 2 are now pretty close to the high-water mark of 6,000. For information regarding the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis, write to Twin City Committee, 307 Lowry Annex, St. Paul, Minnesota.

North and South

The B. Y. P. U. Rally of Grand Island Association was held at Gibbon, April 20. The principal speakers were Rev. A. C. Hull, Director J. D. Collins, Profs. R. B. Stevens and Archie Taylor of Grand Island College. The Karney and Grand Island societies dramatized "Do Little and Do Much Societies."

Rev. Joseph T. Watts, B. Y. P. U. Secretary of Virginia, presents a very suggestive associational program in the issue of the Religious Herald of April 20. He gives large place to the young people themselves.

Dr. R. H. Pitt, editor of the Religious Herald, published in Richmond, Va., has been putting in some good licks for Baptist young people in his defense of Baptist schools. Who wants to send his boy to a school where the attitude of the closed mind is forced upon him? A closed mind is not only not necessary to a vital Christian faith, it is a positive detriment.

The American Baptist Publication Society has prepared a program for Children's Day, June 11, entitled "The Service of Love." Many of our young people are teachers in the Sunday School. We urge them to make the day a great success. All orders should be addressed to the Society, 1701 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Over 300 young people attended the training school of the city B. Y. P. U. of Columbus, Ga., held the week of March 26. Miss Massey is a president of unusual ability. Good work for a city union organized only six months ago.

Fifteen B. Y. P. U.'s of Georgia have qualified under the AA-1 Standard. These unions are "Standard" plus.

The City B. Y. P. U. Training School held in Dallas, Tex., Feb. 26-March 3, enrolled 1,476 in the various study classes.

Maryland Baptists have enrolled 1,750 tithe to date. The state goal was 3,000. State Secretary Aler assisted in a B. Y. P. U. Institute held March 26-31 in the Fifth Church, Washington, D. C.

Dr. Agar of the General Board of Promotion of the N. B. C. was one of the speakers

The thirty-sixth annual state Christian Endeavor Convention of New Jersey will be held at Trenton, October 4-6, 1922. A comprehensive program is being planned.

New England Baptist Young People are already looking forward to the coming of the national convention to Boston in 1923. New England's invitation will more than likely be accepted by the board of managers of the Baptist Young People's Union of America.

Under the direction of the department of religious education, Indiana Convention, Rev. U. S. Clutton, chairman, a series of training schools for church vacation school workers are being held. Indianapolis, April 18-21; Bedford, April 24-26;

Terre Haute, May 1-3; Alexandria, May 8-10; Greensburg, May 11-13; Elkhart, May 15-17; Madison, May 22-24.

The church vacation school presents a very fine opportunity for members to render a great service during the summer months. "How to Conduct a Church Vacation School" by Gage is the standard text-book on the subject; price $1.00.

A "Round Table" leaflet containing over 150 questions on B. Y. P. U. work will be sent on request to James Asa White, general secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., or 408 Humboldt Bank Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.

Texas has 2,300 B. Y. P. U.'s on record in the state office, with a membership of about 100,000. The office issued 14,130 B. Y. P. U. diplomas and seals in the year of 1921. The Texas B. Y. P. U. Convention was organized in 1891.

Georgia young people are asked to secure 4,000 tithe before the meeting of their convention at Athens, June 21-23. The state goal for all Baptists is 60,000.

A state B. Y. P. U. of Texas awards six banners each year to the most efficient B. Y. P. U. organizations as follows: Junior B. Y. P. U., intermediate and senior B. Y. P. U., associational, city, and college B. Y. P. U. These awards will be made this year at the State B. Y. P. U. Convention held at Palacios, July 11.

Iowa—1000—Iowa

The Iowa goal is 1,000 delegates to the B. Y. P. U. A. convention at St. Paul. Some say we will make it 2,000. Much credit is due to Rev. C. A. Carman, Grinnell, state chairman of the B. Y. P. U. A. committee, and to Dr. M. M. Myers, Des Moines, who is state secretary of the committee. These leaders have been responsible for the effective planning and organization of the state and associations. The society at Oelwein has pledged itself to send every member of the society. Cedar Valley association will send at least 175 young people.

Splendid set-up meetings have been held for the state organization, almost every association has perfected its organization, and the others are to do this soon. Cedar Valley Association has had special demonstration meetings at Waterloo and Mason City. Then workers from the association are doing special work in the local churches. Young people are going in "Auto Fleets" and on the train. W. B. Barnes, Waterloo, is chairman of the association.

Iowa has the "peppiest" State "Pep" Leader of any state in the convention in Rev. C. C. Browne, Dunkerton. St. Paul may expect much "pep" from Browne and his "peppy" Iowa young people.

Mr. Fred Pierce is city organizer for Sioux City. He plans to put the convention across in great style. A dinner was given in Sioux City for young people from four churches. Rev. Cole of Vermillion, S. D., was present. The young people are enthused and plan to send a large percentage of their membership. After Mr. Pierce finishes a big Legion demonstration, he promises to throw his enthusiastic personality into the job of canvassing the churches.

Des Moines Galilee B. Y. P. U.

On October 17, 1921, a new B. Y. P. U. was organized at Galilee Church, Des Moines, of about sixteen members. Miss Mate Goodell and Miss Mary Stickel were with them to help in the organization. During the past few months they have been putting on a special contest for new members and other points, using the automobile race. They now have, as a result, around 150 members, the attendance keeping up just fine, and a genuine interest taken by all the young people. There have been 30 baptisms from the young people and several letters brought in as one of the results. We pray that this unusual piece of work may be duplicated in many more societies, and we heartily congratulate Miss Lina de Causmeaker, president of the society, and the pastor. Dr. Frank Case.

Foreign Language Literature In Americanization

By WILLIAM J. SLY

In almost every community one or more foreign-language groups may be found which our churches should reach for Jesus Christ. An increasing number of churches are doing this through a men's class or brotherhood, a young people's society, a World Wide Guild or other agency. This letter comes from Newcomerstown, Ohio: "The Baptist Young People's Union of the First Baptist Church desires to undertake work among the foreign population in this town. As president of the union the task was given to me to procure the needed literature in the Russian, Servian and Roumanian languages. I am sure we can be of benefit to these people and we have as a society the backing of the church."

With the letter this enterprising president sent an order for whatever tracts were available in order that the members of this live society might distribute them among men and women of these foreign-speaking groups in Newcomerstown. Our Publication Society was able to supply a number of tracts for this purpose which the young people of this society will distribute wisely and widely among the people. Here is a suggestion of a new enterprise that other churches might well take up. Here is a new and good and not too hard work to do. Here is one of the ways of serving the Master, by scattering the good seed of the kingdom among the foreign-speaking peoples of your communities. The Publication Society has published a number of very valuable tracts that may be used for this purpose. The titles of three of the best are: "The Place of Baptists in World Reconstruction," written by President E. Y. Mullins of the Southern Baptist Seminary; "Democracy as Baptists See It," written by Prof. Frederick L. Anderson, Newton Theological Seminary; "The Practice of Citizenship," written by social education secretary, Dr. S. Z. Batten, of the Publication Society. These three tracts are already translated and published in Italian, Magyar, Polish, Roumanian, Slovak, Russian and other languages. They are available in English and these also might well be distributed anywhere.

While the use of tracts, leaflets and other forms of religious literature constitute an important factor in the evangelizing and educative work of our foreign-speaking churches and missions, often pastors of such churches, as well as English-speaking pastors who wish to do constructive work with the foreign-speaking groups found in their communities ask, "Where can I find the best suitable literature?" To meet this need a "Handbook of Religious Publications in Foreign Languages" has just been published. It contains the latest information regarding the religious literature of thirty-eight different foreign-language groups in the United States and Canada, giving approximate population of each group, the number of churches and Sunday schools of each denomination with approximate membership. It also contains a list of all Sunday-school publications, general religious literature, Bibles and Bible-portions, hymnals and song books. It will be seen that such a reference book will prove of great value to all evangelical workers among each or all of their foreign-language groups. The price is 50 cents per copy, and may be secured from the American Baptist Publication Society, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

A New Budget Day Plan

By RAY DAVIS

The Second Church, Lincoln, Neb., inaugurated a new budget raising plan for their 1922-1923 current and missionary expenses. Five weeks prior to April 2, the trustees, deacons and finance boards met to determine on the budget and lay out plans to raise it. After the church membership had approved the budget, which, by the way, was nearly twice as large as any previous budget, a four minute speaker was delegated to talk at each Sunday and mid-week service. The congregation was informed of the plan and asked to make this particular pledge Sunday a special day in the Lord's work.

The responsibility of raising the budget was made a personal affair. Why have a committee call at the home? Each and every member was responsible individually to God. His challenge and promise of reward was brought forcibly before the people in the form of large signs—Mal. 3:8-10; 2 Cor. 9:7—these being supplemented by another sign tabulating the incomes of average folks and the amounts usually given to the work of the church. As an illustration: If you give 25 cents per Sunday, it represents $13 per year, or one-tenth of $135 yearly income. This in itself was a startling reflection on each giver. The matter of stewardship was emphasized in every way—giving of time, talents, and money to the Lord, each to follow in the order thus given, and in so doing his promise could be claimed.

On Friday night, prior to the Sunday pledge day, the above mentioned boards, together with the heads of all departments of the church and Sunday school, gathered for a supper in the church and made final preparations for the drive. It was a praise service indeed, resulting in a great outpouring of God's blessing, out of which came five definite decisions for full stewardship, and two who promised to give up the tobacco habit giving the money thus spent to the work of the Lord. The spirit of this meeting was carried into the church on Sunday, and when the lights were turned out at night 90 per cent of the resident membership had pledged.

International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for May 28

JEREMIAH SPEAKS BOLDLY FOR GOD
Lesson: Jeremiah 26:8-16. Golden Text:
Jeremiah 26:13.

Historical Background

Following the death of Josiah, after a reign of thirty-one years, there ruled Judah in succession: Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin and Zedekiah. It was during the reign of these four kings and the last thirteen years of Josiah's that Jeremiah prophesied—eventful years, including the fall of Nineveh, the rise of Babylon, the conquest of Judah and the capture of Jerusalem.

Lesson

The man with a message prophesying unpleasantness is never popular. The people will not believe that he has their good at heart. So when Jeremiah had finished speaking, the priests, prophets and all the people laid hold of him, saying: "Thou shalt surely die. . . . Then spake the priests and the prophets unto the princes and to all the people, saying, This man is worthy of death; for he hath prophesied against this city, as ye have heard." These were the false prophets who flattered the king and catered to the people. With the jealous and angry priests they assumed themselves to be in a position to judge one who was apparently a member of their own class. Jeremiah's physical safety was of little moment to him. His consuming desire was to get his message "across." The accusation offered another opportunity: "Jehovah sent me to prophesy against this house and against this city all the words that ye have heard. Now, therefore, amend your ways and doings and obey ye the voice of your God; and Jehovah will repent him of the evil he has pronounced against you. But as for me, behold, I am in your hand: do with me as it is good and right in your eyes. Only know ye for certain that, if ye put me to death, ye will bring innocent blood upon yourselves, and upon this city." His words were convincing. The princes and all the people acquitted him before the priests and false prophets.

Leading Thoughts

1. Truth has no fear of consequences. 2. There is reason to beware of prophets who deal only in palatable phrases. 3. Accusation or acquittal meant little to Jeremiah because he knew he had the approval of God. 4. "The truth shall make you free."

Our Own Folks

Boston Letter

BY CHARLES H. WATSON

The Great Easter Ingathering

Were a paragraph made that would include all the special ingatherings and festival features of Easter among the churches, it would more than cover all the space given to this letter, and have too much sameness about its items to survive as news.

Some one suggested in the Ministers' Conference that time be taken for Easter reports, but promptly came a wise demurrer from Pastor Neily, of Medford, that Easter celebration was now so prevalent, the features so similar, large baptisms so common a custom—some churches saving all the candidates of the year to swell the Easter total—that the full report of it all would require the whole hour and defeat one discussion of an important theme.

Certainly our speaker of the morning justified our following of Pastor Neily's suggestion. It was Dr. Padelford on Christian education in China, from a study of which he has recently returned. It was a most illuminating address—swift, full, charged with startling facts, closely delineating conditions there affecting and promoting Christian education, and fused with a warm evangelical passion. We have never heard Dr. Padelford more masterful and impressive than his informed earnestness made him on that occasion. We were proud of such a leader in educational missions.

Dr. Massee

As hinted before, the fearsome Unitarian editor promoted unusual publicity for the new pastor of Tremont Temple Church. Dr. Massee's first Sundays have been noteworthy, and doubtless upon following Sundays there will be capacity congregations.

He addressed the Ministers' Conference on "The Baptist Outlook." He proved himself a man of attractive personality with a winning manner. He is conversational and modern in style of address, neither divertingly "eloquent" nor needlessly flamboyant. Rather the mien of a man with a message, fully persuaded of its importance, and determined to thrust it into you with firm persuasiveness. The thing is done so in the Christian manner that when you differ, as quite likely you will now and then, you are rather sorry for it. Sometimes too vigorously pushful pulpiteers fill you with regret when you agree with them. Dr. Massee seems not to belong in their self-defeating company.

The Address

To the hearers familiar with the speaker's tools, as used in printed deliverances and letters concerning our doctrinal and denominational disturbances, nothing new was presented. Only the personality of the man was the new feature. He seems to stand pat, with no change of emphasis such as free discussion is apt to bring. Does that point to a literalistic type of mind? Simply a query. To some it will be the sign of authority. But it takes inevitable developments to determine that. Evidently he believes hard that some Baptist changes are imperative—the changes that are wanted in some quarters, and opposed in others.

Margaret Slattery

Promptly on the night of May 1, came the May meeting of the Social Union. Doctor Wilcox made his presidential bow, with Margaret Slattery as his first speaker, and Mrs. Carl Lamson as the soloist. Miss Slattery chose a timely topic: "The Fascination of Hate." As a president, Dr. Wilcox is quite a refreshing type of individualist. He impresses you as a toastmaster in perfect practice—a sort of Chauncey Depew or Joseph Choate. He is prompt, crisp, witty, and his brief introductions are touched with humorous good nature. He gave us the pleasure of saluting young Le Mar, the champion Marathon runner, whom he introduced as a Baptist Sunday school teacher from Melrose. Mrs. Lamson is the popular soloist at Tremont Temple, and gave us six songs and two encores, with emphatic acceptability. In memory of Deacon O. M. Wentworth of the Temple Church, we had from Deacon Leonard H. Rhodes, a tribute well phrased and full of affectionate appreciation, which was followed by a prayer from Rev. D. A. Lockrow, the leader of the Temple Brotherhood.

Miss Slattery's address was unusually plain spoken and earnest. Evidently the world agony resulting from its wild riot of hate has entered into her soul. She spoke from her long experience as a teacher of youth, and close observer of the inevitable harvest of hate in many lands, and in close range application showed us to be directly responsible for most of the things that we pretend to hate. She seemed to hate the pretense, and to demand that we practice the love that we preach—then the kingdom that we pray for would come.

The June meeting is "Newton Night," with Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick in the long talk.

Distinguished Visitors

Lately we have been gladdened by the faces of some of the strong men in our Baptist Zion. Dr. Arthur W. Cleaves of THE BAPTIST has been shedding love and wisdom upon some of our churches. He belongs in the East, and the East may put in her definite claims to him. Dr. James E. Norcross has also smiled upon us. He is a Waterbury boy with the Newton accent, and many down here like that sort of thing, especially when it goes with all round inspirational leadership. President Clifton D. Gray of Bates College has touched us again. Natural for him to keep in touch, for he is a Somerville boy, and though he makes a towering college president, he loses nothing in brotherliness.

A. Conan Doyle

Speaking of President Gray, he lately gave a very sensible estimate of Sherlock Holmes' recent bounce into the mysteries behind the veil, armed with his magic kodak. It is the same estimate that hard-headed saints have always had for a thing which has long been recrudescant, especially after world tragedies and their resulting individual sorrows. Imagination goes out in the direction of poignant grief, and charlatanry meets it with all manner of unrealities. No matter how definite the "medium" becomes, he always fades out like his visions. Sherlock ought to write a new story for us detecting himself.

"Some Evangelists"

Dr. Herbert S. Johnson is giving himself to a very effective type of evangelistic effort for which both in mind and spirit he is well adapted. Tangible and happy spiritual results follow his labors. He is a convincing preacher of Jesus, and his own conviction and consecrated purpose has marked power to bring Christian decision especially to many in their critically intellectual periods. His work in Brookline was remarkable. It was followed at Acadia College by large success in blessing among the students. Dr. Johnson has just closed a week at Sharon of which come joyous reports.

The Bagpipe

Our editorial brother of the Christian Register is still enamored of his monotonous pre-millennial bagpipe. Plainly his favorite air is, "The Haldemans are coming!" You would think he really expected their "buggy" arrival. On this question he has caused his own denomination slightly to agitate their two wings. One wing resents this sensational disturbance of the consolidated Unitarian propriety; the other welcomes awaking from dormancy, and the shock of publicity that puts the denomination on the map. Anything like agitation in either wing is refreshing to disinterested observers.

Philadelphia Letter

By ARTHUR C. BALDWIN

Our monthly review looks back upon many things. During these few weeks Billy Sunday has fulminated against the boot-legger. Bryan has fundamentalized against evolution swearing by every hair on his head that they cannot make a monkey out of him and he would rather know the Rock of Ages than the ages of the rocks. Conan Doyle has come and gone leaving the impression of a serious minded, earnest soul who has been unable to discern between fiction and reality in the unseen world. Then we have had Margot Asquith and Lady Astor and many more. What sort of folks ought we to be with such personalities and pabulum for a daily diet?

Just now we have some politics to think about. I wish we would think of them more. We need more of the religious mind in politics. What Quay and Penrose have done in Pennsylvania every one knows excepting some of the good people here. Some hereabouts are still waiting to be told and smile at the enthusiastic outlander who thinks he knows anything about it. Just now we have two senators, a governor and a long line of officers to nominate in the May primaries. Harrisburg conditions smell to heaven. Even the bosses and bosslets who are trying to pick up the mantle of Mr. Penrose admit this. They are generously volunteering for the job of cleaning up and after a back room conference have told us just whom to nominate. Gifford Pinchot is running for Governor on an independent platform, an able man with a great moral issue to work on.

What is going to happen? I don't know. It saddens one to see the inertia and satisfaction of good men with what is wrong. Ephraim is wedded to his idols perhaps. Wait and see. The women are waking up. Religion will get into politics after a while. We may have a fine story to tell later on.

It is rather late to attempt to give an Easter report in detail. It seems to have been a most successful season evangelistically. Altogether 1,575 baptisms have been reported in and about Philadelphia. Rev. H. Frances Behrends of the Fifth Church conducted special meetings at the Woodland Avenue Church and ninety-four decisions were announced. Rev. Horace H. Hunt of North Frankford baptized twenty. Rev. A. E. Look at Hebron baptized nineteen. Dr. Carter Helm Jones was prevented by his continued illness from occupying his pulpit in the First Church and was sorely missed, but there were a number of candidates for baptism. Rev. George E. Nichols, his assistant pastor has also been confined to his home by illness. It must be a serious thing for a great church to miss two such men at the same time.

Gethsemane has called Rev. Carl O. Graeber of Perry, N. Y., a Rochester graduate of 1916. He begins his pastorate May 11. He comes to one of our outstanding churches, strong, generous, willing and will face a great opportunity, one that we who know him believe he is well qualified to fill.

The Woodland Avenue Church has called Rev. Melvin D. Wright. Mr. Wright was formerly at Logan and since then has been in army work and the Near East Relief. Dr. Behrends' meetings will give him a fine start.

Rev. A. J. Fristoe, formerly state evangelist of Maryland, did most effective work in meetings here during the Easter season at Lehigh Avenue, Bethany, Fox Chase and Wyoming Avenue. About seventy-five baptisms were reported. He has been engaged by the Baptist Union for eight months beginning next October.

I am glad to call attention to an opportunity that churches of the Middle West may have to hear one of the monologs of Mrs. A. B. Strickland of 3646 N. 21st St. She is to speak at the Chicago Association, June 2, and will be available going and coming before and after that date. Mrs. Strickland has given these monologs of hers more than 600 times. Recent bookings include Northfield, the Women's Societies of the Presbytery of New York City and six other conferences. It is an education in home missions and patriotism to hear her. There is really a great opportunity for churches and conferences in Ohio and West.

The Fundamentalists held their third conference in Philadelphia in the Fifth Church, April 27. The speakers included Dr. Straton and Dr. Custer Lee Laws of New York. I have been able to attend but one of these conferences but I desire to commend the spirit and animus that its leaders have shown. A fair, candid discussion of the great realities with an emphasis on some interpretation will do us all good. This seems to be the aim of those who lead the Pennsylvania Fundamentalists. They insist that they are not working for division and I don't think they are. Some of their followers, however, are not so well balanced. Invectives and denunciations are too common. Just now some of them are circulating a paper against one of our honored teachers, denouncing him as "a heretic." I wish we could separate an earnest discussion of fundamentals from hot condemnations of particular personalities. Or is this asking too much? Does the one always lead to the other?

The death of Rev. Francis G. Eland, pastor at Chester Avenue, has been a grief to us all. He was a man of deep, sincere piety, careful and conservative in his own thinking but generous and sympathetic in his judgments of others who occupied another theological position. One cannot imagine him doing what some of these modern heresy hunters are doing. If we had his spirit the present war cries and campaign plans that distract the denomination would not be heard.

With this, spirit in mind, I would express it as my judgment that the proposal of the irenic document from New York to have twenty-four hours between the report of the nominating committee and action in the convention is only a proposal to open the door to heresy hunting and examinations that will be the reverse of anything peaceful. We must vote individually without recourse to the states. This allows a most undue influence by the local group. It may be able to elect the officers of the entire convention. Give it twenty-four hours to organize and it will have a good chance. Is it better to trust a representative nominating committee? Not to do so means division.

The mass feature of our convention with its undue proportion of local influence demands attention. A delegated assembly, one to which only churches that have a part in the work of the New World Movement could send delegates, would be much more responsible. I suggest that we consider it.

Burma

By J. HERBERT COPE

School evangelism is being pushed in Burma. That does not mean that it has not been the corner stone of the educational work from the beginning. But thus far the teachers have been the instruments. Now, however, regular campaigns are planned and carried out, teachers and evangelists from other schools and fields being loaned and a week given up to special meetings and interviews the same as would be done at home. Invariably the results have been splendid, not so much perhaps in actual conversions but in arousing the scholars both Christian and non-Christian. New speakers and new methods are bound to be attractive and the workers have been unceasing in their efforts. The schools which are able to secure Dr. Thomas, the Burma evangelist, are fortunate indeed and they are unstinted in their praise of the work done. There seem to be wonderful possibilities in this form of evangelism.

It was an eventful month in Moulmein when the first class in the hospital training school was graduated, there being five members. The Mitchell Memorial has met a need. Although built to accommodate but thirty-five beds it has been called on more than once to care for forty people while the average has been between twenty-five and thirty. Aside from the work in the building itself the staff are continually receiving calls outside and once a week they go several miles into the district to small villages for dispensary work. They mention three needs, a larger staff, home for the nurses and a permanent water supply. Unless these needs can be met the usefulness of the institution will be affected.

When the cablegram came declaring there was a possibility of an enlarged debt unless the churches at home were able to give more, the Rangoon missionaries in their prayer meeting spontaneously decided to do their share and they all pledged a month's basal salary to be paid in two years. "Basal" means without the extra allowances. Others outside of Rangoon have joined in and already a considerable sum of money has been paid into the treasury through this means.

Dr. Robbins has come back from a visit to India where the two missions tried to come to an agreement on the matter of grants in aid for school work but they had to end by agreeing to disagree, apparently on account of conditions in the two missions being different. He is now touring the Kengtung and the new Monglem field in China. His visit to the East seems to have done him no harm. I see it was necessary to get a motor truck to take him part of the distance.

After warning every one it was going to lock up Gandhi, the Indian government again forgave him when he promised to behave. It looks as if it were a Gaston and Alphonse play going on. Gandhi wants to be arrested, that is, if it can be done for no offense, while government is waiting to have him do something whereby he can be locked up without trouble. The arrest and conviction of other leaders continue and the end is not yet. It is certain if mass disobedience which Gandhi has been threatening to institute is really put into practice there will be trouble. But for some reason he is afraid when the time comes and keeps postponing it. May he continue to do so indefinitely.

National Baptist Memorial

The corner-stone ceremonies of the National Baptist Memorial to Religious Liberty, held Saturday afternoon, April 22, on the site presented by Immanuel Church in Washington, D. C., were remarkable in their interest and power. On the platform were prominent guests, among them being Mr. and Mrs. Oscar S. Straus, of New York; Mr. Emile Berliner of Washington; Mr. Ambrose Swasey and Mr. D. G. Garabrant, and other members of the Memorial Committees. Dr. E. B. Jackson of Virginia, chairman of the National Building Committee, presided. Dr. B. D. Gray of Georgia, chairman of the committee of the Southern Convention, who was to speak, was prevented from coming and wired his message for the occasion. Dr. Emory W. Hunt, chairman of the committee of the Northern Convention, spoke with precision and power on the heritage and duty of Baptists. Hon. Charles E. Hughes, secretary of state, gave an address on "Religious Liberty and the Baptists." This address is published as an outstanding contribution to this momentous theme. An interesting and unexpected feature was the singing by the Glee Club of Brown University, which was in the city for a concert that evening. This was specially pleasing to Secretary Hughes. The stone was laid by Secretary Hughes. Prayer was offered by Dr. W. S. Abernethy of Calvary Church.

On Sunday, one year from the day the President of the United States broke ground for this memorial, special continuation services were held. President and Mrs. Harding came to the morning service, as did also former Postmaster-General Will Hays, and Hon. James J. Davis, secretary of labor. The speaker for the morning was Dr. Edgar Y. Mullins, president of the Southern Baptist Convention. He gave a strong, incisive address on "The Contribution of Baptists to American Civilization." It deeply impressed all in the crowded congregation and President Harding expressed his high appreciation of it.

At night the speaker was our own Mrs. W. A. Montgomery, president of the Northern Baptist Convention. Mrs. Montgomery's address, on "The History and Principles and Program of Baptists," stirred and thrilled the large congregation.

Among the letters read at the ceremonies was one from David Lloyd George, saying it would give him much pleasure to take part in the laying of the corner-stone if he were able to come to the United States as he had planned.

Among the articles placed in the corner-stone box were an autographed steel engraving of President Harding, an autographed copy of the Life of Roger Williams by Mr. Straus, a Baptist Year Book autographed by the presidents of both conventions, a "peace dollar," presented by Mr. Swasey, and a Bible marked at I Cor. 3:11, and Eph. 2:20. A local paper said "a prayer-book" was put in! A number of lineal descendants of Roger Williams were among the guests.

of Binghamton, N. Y., as director of religious education; the adoption of Brayton C. Case agricultural missionary of Pyin-mamo, Burma, as foreign representative; the observance of religious education week under the leadership of Dr. F. F. Peterson and Miss Hartley and the plans for a daily vacation Bible school this coming summer. A well directed plan of missionary education stimulated by addresses from Dr. Franklin, Sumner Vinton, R. A. Longwell, Paul Hackett, Brayton C. Case, Miss Helen Hudson and others has resulted in increased missionary interest and offerings. The benevolences now equal one-third of total amount raised for all purposes and it is to be hoped that this church of 1,500 members may at no distant time adopt the slogan—"As much for others as for ourselves." The church adopted a current expense budget of $18,900 for 1922-23, an advance of nearly 20 per cent over the previous year. Forty-six baptisms were reported, many of these from the Bible school which is now nearing an enrollment of 900.

CONNECTICUT

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE WOMAN'S BAPTIST Mission Society of Fairfield Association was held recently in South Norwalk Church, Mrs. Thomas Gray, Stamford, presiding. Officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Thomas Gray, Stamford; first vice-president, Mrs. F. R. Haller, Bridgeport; second vice-president, Mrs. H. D. Sylvester, Danbury; secretary, Mrs. N. M. Collins, Bridgeport; treasurer, Mrs. T. G. Denchfield, Bridgeport; directors for three years—Mrs. D. B. MacQueen, Bridgeport; Mrs. M. D. Hawkins, Stratford; Mrs. C. E. Ford, Stratford.

SIXTEEN WERE BAPTIZED at First Church, New London, on Easter Sunday evening. The largest audiences in the history of the church were present at the services of worship. Most of the candidates for baptism were young people from the intermediate and senior departments of the church school. At the annual meeting of the church on April 11 a license to preach was granted to Edwin E. Sundt, a student at Crozer Theological Seminary. One other member is a student for the ministry at Colby College. The church is also in touch with the student life of Connecticut College for Women, a rapidly growing institution as it is the only college for women in the state. Miss Greenough of the Board of Education recently visited the church and college for special work with Baptist students.

CONNECTICUT

ADDITIONS HAVE BEEN MADE by baptism in the following churches: Hartford: First Church, Dr. H. J. White, pastor, fifteen; Italian Mission of the First Church, Rev. A. Roca, missionary, fifteen; South Church, Dr. J. N. Lackey, pastor, twenty; Memorial Church, Rev. Manford W. Schuh, pastor, nine were received during April and others are expected; Blue Hills Church, Dr. A. D. Kendrick, acting pastor, two; Shiloh Church, Dr. W. B. Reed, pastor, eleven, making twenty-two in all received into this church recently. New Haven: Calvary, Rev. James McGee, pastor, fifteen. Branford: Rev. Ivan H. Benedict, pastor, five; Mr. Benedict has just closed a four-session school on stewardship, meeting on Sunday evenings, that has greatly stimulated the work of the church. Clinton: Rev. C. H. Frederick, pastor, eight. Southington: Rev. G. C. Laudenslager, pastor, ten; the Southington Church planned a rededication service for

PROF. H. R. PURTINOT, president of the New England Baptist Conference, and Dean Peterson, of the school of methods, sent out invitations to a "painting bee" at "Bethshalom," Ocean Park, for April 19, Patriots' Day in Massachusetts. Ladies were invited to prepare meals. The trustees met the same day and some of the preachers proved themselves "painters" as well. Dr. Coats of Connecticut, Mrs. W. C. Murdock of Rhode Island; French of Brockton; Webber of Avon; Peterson and Hartley of Boston; MacDowell, Melrose; two car loads from Haverhill; Hardy, Sanford; Curtis and Winslow, Saco; Thompson, Portland, and Purinton and Hamlin, Lewiston, with others they brought, made quite a party and "Bethshalom" is spick and span for the missionary conference in July and the school of methods and Newton Summer School in August, with over $100 saved. New cottages are being built all over the park and it is hoped all who desire to attend the school of methods may be accommodated.

APRIL 2-9 REV. W. COOPER, pastor at Millinocket, conducted another "home-made revival," which resulted in twenty-six baptisms on Easter Sunday before crowded houses. This makes sixty-four baptisms during the year and seventy-four new members received. The church voted to spend $13,000 this spring on enlargement and equipment. The money for this coming in weekly assures the payment in less than two years after the completion of the work. This will give twenty-four individual class rooms, a social hall seating 300 at a supper, a wing on the auditorium, a rear extension of the auditorium, an elevated modern baptistry, toilets, steam heat, painting inside and out, new choir loft, and pulpit. At the same time the church is making unprecedented effort in backing up the N. W. M. The people are glad to emphasize religious education and evangelism at home and abroad.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

AT FIRST CHURCH, Nashua, on Easter Sunday the hand of fellowship was given to 104 new members. Sixty-one of these were recently baptized by the pastor, Rev. A. J. Archibald. Last September this church adopted a program for the year, with seven goals: 1. A flourishing Sunday evening service; 2. Personal attention for every member of the congregation; 3. An educational program worth while; 4. Payment in full of New World Movement pledges; 5. The addition of 100 new members by Easter Sunday; 6. Mid-week prayer meeting with an average attendance of 125; 7. Average Sunday school attendance of 400. Present industrial conditions have somewhat interfered with payment of New World pledges. The other goals have been reached or surpassed. Sunday evening service has had a regular attendance of about 500; the mid-week meeting of 200.

REV. R. H. TIBBALS OF CARLISLE BARRACKS, Pa., and at present chaplain in the U. S. Army has accepted a call to the Antrim Church and will begin his labors there July 1.

THE CROWN HILL CHURCH, Nashua, has secured the services of Rev. George A. Cole as pastor. Mr. Cole formerly served the church at Danbury and recently concluded his services as pastor of the Christian church at Franklin.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY of the Woman's Missionary Society was celebrated at First Church, Fall River, April 28-30. It was a great occasion with crowded houses. The annual meeting was held on Friday at 4 p.m., followed by a banquet at 6:30. Dr. Everett C. Herrick, presiding. Dr. J. Y. Aitchison gave the address. A program of reminiscence, information and entertainment was given in the church auditorium, beginning at 8:15. On Sunday evening, April 30, Mrs. Helen B. Montgomery, president Northern Baptist Convention, spoke. The Second and Third churches participated in this service.

FIRST CHURCH OF SPRINGFIELD, Dr. E. M. Lake, pastor, passed its second milestone as a union of the former State Street and First-Highland churches, April 20. The large attendance at this second annual meeting, well-presented reports and the general note of progress were features of the event. Among advance steps reported were the coming of Rev. Warren P. Grant

Sunday, April 23, with several former pastors present and participating. Middletown: Rev. Edgar R. Hyde, pastor, baptized three Easter Sunday. Bristol: Rev. R. Maplesden, supply-pastor, baptized six.

Dr. J. Y. AITCHISON of New York, general director of the Board of Promotion, visited First Church, Waterbury, April 12. Pastor D. P. Gaines had invited the members of the church to meet Dr. Aitchison around the table, and after a most delightful supper, Dr. Aitchison presented the work of the denomination. Ample opportunity was given for questions and the whole situation confronting the denomination was thoroughly thrashed out. The church has re-enlisted heartily in the New World Movement under the pastor's wise leadership and hopes to complete its quota.

NEW YORK

WASHINGTON HEIGHTS CHURCH, has already planned for a series of union services with the Hamilton Grange Reformed Church during the summer, both churches being in the same neighborhood in New York City. The Good Friday and Easter Services of the Washington Heights Church were the most helpful and successful in its history. A number of persons were baptized. The Easter offering was the largest taken in many years. Rev. Harold Pattison, the pastor, left April 22 for a needed rest. He will take a trip to Panama and the West Indies returning about May 18 and remaining in the city until August 1. Rev. Albert G. Lawson will supply the pulpit while the pastor is away.

THE AUDITORIUM OF THE BAPTIST Church at Cazenovia was filled with an enthusiastic audience Tuesday evening, April 25, for an open meeting of the Brotherhood, with delegations from Manlius, New Berlin, New Woodstock, Delphi, Tulley, Fenner and several persons from the Delaware Street Church, Syracuse. Though this was the closing meeting of the year the president made clear that the men would continue their activity in Christian service during the summer and renew their meetings with increased emphasis in fall. Although organized for a number of years it has had a noteworthy experience during the past two years, during which time it has visited by request a dozen or more nearby churches to conduct evangelistic meetings. This activity has been a fitting supplement to the Bible study conducted in the regular meetings of the Brotherhood and has put a virile force into all the regular work of its own church as shown in the Sunday school which has increased 50 per cent in attendance in the last eight months.

REV. ORRIN C. TEACHOUT, closed over three years' work with Delhi Church, N. Y., April 30. Six were baptized on Easter Sunday.

Rochester News

Rev. George Middleton, for four years pastor of Calvary Church, Syracuse, has accepted a call to Calvary Church, his work beginning June 1. This is one of the most promising fields in the city, with a finely equipped building.

Rev. Ward E. Bailey, a Rochester Seminary graduate, and for seven years a missionary in West China, who is detained in Rochester for a year or more, has taken the pastorate of the Fernwood Church.

This church has been supplied by a layman for the past seven years. It occupies a growing field, and it is hoped it may develop into a strong church.

Rev. Fred E. Dean is doing a notable work at Greece, a suburb of Rochester. He supplied the church during his seminary course and after graduation accepted a call to the pastorate, the church agreeing to pay a salary twice as large as it had ever paid before. Formerly a little isolated country church, it is rapidly changing into an important suburban church. It expects to begin the erection of a modern Sunday-school plant this summer. In the campaign of the New World Movement, this church was given a quota of $8,000, and it pledged $14,000. A few Sundays ago a canvass was made for $15,000 toward the erection of a new building, and nearly $20,000 was pledged.

The Rochester churches are not allowing business depression to affect their programs. Nearly all of them have made their campaigns for their current expense and benevolent budgets during the past few weeks, and without exception have been successful, although nearly all carried increased expense budgets. Lake Avenue's budget was $81,000, which their pledges exceeded by several thousand. The Baptist Temple's total budget was $79,000, which represented an increase of 96 per cent for current expenses. Under the pastoral care of Prof. John R. Brown, First Church also adopted and secured pledges to cover an increased budget.

South Church is rejoicing over its new pastor, Rev. James D. MacLeod. Mr. MacLeod is a member of the graduating class of the seminary, and has been supplying the pulpit all winter. He begins his work under favorable circumstances.

With the exception of First Church, all the city's churches are now ably manned, and the Baptists of Rochester not only ought to maintain their splendid record of past years, but make a big advance.

Great credit is due Dr. Cornelius S. Savage, who is making his home in Rochester, for his service at Calvary Church since Mr. Hutchinson left. He has served as acting pastor, and the church is in fine form for the coming of the new minister. Dr. Savage is greatly enjoying his new work as interim pastor. Any church that can secure his services for this work will be fortunate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

CALVARY CHURCH, WASHINGTON, is making preparations to enlarge its present accommodations. Seven pieces of property immediately adjoining the present holdings have been purchased, and upon this the new auditorium will be erected. The church was asked for $124,500 to meet the expense of the additional ground, and already $111,000 has been subscribed. These subscriptions are to be paid before the end of the current year. The new auditorium will be begun early in 1923 and the project carried rapidly to completion. A seating capacity of approximately 2,500 is to be provided. The membership of the church has passed the 3,000 mark, and the Sunday school is averaging above 2,000. On Easter Sunday morning, after every available sitting was occupied and standing room taken, 1,500 people, according to the estimate of the ushers were turned away. Thirty-nine received the ordinance of baptism during the day. President Harding was the guest of honor at the recent annual banquet of the Vaughn Bible Class.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

RIDLEY PARK, REV. WAYLAND ZWAYER, pastor, reports the baptism of two young men and three boys on April 30 and that two young women and six girls were received for baptism on May 7. With these thirteen additions, all but six of the members of the Sunday school above the age of twelve will be members of church. At the third monthly meeting of the League of Christian Stewards, which includes over one-third the resident membership, it was decided to plan a small library for the use of the church and school comprised of a carefully selected list of books on such subjects as stewardship, Baptist history and principles, church and Sunday-school efficiency, missions, etc. It is to be largely educative in character.

FIRST CHURCH OF WILKES-BARRE, REV. C. S. Roush, pastor: The pastor was assisted in two weeks of evangelistic services in March by Rev. A. B. Strickland of Philadelphia, superintendent of evangelism in Pennsylvania. The meetings were profitable not only in decisions, but in the establishing of definite plans and methods for the work of personal evangelism. A pre-Easter communion service held Thursday evening was largely attended, and the congregations on Easter Sunday filled the church. At 10:30 there was a combined service of the church and Bible school at which time there were twenty-seven baptized. The pastor has extended the hand of fellowship to from two to eight at each communion service for the past five months and thirty-five will be thus welcomed into church membership the first Sunday in May. The budget for the present year is the largest in the history of the church.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

NORTH EAST: On Easter Sunday, Pastor W. A. Howes baptized nine candidates and five others were received—thirteen. No special meetings have been held on statement and experience, two by letting during the past year but the church enjoys a harmonious fellowship and there is marked progress along all lines. The church is looking toward extensive repairs which are much needed.

REVIVAL MEETINGS were held by the Swissvale church, Rev. N. J. Mecklem, pastor, the last two weeks of March, with Dr. J. S. Braker, of McKeesport, assisting. There were over thirty decisions by those living in Swissvale and twelve by young people from the Rankin Mission. Twenty-one were received for baptism on Easter. Others reached during the meetings will join by letter and experience.

Mrs. C. A. EMBREY, wife of the pastor of Mt. Washington Church, passed away Thursday, March 30, after a long and severe illness. The funeral, held Sunday, April 2, was conducted by Dr. H. J. Whalen, of Greensburg, assisted by Rev. George Buck and Rev. A. C. Bush, a Presbyterian clergyman, who has long been a friend of the family. Interment took place at Taylor, Pa., the early home of Mrs. Embrey.

THE AMBRIDGE CHURCH gave a formal and most cordial welcome to the new pastor, Rev. W. H. Cutler, and Mrs. Cutler, at a reception Thursday evening, April 10. Rev. J. S. Stone, of Sewickley, a former pastor and the one who did most to build the Ambridge church, presided. The greetings of the association were brought by Rev. A. J. R. Schumaker, and the welcome of the Ambridge churches by neighboring pastors.

INDIANA

Easter marked the end of the first six months of the pastorate of Rev. Paul Judson Morris with the Emerson Avenue Church, Indianapolis. During that time eighty new members have been added to the church, most of these adults. It has been the pastor's privilege to baptize a number of men of mature age who are heads of families. From February 1 to Easter the church engaged in a campaign of personal evangelism according to the Lowell Plan. Eighty Christians enrolled as members of the Crusaders' League of Personal Workers. To these workers were assigned 150 names of people outside the church. Through the personal work and the pre-Easter meetings conducted by the pastor, fifty-seven people were won during the campaign. In the first year the membership has grown from 113 to 238. The Sunday school made a record on Easter Sunday with 390 in attendance and a collection of $100.39. The average attendance of the Sunday school is now above 300. The new gymnasium is used every day in the week for afternoon and evening gymnasium classes. On Sundays the building is used for church services. Work on the religious educational plant will start within a very short time. The church is now laying plans for a four weeks' church vacation Bible school starting June 26.

ILLINOIS

THE QUINCY ASSOCIATION met April 17-18 with the Timewell Baptist Church for its semi-annual meeting. It was one of the most spiritual and helpful meetings of the association. The association planned to work toward these definite goals by the time of the regular meeting with the Barry Church in the fall: 1. Earnest effort to regularly meet pledges to N. W. M. 2. An intensive effort to have each church represented at denominational gatherings. 3. Each church supplied with pastor. 4. Formulation of plans for study courses throughout association. 5. Special evangelistic effort in each church during fiscal year. 6. A systematic effort to inspire each church to formulate a Stewardship League of Christians.

REV. G. A. SHEETS, formerly of Rockford, began his pastorate at First Church, Rock Island, May 1. April 30, Rev. H. C. Leland finished his work as stated supply at Rock Island where he has served acceptably for the past six months. Rev. Leland has retired from active pastorate work but will serve churches as pulpit supply for single Sundays or as acting pastor between pastorates. His address is 115 E. Fourth Street, Dixon.

FIRST CHURCH, BARRY, REV. T. ELMER JONES, pastor: Two were baptized Easter and in spite of rain a large audience gathered for the evening hour. An orchestra concert, special choir number and a delightful Easter pantomime were features of the evening; 152 in Sunday school.

MICHIGAN

FIRST CHURCH, KALAMAZOO, Dr. Elmer W. Powell, pastor, has received ninety-two by baptism, letter and experience. Others are awaiting baptism and some have sent for letters. Among those baptized are three from Kalamazoo College. This has been one of the best years in the history of the church; $25,000 have been paid on the New World Movement; a new slate roof has been placed on the church building; new hymn books have been secured. The attendance at the church school averages 500. Dr. Frank B. Bachelor, manager of the Kalamazoo College Extension Department has been elected a deacon. Dr. Powell frequently addresses the assembly of the State Normal School (1,200 students) and conducts the chapel at Kalamazoo College (300 students). The large number of additions have come through a quiet, persistent, personal evangelism by pastor and people. No special meetings have been held.

EASTER SUNDAY BEULAH CHURCH, Detroit, had baptismal services, morning and evening. Music was of the finest, from a choir, worthy of note in the city of Detroit, and an orchestra of twenty-two instruments. Rev. James S. West has been the pastor since November, 1920, during which time 147 persons have been received into the church by baptism and 198 by letter and experience. No extra meetings have been held, the work going on regularly with the spirit of evangelism predominating. Mrs. Flora M. Dorman of Boston, Mass., was engaged as pastoral assistant and began work October 9, 1921.

EASTER SUNDAY WAS A HAPPY DAY for Bay City Baptists. In the three churches the ordinance of baptism was administered. First Church reports sixteen, Broadway, four and West, seventeen. In the three years that Rev. W. Bernard Jarman has been pastor of West Church the work has moved forward in all the departments. Over 125 have been received into the fellowship of the church, seventy-seven of these by baptism. The Sunday-school enrolment has more than doubled and the prayer meetings are ever a source of blessing. The financial budget has been doubled, pastor's salary increased and repairs made on church property to the amount of $2,000. Special evangelistic meetings were held the three weeks before Easter in union with the Presbyterian and Methodist churches. About seventy professed Christ and of these thirty gave the Baptist as their church preference. The pastors did their own preaching and Lloyd J. Green, pastor of the Essexville Baptist Church, led the singing.

KANSAS

REV. T. W. HENSHAW, formerly of Chautauque, began his pastorate at Preston on May 1.

MINNESOTA

PARKER'S PRAIRIE: The Baptist church in this village of 570 people had a resident membership of forty-six when a series of meetings were held April 9 to 30. The church was pastorless, having been supplied until April 16 by a minister of another communion since autumn. Ideal spring weather facilitated the attendance of the country people, and four townships were more or less influenced by the work of grace. A deep and powerful conviction came upon the community, and people who had not attended the services were found under conviction when visited in their homes. Confessions of faith, restorations and applications for baptism from those previously Christians, total sixty-nine. Of this number thirty-nine are candidates for baptism. Rev. A. J. Dahlby becomes pastor on June 1.

OHIO

THERE HAVE BEEN BAPTISMS at the Urbana church for the past few Sunday nights with splendid congregations. Eight were baptized Easter Sunday. Every effort has been made to realize all pledges to N. W. M. as well as special offering.

EASTER MORNING CENTERVILLE Sunday school had an attendance of 137 and over $8 in the collection. In the evening the Summit Street choir of Dayton gave an Easter program.

FIRST CHURCH Mt. Gilead reports a record attendance at Sunday school Easter Sunday with baptismal service and special offering to the New World Movement.

COSHOCOTON, W. M. HART, PASTOR: Annual meeting evening of April 5th. Membership sat down to supper in the church dining-room. Indebtedness on new house of worship liquidated during the year and the department treasurers reported a combined balance of above $600 after all debts were paid. Preparations are being made for church vacation school.

AT WARREN FIRST, Rev. A. A. Nellis baptized twelve Easter Sunday, making a total of 423 he has received in a little less than seven years. A special offering of $456 toward the denominational debt was received on Easter.

AFTER A PASTORATE of four years, Rev. F. A. Maier resigned at Ebenezer Church, Bethesda, to become missionary pastor of the Marietta Association.

MR. PLEASANT CHURCH recently closed a three-week meeting, the pastor, Rev. J. A. Erbe, doing the preaching. As a result five young men and a young girl were baptized on Good Friday evening. These, with a young man and his wife, by letter from the Christian Church, and an elderly lady by experience, were welcomed into the church Easter morning. The church expects to meet its New World Movement quota for the current year in full. Its second school of missions for the year will begin in a few days, taking the foreign mission studies.

FIRST CHURCH OF MARIETTA has voted to send Rev. J. W. Weddell, who has been acting pastor for the past six months, to both the state and the national convention.

REV. B. F. PART, formerly of Sidney, has retired from the active pastorate work and will be available only for supply work and helping pastors in special meetings.

DURING THE TEN MONTHS that Rev. A. H. O'Brien has been with the Tiffin Church there has been an increase in the Sunday-school membership of over 400 per cent, a men's class has been organized and there has been a 40 per cent increase in the church membership. Easter Sunday six were received into the church by baptism, one by experience and one by letter. The Sunday school was the largest in the history of the church for twenty-five years.

PLAIN CITY: The annual open meeting of the Big Darby mission circle was held March 31. A large crowd heard a very interesting and instructive program.

NEBRASKA

FIRST CHURCH and pastor, Rev. Paul A. Shenk, North Platte, are working in the best of harmony. The second year of their activity closed April 16. During this time the Sunday school has doubled its attendance, while the B. Y. P. U. has trebled its strength, and the church has taken in 171 new members. The great majority of these additions were made by following the Lowell plan of revival.

THE YOUNG MARRIED PEOPLE'S class, First Church, Lincoln, has an enrolment of over seventy-five. A class news bulletin is published and sent to each member on Thursday. Oak E. Davis, chairman of the Nebraska Laymen's Council, is the teacher.

IOWA

IN DECEMBER, Rev. J. T. Parker settled as pastor of the Hawarden Church. For several months it had been pastorless. Prayerfully the church had sought the divine leadership. It believed that its prayer was answered in the coming of Pastor Parker. Since his coming, a total of fifty-eight have united with the church. Thirty-five are adults, eighteen husbands and wives coming at the same time.

MISSOURI

DURING THE FIRST SIX MONTHS of Rev. C. H. Berry's pastorate at Central Church, Kansas City, the church has received fifty-four new members, all except eleven coming by baptism. The morning service is attended by nearly twice as many people as formerly and the evening audience is fully three times as large as at the beginning of Mr. Berry's work. The Sunday school, too, is growing. The pastor has a class of young men with an attendance of about thirty. Easter Sunday school attendance nearly 400 people; on April 30, 310. A community gathering is held nearly every Friday night. More people of the community are attending the services of the church, partly as the result of these Community Nights. During this six months the church has raised for all purposes approximately $7,500. Plans are complete for a vacation Bible school, and more than 100 children are expected daily in this school for a period of five weeks.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

REV. JOHN SNAPE and CONGREGATION of First Church, Oakland, observed, April 23, the second anniversary of their work together. At the morning service forty-three received the hand of fellowship and at night the International Lions' Club, of which the pastor is a member, attended in a body. The 373 new members who have been added during this period, have been canvassed as they have united with the church for current expenses and the New World Movement with the following results: Current expenses, $4,318.40; New World Movement, $7,303.60. The church now numbers 250 titheers. The Assistant Pastor, E. A. Fridell, was recently presented with a Ford car for his exclusive use in Sunday-school visitation.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

PASTOR C. SIDNEY MADDOX, of Santa Monica, Cal., has recently been given a hearty and unanimous call to First Church of Stockton, but has declined, preferring to remain where he has done good work for eight years. The Santa Monica Church is growing in every way.

REV. G. M. PARKS, for four years pastor of the National City Church has tendered his resignation. Mr. Parks has built up the local denomination until now it occupies a $25,000 structure. The membership has doubled. Following the acceptance of his resignation the church voted Mr. Parks a two months' extra salary that he might enjoy a needed vacation.

ON MARCH 28, in the Glassell Avenue Church, forty-eight ministers and other members of the Los Angeles Baptist Association convened in council to consider the qualifications of the pastor, H. Fredrick Sheerer, for the full work of the Gospel ministry. The council organized by electing Dr. B. B. Jacques, Moderator, Dr. F. G. Davies, chief questioner, and Rev. C. G. Roadarmel, clerk. The candidates statements proved to be so clear, concise and comprehensive that the Council voted its satisfaction with the entire examination, and recommended that the church proceed with plans for ordination. In consonance with the call of the church the ordination service was conducted on the evening of April 7th, with Dr. B. B. Jacques in charge.

OREGON

REV. M. G. BENTLEY, state evangelist, closed a gracious meeting with Burns Church, Rev. C. A. Waterhouse, pastor, with gratifying results. This is a needy field having been pastorless much of the time for two years and many of the members having moved away. The results of the meetings were eighteen additions to the church, Brother Bentley has held eleven meetings since Jan. 1-22, resulting in over 500 conversions, more than 300 of them uniting with Baptist churches. His work has been with the weaker churches and Burns has long been noted as a poor church town.

SWEDISH BAPTIST CHURCH, Mount Vernon, Rev. A. H. Johnson, pastor: The evangelistic campaign held Feb. 26-March 19, together with the Swedish Methodist and Swedish Mission churches of the same city, was a real blessing and brought great results. Evangelist Frank Lindblad preached the gospel with power.

REV. F. W. CARSTENS reports that nine life enlistments for the foreign field were made at the evening service on April 30, among the finest young people in Queen Anne Church, Seattle. The pastor preached a missionary sermon, illustrated by slides showing Baptist mission work in foreign fields. Special services were held for four weeks prior to Easter, with good results.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, SEATTLE: April 1, Dr. A. M. Bailey closed the second year of his pastorate here. There have been 507 additions to the church, of whom 170 came by baptism. The attendance at the Sunday school Easter Sunday, 1920, was 273 and on Easter Sunday, 1922, it was 608. The Senior B. Y. P. U. has taken on new life and growth and a vigorous Intermediate B. Y. P. U. has been organized. A week-night Bible Study Class organized under Dr. Bailey's leadership has during the two years nearly completed the study of the Old Testament, using no textbook but the Bible. The average attendance at this class has been fifty.

REV. ARTHUR CAMPBELL, minister of the Free Will Baptist Church placed his letter with First Church of Greenfield, Ohio. Dr. Hofmeister, pastor, reports that Brother Campbell will make a good pastor for some needy field. Any church interested should write Dr. Hofmeister.

"All Want to Know the Good News!"

By HELEN HOBART

The new Chinese mission at Locke, Cal., is thriving. I have never seen a more eager group of women and children. They are ready and anxious to do anything and everything. They love to get up a program of any kind. They all want to be "in it" and will spend any amount of time a missionary can give to practice.

A chord or two on their little folding organ will act as a church bell and bring the children running from all over. They like to sing and have lusty voices. Miss Maxwell has won a place in the hearts of the Chinese people in the little really truly Chinese village. She says there isn't a home in the village where the women don't beg her to come and call. Miss Maxwell has thirteen little tots in her kindergarten. That includes every little one of eligible age, except one, and he's bashful and he's coming soon. They have been promised a new building at Locke—and then—oh, my, the plans! A real industrial center, with plenty of things to do and everybody happy. And next a Ford! This is only one village. There are many others up and down the river and they all want to know Miss Maxwell, too, and the Good News she can bring them!

Scriptural Truth about the Lord's Return, by Robert Cameron. New York: F. H.
 Revell Co. $1.25 net.

The author has attempted to give us a complete induction of all the Scriptures and facts bearing upon the Lord's second coming. He believes that there has been much erroneous exegesis both on the part of pre-millennialists and those who oppose them, and tries to point to both sides the truth. Those who know Dr. Cameron will appreciate beforehand the flavor of this book; those who do not may find pleasure in getting acquainted with him. Dr. O. P. Gifford says: "I have read the manuscript of Dr. Cameron's book. He is loyal to the Word of God, fair in exegesis, unanswerable in argument. The book reads like a lawyer's brief. He carefully marks the line between the mountain peaks of revealed truth that horizon the future, and the clouds of speculation that confuse the student."

Parables for Little People, by J. W. G. Ward. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.50 net.

Mr. Ward was successor to G. Campbell Morgan at the New Court Church, Tollington Park, London. He has been remarkably successful in gathering and holding a junior congregation. In this book are some of the original and charming stories he has used with the children. They are in reality parables, moving in the realm of romance, imagination and make-believe. The lesson is always there, but so cleverly worked in that one does not feel that the story has been spoiled by it as is so often the case.

Prayers of Frank W. Gunsaulus. New York: F. H. Revell Co. $1.25.

Dr. Gunsaulus was one of the most richly-endowed preachers of our generation. These prayers, offered on many occasions, in his own pulpit, Central Church, Chicago, have been brought together by his daughter from the stenographic report. Among them are prayers at the opening of the service, prayers during service, prayers in war-time and prayers for special occasions. As our ministers increasingly realize the importance of public prayer, books of this kind are sought by them. We unhesitatingly recommend it both for study and for devotional purposes.

"Soldiers of the Cross"

There appeared in Scribner's Magazine a few months ago a story entitled "The Shepherd Who Watched by Night" by Thomas Nelson Page. This was the story of the minister who had been pastor of his church for forty years and although getting old was still ministering to the needy ones in the community. He had not been able to save anything against that day when he must stop his work. This story has been put into a moving picture film by The General Board of Promotion to help the work of the Ministers and Missionaries' Benefit Board. The film is called "Soldiers of the Cross."

It can be secured from the Stereopticon Division of The General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City. The price of rental is the parcel post each way and $2 to pay for examination and rewinding.

"It Is to Laugh"

Unity says the following letter from the School Board at Lancaster, Ohio, dated 1828, "ought to be read by everybody at least once a year": "You are welcome to the use of the schoolhouse to debate all proper questions in; but such things as railroads and telegraphs are impossibilities and rank infidelity. There is nothing in the Word of God about them. If God had designed that his intelligent creatures should travel at the frightful speed of fifteen miles an hour by steam, he would clearly have foretold it through his holy prophets. It is a device of Satan to lead immortal souls down to hell."

An editor was dying, but when the doctor bent over, placed his ear on his breast, and said, "Poor man! Circulation almost gone!" the dying editor shouted: "You're a liar! We have the largest circulation in the country!"—Exchange.

Housewife: "I'll not give you anything. Do you know who I am?"

Tramp: "No, mum."

Housewife: "Well, I'm a policeman's wife, and if my husband were here he would take you, and quickly, too."

Tramp: "I believe yer, mum. Your husband 'ud take anybody."—Sydney Bulletin.

"Reverend Jefferson he goin' to leave our church and take church down South," commented one colored brother to another. "An' we thought we'd just get together soon and give him a little momentum."

Mr. Boastful Jones had a staunch admirer in his son William. One day Mr. Jones sat down to the dinner table and related an experience he had had in separating two quarreling men.

"Why, Edward, you shouldn't have interfered," remonstrated his wife. "They might have knocked your brains out."

"Hm! I'd like to see anybody that could knock any brains out of my father!" cried young William.

There is always a brighter side. Spring is seldom as slushy as the poetry it inspires.—Chicago Journal.

CHILDREN AND MUSIC

"No, I shall not have Betty take musical lessons," said one mother; "she has absolutely no ear for music, cannot carry a simple tune, and it would be only a waste of time and money."

That is just where many parents make a very serious mistake. If seven-year-old Betty has no taste for arithmetic, that is no reason why she should not learn the multiplication table. No mother would think of depriving a child of such useful knowledge. Betty may never delve into higher mathematics, but she must know and practice its fundamentals. In the same way, parents do a great injustice to a child when they do not include the fundamentals of music in his earliest education.

Of course, we shall speak only of the average child in this article. The youngster that shows real musical genius, the boy or girl musical prodigy, is in no danger of being neglected in that respect. But the usual normal child can learn to understand and appreciate music, and the only means to that end is to learn how to make music. If every child takes music lessons during his tender years and learns to play some instrument, he will acquire something that will be an enduring force for good and real advantage during his whole life. Nor can the parent or teacher say with any certainty that a child has no natural ear for music. That faculty may be latent in his nature, waiting for the magic of understanding to flower into a beautiful gift.

The fact that not one child in ten who takes music lessons when very young develops into a real musician and a brilliant performer is no reason at all why the ten should not learn music. The sole object of such early training is not to produce performers, but to enrich their whole lives with an understanding of a beautiful art. Time was when "taking music lessons" was regarded as the acquiring of an "accomplishment." It belonged to the era of the young ladies' finishing school. But the real blessing of learning to play some musical instrument is deeper than that. It puts a person on a different footing in regard to all music. Music is no longer to him simply a succession of pleasing sounds. It has a meaning. He recognizes the beauty of the construction, the heart appeal of melody, the soul-stirring qualities of harmony, the fascination of rhythm. The concert, the recital, the opera, are heard with tenfold more enjoyment. For these reasons and for many others, early musical training is necessary for a well-rounded life, and the child who is deprived of this advantage suffers an injustice.—The Boston Herald.

SWIFT PRIZE FOR COMPOSERS

The second annual competition in music composition has just been announced by the Male Chorus of Swift & Co., Chicago. A prize of $100 will be given for the best musical setting for Sir Walter Scott's "Hunting Song." Conditions attached to the contest require that the composer be a resident of the United States and that the setting be for a chorus of men's voices, with piano accompaniment. It is requested that the compositions be kept within a reasonable vocal compass. Parts may be doubled at pleasure. Entries should be sent to the conductor of the chorus, D. A. Clippinger, Kimball Building, Chicago, and must be in his hands on or before July 1. The award will be made August 1. Each composition must bear a fictitious name and the composer must enclose with it a sealed envelope bearing upon the outside the fictitious name and having inside his real name and address. The composition receiving the prize becomes the property of the Swift & Co. Male Chorus and will be produced by that organization during the season of 1922-23. All others will be returned to their authors within thirty days.

April Ecstasy, Speaks ($0.75)
Dawn-Light and Bird-Song, Speaks ($0.75)
The Road to Arcady, Hammond ($0.60)

Three new songs of melodic appeal and musical interest. As may be estimated from the titles, they are all of a most optimistic cast. All are available in two different keys—high and low—and are put out in the fine shape for which this sterling publishing house is noted. Searchers for good American songs, singable, healthily modern, and attractive to the average audience will do well to consider these three lyrics.

THE NEWTON THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTION

A PROTEST AND AN APPEAL

The Board of Trustees of the Newton Theological Institution wishes to register its deliberate and solemn protest against the immorality and injustice of circulating insinuations and general statements reflecting on the instruction in our theological seminaries.

Common fairness demands that those who make these attacks should assume responsibility before the proper bodies for definite charges against the institutions and persons they condemn.

We speak only for Newton, but as the Trustees of the first institution founded by American Baptists, exclusively for theological education, we call the attention of the denomination to the present situation.

We protest against this covert propaganda which seeks to enforce an invisible bondage as deadly to the Baptist heritage of freedom as any governmental control.

We appeal to the Baptists of the Northern Convention to be true to the implications of their own heroic stand for religious liberty, and to demonstrate that our democratic polity makes for ethical methods, for sanity and poise of judgment and for undeviating loyalty to the Gospel of Christ.

Authorized by the Trustees of the Newton Theological Institute.

Recommended Changes in By-laws

IN its report to the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis, June 14-20, 1922, the Executive Committee will recommend the following changes in the By-laws:

1. That Article I, Section 1 (a) be amended to read as follows:

"Any Baptist church in the United States may appoint one delegate and one additional delegate for every one hundred members, provided the church during the year immediately preceding the annual meeting of the Convention shall have made a contribution of money for the work of at least one of the cooperating organizations of the Convention or for the work of the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention or for the work of the Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention."

The purpose of this amendment is clear. The existence of it previously would have prevented some registrations.

2. That Article III, Section 1 be amended to read as follows:

"The Convention shall meet annually on the Wednesday before the first Sunday in June, at such place as shall be fixed by the Convention. For a special reason the Executive Committee in conference with the Board of Managers of the cooperating organizations may designate some other place or some other time for the annual meeting."

The purpose of this amendment is twofold:—(a) To change the date of the annual meeting from Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in June to Wednesday before the first Sunday in June; and (b) to give the Executive Committee in conference with the Boards of Managers of the cooperating organizations power to change the place of meeting of the Convention when emergencies arise.

3. Article IV, Section 11, in the sentence beginning "The final report of the Committee," insert after the word "presented" the words "in printed form"; and in the same sentence after the words "morning session of the" the words "day prior to the," so that the whole sentence shall read, "The final report of the Committee shall be presented in printed form, not later than at the morning session of the day prior to the last day on which the Convention meets."

Welcoming a Missionary's Daughter

Miss Edna Ruth Paul of Ottawa, Kans., who sailed from New York, September 30 for Golaghat, Assam, as a missionary under the auspices of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society, has met with a royal welcome there, according to word just received from that distant land. The following letter, written by Miss Anna E. Long, another missionary of the society stationed at Golaghat, tells of Miss Paul's arrival:

"No girl ever had a warmer or more sincere welcome than fell to the lot of Ruth Paul. Our visitors came into Golaghat from Jorhat. It was night and we lighted our two compounds and the church with candles and earth lamps such as are used in the Hindu festivals. Oh, but it was a pretty sight! Our school boys and girls, women and men lined up along the roadside, each person with a light in one hand and a palm leaf in the other.

"As the three automobiles came into sight and made themselves known by their 'honk, honk!' cheering of the most rousing sort broke the evening stillness. It was great fun to hear Ruth's exclamations of surprise when, after the first greeting, we brought her over to the ladies' compound, our little white city ablaze with many lights from tiny lamps and candles, and gave her another welcome. Our school girls sang their English welcome and smiled upon their new Miss Sahib, in a royal good way.

"The welcome in the church was particularly touching. When Mr. Swanson spoke her name and she went forward the whole church company rose in greeting, and one after another of our trained workers and ordained men spoke of Mr. Paul (her father, a missionary), and the splendid work he did for Assam. This is the place for Ruth Paul!"

Dr. H. F. Stilwell, superintendent of evangelism, writes "In order that there might result an intenser contemplation of our entire denominational interests, the Board of the American Home Mission Society requested the Executive Committee of the Northern Baptist Convention to make provision in the program of the convention for consideration of its evangelistic program. Co-operating with the superintendent the program committee of the convention is planning to do this. While this will deprive a group of workers of a most intimate and helpful meeting of unquestioned value, it is hoped that the plan devised for this year will engender a yet wider inspiration."

Fresh from the Field

A telegram from Dr. J. Y. Aitchison reads: "Total income fiscal year ending April 30 from all sources so far as reported up to noon, May 13, $9,472,133.21. Other credits not yet definitely reported will doubtless carry total beyond $9,500,000 for year. This makes little more than 75 per cent of amount received previous fiscal year on behalf all participating organizations. Wish to express our hearty appreciation to churches and friends whose devotion and sacrificial giving have helped make possible this showing."

Rev. J. C. Dent has accepted a call to the Judson Church, located in North Austin, Chicago, and began his work on Sunday, May 14.

Mr. W. G. Brimson, manager of Transportation for the Northern Baptist Convention, announces that the dates of sale of the reduced-price tickets to Indianapolis have been changed so that such tickets can now be secured from June 5-14 inclusive.

The Western Washington Convention was held with the First Church, Everett, May 15-17.

At the annual meeting of the New England District of the Woman's Home Mission Society held in Portsmouth, the following officers were chosen: President, Mrs. E. C. Herrick of Fall River; Vice-president, Mrs. Grace C. Lathrop of Brookline; Secretary, Mrs. A. E. Watkins of Arlington; Treasurer, Miss S. M. Hayward of Malden; District Director for White Cross, Mrs. A. E. Reynolds of Somerville; District Director for World Wide Guilds, Mrs. Sherman Perry of Tewksbury; District Director for Children World Crusades, Miss Louise Paine of Newton Center. A strong program dealing with the Negroes, Mexicans, Indians, Porto Ricans, and the immigrant population in America was presented by able speakers.

Rev. J. G. York, pastor at Grand Forks, N. D., recently lost his mother who passed away on May 4, at Peru, Ind. He was absent from his field for a few days in attendance at the funeral and on his return honored us in the office of THE BAPTIST with his presence.

On April 9, the Third Church, St. Louis, Mo., celebrated the fifth anniversary of the beginning of the pastorate of Dr. W. H. Geistweil. They have been great years during which pastor and people have been happy in a constantly enlarging work.

The First Baptist Church of San Francisco, Calif., has extended an urgent and unanimous call to Dr. J. J. Ross, pastor of the Second Baptist Church, Chicago, to become its pastor. In extending this call without seeing or hearing Dr. Ross, the church has departed from its usual historic custom. Then the Northern California Baptists assembled at Chico, Calif., on May 10, also extended Dr. Ross a unanimous, urgent, and enthusiastic invitation to accept the call to the First Church of San Francisco. At the present time, Dr. Ross has the matter under consideration.

A Pastoral Call

"I am living in the country forty-five miles from the nearest Baptist church but I read THE BAPTIST every week and am greatly interested in it and in the New World Movement. Enclosed find check for $25 to help the good cause and always my prayers are for the advancement of God's kingdom on earth." This fellow-worker lives in California. It is the high privilege of THE BAPTIST to make a pastoral call each week in this home. The matters of the denomination and the kingdom are laid upon the heart of this good woman and she by her prayers and gifts has fellowship with us.

Killam's Kollum

A "Civilized" Religion

Young folks are young folks. It is hard to make them deacons and deaconesses before their time. A pastor recently told us of a young people's meeting in his church in which the influence of a college course upon the religious life of the students was under discussion. Some of the speakers told of a deepened sense of religious values due to college experiences and some told of the breaking down of certain beliefs which were held in pre-college days. One young man summed up the discussion by saying, "What happens to your religion, as far as I can gather, depends largely upon the kind of religion you have when you enter college. If you have a 'civilized' religion you are all right." THE BAPTIST is devoted to the cause of a "civilized" religion—a religion which harmonizes with the facts both of revelation and of life.

It Is Good Sense

Julian H. Strong of Hyattsville, Md., writes: "I am so pleased with your article entitled 'Baptist Training for Baptist Pastors.' It is indeed a great article. By all means let the Baptist boy attend the Baptist college, and if he has the ministry in view, urge him to attend a Baptist theological seminary. Truth is too valuable to throw away."

Give Her Three Cheers

Miss Vera Byers, chairman of the educational committee of the B. Y. P. U. of the First Church, Everett, Wash., deserves three cheers. She sent under date of May 1 sixty-five subscriptions to THE BAPTIST of which forty-two were new. The check amounted to $162. Pastors, do you know that the young people with a little coaching and encouragement can do wonders in building up the list of subscribers to our denominational periodicals. Miss Byers and her helpers have set an example which will be helpful to hundreds of churches throughout the country. Good-work!

Unbiased and Wholesome

"Will you kindly send me a list of the subscribers with dates of expiration? I shall give the matter my personal attention. Accept my congratulations on the unbiased, wholesome, representative character of the contents of THE BAPTIST. I am proud of our denominational newspaper."—Rev. Clark T. Brownell, Brattleboro, Vt.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH in Newton views with concern the accusations and claims of dissatisfaction now being directed toward our denominational activities. It feels that other churches may be helped if they know how this church regards our present perplexities.

Acting entirely on its own initiative the church decided on April 28th to appoint a committee to study the question. At a meeting of the church held Sunday morning, May 7th, the committee made its report, and presented the following resolution. This was unanimously adopted and ordered published in our denominational press at the expense of the church.

3. Whereas, Each church decides as to the eligibility of its own membership and the correctness of its own views in accordance with its own interpretation of the New Testament; and
4. Whereas, Baptists admittedly have the right to disagree in matters of doctrine and policy in accordance with their time-honored practice regarding religious liberty and freedom of conscience; and
5. Whereas, The New Testament provides the method by which charges may be brought against any Baptist church or institution or any member thereof, should serious differences of opinion arise; and
6. Whereas, There is widespread and indefinite criticism in our denomination, which threatens the very life of our missionary enterprises, both at home and abroad, and tends to discredit our colleges and seminaries; to separate our churches and to limit the usefulness of our denominational agencies;

Therefore

We, the members of the First Baptist Church in Newton, at Newton Centre, do hereby earnestly and prayerfully

Resolve

1. That we recognize the essential Baptist principle of freedom of speech and of criticism, but we insist that this right must be exercised in accordance with the prescribed method of the New Testament, namely—Matthew 18:15-18—"Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican."

2. That we believe that each individual must assume the full responsibility for any criticism which he may make of any person in the denomination or of any member of the faculties of our schools or of any policies of our accredited societies and boards.
3. That we regard general criticism, general accusations and blanket indictments as highly unethical. They give rise to suspicion, kill confidence, sow discord among brethren and cause the innocent to suffer with any who may be justly accused.
4. That we urge our sister churches to withhold judgment as to all charges which are now being made until each side has had an opportunity to formally present its case.
5. That the denomination created the Board of Promotion as the best agency it could then devise to place the needs of its work before the churches. It may not be perfect; it has been amended and it may be further modified, but we note with a worthy pride that the results of its work have been far greater than those of any other agency which the denomination has employed and we pledge to it our continued support.
6. That we look to the future with confidence if we can go forward in the cherished fellowship of our common trust and hope in Him who is the great Head of the Church.

Light without Heat

THE news that a Princeton professor is in a fair way to perfect a form of illumination that is devoid of heat has greatly stirred the scientific world. We cannot get along without heat, of course; it propels our engines. But it appears that the concomitance of heat with light is generally an embarrassment and a sad waste of energy, and that, for purposes of illumination, cold light is preferable to hot. We can easily believe it. Think what it would mean to the coal miner when he goes down the shaft into the depths, where are all sorts of explosive and dangerous gases, if he could carry a lamp which generates light without heat! It might be well to invite this learned professor to address the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis. Think what it would mean if our theological experts could take a leaf out of his book and transform all their doctrinal energy into light when they come together in convention! The odium theologicum warms us up, but does not enlighten us, and there are a lot of explosives lying about loose just now.

Baptists need nothing more at the present juncture than cold light. We need clear thinking. As a witty Englishman lately said, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not clarity, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal!" If we could, by chance, agree in our definitions we should have come a long way on the road to mutual understanding. At present too many among us, while using the same words, are talking about wholly different things. Voluble discussions are often rooted in muddy thinking.

What, for example, do we mean by orthodoxy? Do we mean what our fathers believed? Go back a few generations and we have each of us a bewildering and embarrassing number of ancestors. They increase in a geometrical ratio. If we say our Baptist fathers, do we mean our Calvinistic or our Anabaptist forebears?

What Do You Suggest?

OUR esteemed contemporary, the Watchman-Examiner, prints in its issue of May 4, a very drastic criticism of the Board of Promotion from the pen of Mrs. Caroline Atwater Mason and gives to it a somewhat cautious approval in an editorial. The strictures of Mrs. Mason are certainly significant, if true. They have been given a publicity that seems to require a reply. Since "sweetness and light," and that light without heat, are the most pressing requisites of the hour, let us be kind and chivalrous in our response.

We admire humility in the servants of the denomination, but the Board of Promotion ought not to be required to confess sins of which it is not guilty. That is hysteria. As a matter of record, the Board of Promotion did not "just grow" like Topsy: it is the child

We might provoke a pretty argument over that issue without doubt.

As a matter of fact, at least two strains have entered into our Baptist heritage. One is derived from the Protestant Reformation on the Continent and particularly from Calvin (with whose teaching English Baptists early came into contact during their sojourns in Holland), with their insistence upon correctness of doctrine, their sacramentarianism, and their substitution of the authority of the Bible, conceived as infallible and inerrant, for that of the pope and the Roman church. The other is derived from the Anabaptists, who, though contemporaneous with the Reformation, were largely independent of it. Their distrust of form and ceremony, their confidence in the inward light, their social passion and democracy, their proclamation of the freedom of the conscience and the right of private judgment, and their assertion of the proper independence of church and state are as integral elements of the Baptist tradition as any other. To which of the fathers shall we adhere? Which is the faith once delivered to the saints? Which is Baptist orthodoxy?

Down through Baptist history these two strains, so hard to harmonize, so antipathetic in their nature, have persisted, so that in the present hour they go far to explain the divisions within the denomination that now dismay us. Most of the so-called new theology is at least as old as the Reformation, and much of the so-called old theology, including the doctrine of an infallible and inerrant Bible, is no older than the Reformation. If orthodoxy is the "faith of our fathers" it is folly and worse to narrow it to the content of either of the historic streams that have contributed to our Baptist tradition. The historic Baptist platform is broad enough for both liberals and conservatives to stand together upon it without elbowing one another.

of the denomination. Its tremendous task was assigned to it, and not originated by it, and it was assumed at the behest of the denomination voiced with unanimity and great enthusiasm in the only way provided by which the denomination can express itself. It has labored hard and devotedly at an enterprise from the magnitude and toil of which any body of men might shrink. It deserves our gratitude. There are some now who, like the critic whose article we are examining, declare that the One Hundred Million Dollar New World Movement was surreptitiously sprung upon the denomination by a group of designing men and women, "promoters" in the commonly received commercial sense of the term," whom Mrs. Mason now charges with a "species of intellectual disingenuousness" because they talk as though the denomination is morally committed to it. In a like manner some are charging that the Eighteenth Amendment was placed upon the statute book when the people were looking the other way, and that the people are therefore in no way bound to concern themselves with it. The facts will not bear out this statement.

The underlying idea of the present denominational program was first suggested at Atlantic City in 1918, when the Northern Baptist Convention requested the laymen to study the needs and opportunities confronting the various denominational organizations. Each participating organization cooperated heartily with the Survey Committee in determining the needs for the development of our work. The Survey and the statement of its financial requirements was carefully and deliberately considered by the Denver Convention, and the delegates of the churches there assembled declared their determination to raise the required sum before April 1, 1924. Delegates from the churches in attendance upon two conventions, one held on the Atlantic seaboard and the other far toward the western boundary of our Convention field, had a part in determining the objectives and formulating plans for their attainment. If Northern Baptists, as a denomination did not originate the New World Movement then they are incapable of originating anything.

Nor can Mrs. Mason's statement be substantiated that "in the first place, the scheme of raising a sum so far in excess of the actual average giving of the churches * * * appeared foredoomed to be an expensive failure." As a matter of fact the thoughtful men and women at the Denver Convention, as competent and as spiritual as those who remained at home, thought it to be possible. The program was large. It called for a real sacrifice on the part of our people. But the war had aroused us to the consciousness that our previous plans for worldwide service fell far short of the magnitude of the task which our Lord had committed to us. Moreover the splendid success of our Methodist brethren encouraged us to believe it possible. And it was possible; it is still possible. If all our people had responded as a large fraction of them did we should have gone far beyond the goal. Let us be fair, and let us be frank. Such defects as the Movement may have, both in plan and execution, lie now upon the surface where any one can read them. If a fraction of the acumen and energy of the multitude of its critics, displayed now at this late stage of its progress, had been available in the form of constructive foresight and cooperative effort, the record to date might be different.

Now what has caused our partial failure thus far? Not doubts as to the wisdom of creating, or as to the form of organization of the Board of Promotion, nor an apparent threat of the spiritual deterioration and the materialization of the churches from the increased standard of giving which the success of the Movement required, which are alleged by Mrs. Mason as causes. Such doubts did not arise during the first year of the enterprise; they are a later growth, and such a threat was not anticipated and has not appeared. The churches that have adopted the advanced standard of giving have been spiritually enriched and blessed.

That the arrest of the Movement cannot have been altogether due to scruples with respect to the basic principles upon which it was organized, as alleged, seems to be sufficiently indicated by the proportion of the churches that have participated in it. Mrs. Mason gives wider circulation to the unfounded statements that have been made in other quarters that "out of 10,000 Baptist churches 6,500 are 'non-cooperating' with the New World Movement." The fact is that nearly 8,000 churches have been contributing to the Movement. It is true that only 2,000 churches participated on the basis of a standard of giving high enough to make possible the success of the enterprise, in the case of these churches amounting to an average of about $24 per member per year.

What then was the cause? It was the emergence of doctrinal divisions within the denomination. What Mrs. Mason rightly calls the "major crisis" precipitated the minor crisis.

When the New World Movement was initiated there was a degree of harmony and cooperation in the denomination that promised well for its success. True, there were differences of theological opinion among us, as there always have been, but they had not up to that time been permitted to disrupt our Christian fellowship nor been adduced as a reason for failure to support our denominational enterprises. A new situation, however, arose soon after the inception of the New World Movement.

Shortly before the subscriptions to the Movement were taken, an attack was launched against our schools, and in terms so vague and general that practically all our educational institutions were placed under suspicion. Later an element in the denomination also opposed the cooperation with the Interchurch World Movement which had been enjoined by vote of the Convention. As to the charges against the schools the denomination does not know even now to what degree they are justified, since no specific schools or teachers have been named. The Committee on Schools which reported at the Des Moines Convention pointed out the way in which specific cases of false teaching might and should be dealt with, but the vague and impersonal attacks have not ceased, and the whole great program, missionary as well as educational, has been made to suffer. Human nature is such that it does not require much agitation and persuasion and suspicion to induce many men to believe that it is either unwise or positively wrong for them to pay out money.

When it was claimed that millions of money from many donors were being withheld because the schools were included in the program and gifts could not be designated so as to exclude them, the Board of Promotion reversed its action and provided that donors might specify their gifts as they pleased; but the millions have not been forthcoming.

It is not our purpose here to pass judgment upon the nature of the opposition with which the New World Movement has had to deal, still less to impugn the motives of those who have been responsible for it. Though we may question their wisdom, we do not question their sincerity. But a cloud of suspicion and doubt has been cast over missionaries, ministers, teachers, official leaders and members of our churches, and the New World Movement has reached only the half-way mark. This may all have been inevitable and necessary and to the praise of God's glory, but you must be patient with us, brethren, until we are able to see it. If it is a blessing, it is a blessing in disguise, and as yet the disguise is perfect. It now seems to us to be all inexpressibly sad, and we feel that it is a situation with which we ought not to be content. It should be possible for sincere men to get together. The consciences of multitudes of our people carried them whole-heartedly into the New World Movement and caused them to give sacrificially, heroically, beyond the mark reached by any other Christian body in history. The story of their devotion has not yet been fully told. The consciences of others, doubtless equally sincere, caused them to keep their money in their pockets. Now we are told that the effort to raise a hundred million dollars for missionary and educational purposes was "distinctly a scheme of ambitious men, men possessed neither of divine, nor even of sufficient human sanction," that the whole enterprise was "thrust" upon Baptists at large "without their knowledge and consent," that the whole plan was a part of an experiment to further the purpose "of transforming the church government of the Baptists from a democracy to an oligarchy." Do our critics mean to imply that these who refrained from giving were right and to be earnestly commended for their fidelity to the precepts of the gospel, and that these generous givers were wrong and traitors, though unconscious of it, to the Baptist and the Christian cause in furthering this nefarious scheme by their gifts? If so, you tell them; we have not the heart to do so. The fact is we rather admired them. We did not see the "scheme" either, and took a little share in the enterprise ourselves, so that our mouth is closed.

Now it is proposed by the Watchman-Examiner's correspondent to dissolve the Board of Promotion, and by the editor it is suggested that it should be reorganized or a substitute found for it. We have no brief for the Board of Promotion. We judge that it is not clamoring against change nor for its continued existence. It is the creation and the servant of the denomination. If the Board should be dissolved or reorganized, what is the suggestion of its critics?

THE HOPE OF THE FUTURE

The young people of the churches are the hope of the future. To meet them is always good, and particularly refreshing after one has wandered for a time in the mists of controversy and the shades of failure in which some older Baptists have been losing themselves.

These young people do not know so much theology as some of their elders, but they love Jesus Christ.

They are inclined to believe that our missionaries are worthy men and women, and are anxious to do as good work in the United States as these people are doing in Asia and Africa.

They may be hazy as to eschatology, but they are anxious to do their part towards making the kingdom of God to come on the earth.

Somewhere in the denomination there may be men who are not sound in the faith, but these young people are far more interested in getting their own job done than in searching out the heretics.

Older people may talk of crises and catastrophes; these young people abound in hope and feel sure that they are going to remake the world in their generation.

We take our hats off to them. It is simply great to live among them for a time. But we do more than salute them; we dedicate this number of THE BAPTIST to them and to their work. We doubt if in history any other of our Baptist papers has prepared a number quite so thoroughly in their interest. And we call on them to play with us the game of our Christ and of our whole Baptist denomination against all adversaries, whether within or without the household of faith.

"I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one."

SOME FACTS YOU SHOULD KNOW

Inasmuch as a great deal has been said concerning the number of non-cooperating churches, the following facts regarding the New World Movement should be generally known:

Eighty-five per cent of the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention are contributing sums, large and small, to the New World Movement.

There are now contributing to the New World Movement 300 more churches than contributed to missions in any form before the movement was inaugurated.

The expense of collection of the large sums raised has not been more than 15 per cent.

At least 2,000 of our churches are giving on what is for them and all of us an entirely new standard of giving.

Northern Baptists gave last year at the rate of $10 per member as against $6 per member in the denomination which stands next.

Now let us see if the truth can catch up with some of the lies.

GHOSTS WHAT AIN'T

The author of "Pigs is Pigs," has in the May American Magazine an article dealing with the bogies which people have and which either scare them from action or prevent really effective action. There is no reason why they should distrust their own powers or why they should imagine that they cannot accomplish certain particular tasks. But they have such fears and are forever drawing back ineffectively from undertakings into which they should throw themselves. They fail because of ghosts of their own conjuring. Such ghosts, the writer says, have no real existence; they can and should therefore be laid.

Churches are as bad as people in this regard. They have never done particular things and so imagine that they cannot. Somebody has told them at some time that trouble will follow new policies, and so they never inaugurate them. Instead of trusting God and going ahead full-steam in his work, they fear and worry. There is nothing there, brethren; forget your fears and try some really great thing for God.

WHAT ABOUT YOUR CHURCH INSURANCE?

More than $6,000,000 worth of church property was destroyed by fire during 1919 and 1920. There were 3,500 fires, which indicates that on an average there are five church fires a day throughout the entire year. Only about 62 per cent of the value of these buildings was covered by insurance.

How is it with your church? Is it insured? Is the protection adequate? Better be safe than sorry! If the church property belongs to the Lord, as we often assert, then we have no right to be more careless with it than with our own personal property.

How Can I Find My Calling?

Any calling is sacred if God leads you into it when seeking to know and do his will. No calling is sacred if selfish pride or ambition takes you there.

By CHARLES W. GILKEY

OUR question is not, how can I find a job? It is a deeper and harder one. No position kept open and waiting by some personal or family influence, no new opening created by the business opportunities of the reconstruction period, no list of "men wanted" in a newspaper column or an employment agency, is sufficient to answer our problem. Many people, perhaps most people, do not realize that this deeper, harder question exists at all; they are satisfied when they have found a good job. This article is addressed not to them, but to those young people, fewer in number perhaps, but of much more value in potential service to the world, who have realized that far greater than the question of making a living is that of making a life.

What is Life For?

This question was important enough before the war; for it concerns the most precious thing that any of us possess—our life. What is your life? It is a plastic personality made up of inheritances, tendencies, and capacities which, while more or less individual and distinctive, will take its final form and even its content from the central purpose to which you devote it; it is a span of time, of fifty or sixty or seventy years, which will be filled and indeed almost literally made, by the interests to which you give it. The purpose to which you decide to devote yourself for the eight or ten or twelve hours of the working day will not only determine the direction your life will take and the interests to which it will be devoted, but it will determine in no small degree what you yourself will become. Some of us have money, and some have not; some of us have brains, or beauty, or talent, or personal charm—and some have not. But all of us alike have a life before us—just one—only one; and it will be quickly over. We can cut it short through carelessness, or waste it through idleness, or throw it away through trifling—or we can use it for some worthy purpose. There is only one other question of equal importance with Jesus' famous question—"What shall a man give in exchange for his life?"—and that is the question we are asking now: For what purpose are you going to use your life?

To any young person with a keen sense of honor, this question has been made even more urgent by the war. Fifty-six thousand four hundred and twenty-two men of our own nation, and probably not less than 10,000,000 men of our generation, have laid down in the supreme sacrifice their chance at life through these most critical years in all human history. Nearly 200,000 young Americans, and certainly not less than 15,000,000 men of all nations, will lead the rest of their lives under the handicap which wounds or weakness have laid upon them. No thoughtful young person who has his life still unimpaired before him can think about their sacrifice and his escape without a sense of responsibility for the use of his own life such as he never had before. If the war seemed for a time to cheapen the value of those millions of human lives which it devoured, it has immeasurably enhanced the value of the chance to be alive which is given to us who remain.

And this responsibility is of course all the greater because of the extraordinary circumstances under which we have this chance. All human life and all civilized institutions have been through the melting-pot of the greatest war in history; and whatever the new shape they finally take, it will certainly not be that in which they went in. These next decades of the remolding process will offer to every individual such a chance as no previous generation of men has known to bring his personal touch and pressure to bear upon the mold before things cool off and harden into the shape they will keep for generations if not centuries to come. What a chance it is to be alive and young now!

Is God's Calling Yours?

But our question involves more even than this tremendous responsibility. Thought along this line may easily discourage or even crush us with the sense of an overwhelming burden, if it simply leaves us groping desperately under this weight of obligation, with no assurance that we shall get anywhere or find anything in this search for the right use of our lives. Our question is, how shall I find my calling? And in that last word is wrapped up the Christian man's faith in a God who has a plan for human life in general and for human lives in particular; who is calling to all men to fall in with and work along the lines of this plan; and who can and will use those men who thus put themselves under his direction, in ways and with results greater than they know. These last years have shown all the world what victories a great general can win in the face of powerful opposition, when once he is given undivided authority to carry out his plans. What could not God do through us young people of the new generation, if only we would put ourselves under his supreme command?

This paper is addressed particularly to young people who share this fundamental Christian faith that God has a purpose for all human life and for their lives individually and who honestly want to find that purpose and fulfil it. Our question is: How can we find what that purpose is? How can I find my calling?

The blue ocean today is dotted with all kinds of craft bound in all directions, each for its own desired haven. There are long, low ocean

A Soliloquy

(The following clever parody on Hamlet's Soliloquy is from the pen of Rev. William Harman Van Allen, in the weekly calendar of the Church of the Advent, Boston.)

TO pledge or not to pledge—that is the question:
Whether 'tis nobler in a man to gather
The church's blessing free and leave the others
To foot the bills and spread the gospel tidings.
Or to take pen, to sign a pledge that's duplex
And share the cost. To write—to sign—to pledge—
To pledge—perchance to pay! Ay, there's the rub:
For in six months I may have lowered salary,
Stocks may have sunk, or bad investments swat me.
And then, besides, the increased cost of living
Must give me pause; then too, there's the respect
I owe myself to run a costly motor;
The dues of clubs, the children off at college!
Why not content myself with casual giving
On pleasant Sundays when I journey churchward
And not commit myself to certain moneys?
Why not? Because I do not propose to be a slacker!

greyhounds, and high-decked floating hostilities; snub-nosed, low-laden tramp steamers, heavy, slow-moving schooners, and towering, square-rigged ships; in the warmer seas sleek steam yachts speed about, and the white sails of pleasure craft shine in the sunlight. Now, various as are these craft, and diverse as are their courses and destinations, they find their way about successfully because each carries a compass that points uniformly and reliably toward one fixed point—the magnetic pole. Because all alike carry that compass pointing due north, all alike can find their respective goals though they lie wide apart—provided each steers a steady course with hand firm upon the rudder, and turns not aside for wind or wave or storm. Now it is just so on the wide ocean of human life. Here we are, all kinds of human craft; some of us built for work and some largely for comfort or show; some of us with a large carrying capacity for burdens, and some of us meant to tow other heavy-laden lives along; some of us mere pleasure craft, with no fixed course or destination, idling about as the wind or our whims direct us. Is there any compass for the sea of life, which every craft of whatever type or destination can use to guide its own course? There must be; for you and I know all kinds of people at all kinds of work, whose life purpose is equally sincere and generous and truly Christian—not because they are steering the same course or carrying the same kind of cargo, but because the purpose of their lives is derived from the same central pole. What is that pole?

God's Will the Compass

Jesus said that it was the will of God. How he directed all his life in relation to that central purpose, holding to his course to the very last, even through Gethsemane to Calvary, we all know. But we do not always remember that he made God's will the fixed pole for every other life as well as for his own; he said that the doing of God's will determined entrance to his kingdom, and established nearness of kinship to himself. He said that it was the central purpose of the universe, for the realization of which men should work and pray in cooperation with God. Now what is this will of God? Jesus himself has told us: "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done." The will of God is the establishment of his kingdom or rule on earth; it is the administration of human life as he would have it carried on. And it is the business of every human being to find his personal relation to that universal will of God, and steer his course over the sea of human life in steady and careful conformity to it.

"O yes," I can hear some one saying: "You are getting ready to tell us that the will of God is that we should all be ministers or missionaries or social workers." Now that is not what I am getting ready to say or am going to say. The trouble with most of us is that our idea of the kingdom of God is altogether too petty and provincial; just as it is true that most of us worship altogether too petty and provincial a God. We think of his kingdom and his will as having to do only with those things and law and politics, our industrial and social order. He seeks to be Lord of all the worthy interests of human life—and his kingdom includes them all. In the fine phrase of Dean Bosworth, it is "a new order..... wherein men shall have learned to use power in friendly fashion"—power of all kinds for others' sakes.

This conception of the will of God as the pole of human life does not require that we all be religious workers; but it does require one very definite thing: that the central purpose of our life be unselfish. Money and fame and self-gratification are ruled out at once; a man whose life is really to be Christian cannot use it for those things as primary purposes, and the man who makes ambition for these things the dominant motive of his life cannot hope to find the purpose of God, much less fulfil it.

How to Know God's Will

When once young people grasp the fundamental purpose of life, namely that it is to be a service of faith and love; and when this question is settled in its relation to the universal will of God, they can then begin to look for clear light on the choosing of a life work. Jesus has given us a very wonderful word the applications of which to human life are manifold. It not only sums up his philosophy of religion and his method of dealing with doubts and intellectual difficulties, but gathers up his counsel on this question of life work: "If any man will to do his will, he shall know." This means that the individual whose personal will is in line with God's truth shall not only be guided into further and larger truth, but shall be guided to the right choice of a calling in life—that he who is determined to do the will of God in general shall know what the will of God is for him in particular.

But how shall you know? Where shall a man look for light as to what that will is for him? First, to his own inheritance and native attitudes. To the individual who really believes that God is his creator, his own natural interests and aptitudes will be a true sign of God's leading.

Second, deliberate experiment is a great help at this point. If you are a college student, you will have special opportunities for this. Utilize your vacation period and your spare time to try yourself out.

Third, seek the advice of friends, particularly those who know men best and whom men trust. No human being to be sure is wise enough to settle finally this most personal of all questions for anyone else; but

The Living Christ

WHEREVER Christ looms large as the great central reality, men and women fall down before him and do what is logically implied. Wherever the living Christ breathes upon a little company or a great company, the right motives assert themselves and dominate—such motives as gratitude to him, for what he does on those occasions when they come face to face with him as a living Christ, with all that this logically implies. Wherever he stands out as he is, the living Christ, people see that it carries with it the fact that he has right of way to themselves and all they possess or ever may possess. Likewise the motive of obedience to his beckoning hand. I repeat it, the living Christ. It is inconceivable that the Christ who rose from the dead should stand out before any individual who acknowledges Christ, or in any company, and not accomplish marvelous things.

—John R. Mott.

interests that with our narrow outlook we call distinctively religious. We forget that the kingdom and will of a God who is big enough to be the God of this universe must include all life and all its worthy interests and values. If he is the God of this solar system with all its vast and delicate forces and interactions, of this earth with all its powers and treasures of mine and field and ocean, he must be interested in and have a purpose for the best utilization of all these things—his will must include engineering and industry. If he has made this human body with all its wondrous mechanism, this human mind and spirit with all their infinite capacities, his will must relate itself to medicine and teaching. If he is guiding human history in all its complex evolution, his kingdom must concern itself with our human interest and sympathy are of great value in finding the right road.

If God really has a plan in life for us to follow, he can show us directly and personally what it is. The final word must be spoken in a man's own heart—and God can and does speak it there just as truly today as he did to Gideon or Samuel or Isaiah of old. That is why prayer is so indispensable to the man who would find his true calling; it keeps his life open upward and his ears attentive to hear God speak. The subway trains in certain cities are run by an electric starting signal that rings the bell in the motorman's cab when all the doors are shut and the circuit thereby closed; no time is lost in getting under way, and the signal is never given too soon. So God has the power to give the word "Forward" in the secret heart of a man when his life is ready to move along a certain course and the track is clear ahead. When that word sounds low and clear in your own soul, follow it, no matter what the apparent obstacles in the path or the arguments of men to draw you aside. In that way lies God's calling for you.

And that calling for you is sacred, no matter what it is. God calls some men to be lawyers and doctors and business men, just as truly and just as sacredly as he calls some other men to be ministers and social workers and missionaries. It is not callings but motives that divide into the old dilemma of sacred and secular. Any calling is sacred if God leads you into it when you are unselfishly seeking to know and do his will. No calling, least of all the ministry, is sacred if selfish pride or ambition takes you there. Just as the soldier who guards the stores or carries the food or cares for the wounded is serving his country as truly and as indispensably as the man in the front line trenches, so the man who holds his post because God put him there carries the seal of its sanctity within his own heart as a divine commission. And the Great Captain of our salvation, who stationed him there, will not forget either him or his essential service in the days of final victory.

Our Young People in the Colleges

BY ALLYN K. FOSTER

WITHOUT blinking any of the limitations I am prepared to say after an extensive acquaintance with college students in all parts of the country that, taken as a whole, they are sound in body, mind and heart. These are then the three divisions of my word at this time. It is probably the healthiest group of young people that ever led a new generation. All our training has been in this direction. The importance of health has been stressed from the nursery to maturity. Young people know more about their bodies than any other group of young people ever did. Sometimes they know too much and there are those who are possessed of an abnormal fleshly consciousness, but taking them as a whole they have not misused the information imparted to them. It is the healthiest group of boys and girls we have ever reared. The logical changes in habits and custom have made the girls seem pretty radical and we of the previous generation are likely to be shocked at what we call the "flapper" and her ways, but the extreme manifestations are no fair indication of the sound healthy body and mind of the great student body throughout the country. When we recall that this generation of young people is passing through its formative area at the conflux of three great movements, we are inclined to wonder why it does as well as it does. The woman movement, bringing the two sexes together in every walk of life, a generation of sex education that has made many young people over-wise and rationalistic, and the post-armistice period of let-down which has thickened the air with its very fleshiness—these three movements have produced a moral fog through which youth has had to fight itself to maturity.

Healthiest Ever Reared

I find the young people in the colleges sound of mind. That word "sound" of course is dangerous because it has a traditional atmosphere. A mind is not sound when it is static nor merely because it is mobile. Real soundness in my judgment consists in the effort to hold some things that have been clearly established and to reach toward new things which are clearly tangent to the old. Only thus can progress be attained. Our young people in the colleges are conservative by training and progressive by that very spirit of youth which sends them to college. They are not destructive. One thing is clear. They have little respect for intellectual authority. They have got to be shown, and they are willing to follow the man who shows them. After talking with thousands of students about the vital matters of religion, I find them thoroughly eager and thoroughly willing to accept a rational statement of anything. On the other hand they must not be asked to accept any statement just because it is in some sense or other authoritative.

Sound in Heart

The heart of the young people in our colleges is sound. Of course there is much riotous living. Of course there are many men and women who have lowered their standards both of ideals and of conduct, but we do not get a fair perspective upon the youth of the land by stating tragic cases. I can only bear the honest testimony that from top to bottom they have given a response to the vital appeals of religion when presented in terms in which their very realities are stated. The field in my judgment is white unto the harvest but not every bungling reaper can gather it. The men who will reach the hearts of our most thoughtful young people in the colleges are the men who have caught the academic spirit, who know the college atmosphere and who will seek to interpret Jesus in terms of the prevailing modes of thought. Our old realities of religion never change. It is silly for any man to talk about preaching the old gospel. We are all preaching the old gospel of redemption and we must somehow relate it to the thinking of this generation.

The Church and Its Young People

Always something doing in the B. Y. P. U. meeting. Plans by which the church can conserve and develop its young life. The larger denominational outlook.

My B. Y. P. U. In Action

By FRANCIS C. STIFLER

STANDING at the main entrance of the assembly room where the Bible school meets for its opening worship is Harvey a college lad who has been a loyal member of the society since it was organized. He is distributing "On Time Badges" to the children. The moment he withholds a badge the piano begins. It is Signy playing. She found Christ in the Sunday night meetings where she got her early training in playing hymns. And there is the Unity Class of boys and girls and the Amicitia Class which is also organized into a chapter of W. W. G. They are all active members of the B. Y. P. U. and there are the teachers in the beginners, the primary and service departments—the whole society in action Sunday morning at 9:45.

Some one should discipline that girl who keeps writing with pencil and tablet all through the opening part of the morning service. She ought to know better. The fact is Helen is making a record of all the B. Y. P. U. members who are present at the service. She has no difficulty in seeing the four splendid fellows who receive the offering. And they have not failed to be on hand for two years.

And how can anyone eat Sunday dinner so quickly? By 2:30 quartets are practicing and groups planning their programs in various parts of the church. There is a rap at my study door and in comes a whitehot spirit clothed in a fine face and a handsome bearing and a sturdy body modestly and tastily apparelled. What shall he do with his life? What must be done with some other life that will not yield to Christ? Have you some good books for Christian Culture? How can we get ten to go to St. Paul? Oh, those blessed study interviews on Sunday afternoon.

Two pianos going at once. It must be four o'clock. Both the intermediates and the juniors are in session with their lessons of prayer, their sword drills, their solos and their stories and their dramatics. Minnie May and Ruth and Signy, from the Senior society, are in charge.

Then the moving of chairs begins. The janitor has arranged them in prose. The group in charge of the senior meeting at 5:30 are re-arranging them in poetry—to suit their theme. The room is too small but it helps to pack them in. They are not all there when the first hymn is sung but by the time the second one closes every chair is taken and I am sitting just outside the door drinking it all in. It is the crowning event of the day. Sometimes a dozen pray. The prayers are not conventional. Frequently some one who never prayed in public before makes the start. Then Russell, the president, calls for announcements and usually points out a few flaws in the systems which must be corrected. After twenty minutes the program is turned over to the group. They are all sitting in the front row. Something different every time. Seldom an eloquent speaker. Often a maiden effort, with much embarrassment but glorious victory. Then the meeting is open. If the room isn't too crowded every speaker steps to the front as per agreement. Testimonies, discussions, debates, suggestions but, above all, revelations of amazing ability that without B. Y. P. U. goes on undiscovered in every church.

The Mispah benediction, and discussion becomes informal—like a bee-hive—for half an hour. Serious talk, for the most part, about life-work and soul-winning and future meetings. Lights out and a street corner rippling with laughter which dies away in every direction.

Monday morning I am working about the parsonage next door. Suddenly a tall lad stands by me. It is Kermit. Can I help him on his meeting topic for the next Sunday? Who's in the church at seven o'clock Tuesday evening? Quartets, group leaders, executive committee. Who is it serves at the weekly dinners on Wednesday nights, and assists the local charities, and stands behind the Y at school? Who? The group that ten years from now will make our church so active as to be irresistible.

The Big Convention of 1922

By CARL ANDERSON

THE "bigness" of the coming convention of young Baptists at St. Paul in June does not lie in the unprecedented registration of these young people to attend. Nor does it lie in the splendid cooperation that has been achieved by the people of the churches of the Twin Cities in making the preparations, and spreading the invitation. The "bigness" is not even in the unusual manner in which laymen, business men, young people, pastors, women all over the great Northwest have joined in its planning, nor does the "bigness" lie in the vision all of them hold of its value to the church life of their states for ten years to come. The "bigness" will not be in the attendance of the anticipated thousands, nor in the program—complete and extraordinary as it may be—nor in the auditorium, nor the setting in two beautiful cities, nor in the music, nor in the inspiration, but the enormity of the coming convention is in the young people themselves!

No one dare forecast what political changes in China, what forward projects in North Dakota, God will trace beginnings to in this convocation of young life—what Christian advertising project, what gospel spreading program, what unthinkable project in the advance of the kingdom, as radio, aluminum, Rotary, the stupendous program of missions were unthinkable not a number of years ago. Sunday schools are only a half century old! Nor may any one venture to say what future religious, or business leader may be there: No one knows who these young people are or what ideas they may generate, or what the value of these thousands of lives may be or to what ends of the earth their work may go.

The greatness of the coming convention is in the stewardship, the responsibility that God has placed in measuring up to what he may have designed for this gathering.

To forecast, to attempt to look ahead into all these young lives would be blasphemy. To do prayerfully the task that has been given to do in the "biggest" way our talents will permit is to go "Forward with Christ."

How the Local Church Can Meet Young People's Problems

By MARK F. SANBORN

IF we are to have a Baptist denomination in the future, we must look after our young people today. The average church is not awake to the challenging opportunity presented by the young people; and opportunity always means responsibility.

How can the local church meet the problems of the young people? Permit a few brief suggestions. First, make a careful study or survey of your young people. In general there will be three classes: The members of the church, those not members but attendants of the Sunday school, W. W. G., scouts, social and literary clubs, etc., and those young people of the community for whom no other church is directly responsible. None of these is to be left out if your program adequately meets the needs of the young people.

Second, the church will adopt a definite aim or purpose. It will decide just what it hopes to accomplish for its young people or better still help them to accomplish. Of course this aim includes decision for Christ and intelligent membership in the church. It also includes all-around development physically, mentally, socially and spiritually. It will include instruction and training in church work, missions, evangelism, and social service. These aims must be elaborated by the church.

Third, the church will study and adopt the very best means of accomplishing these aims with the material, the precious material at hand. The best thought of the pastor and officers of the church must be consecrated to this great task. It will be necessary to consider the whole program of the church in its relation to the young people — the church architecture, worship, instruction and program of service activities.

A church that thus attempts to solve its young people's problems will at once make adequate provision for financing the whole program of young people's work through the church budget. The best modern books on young people's work will be studied. The pastor and church officers will keep in touch with the summer assembly programs and attend the great international conventions. A class of the choicest young people will be trained for leadership in a study course and by direction and encouragement in Christian service.

The Summer Assembly In Action

By U. S. CLUTTON

JOIN a crowd of young people as many of us have, and attend one of our summer assemblies held on a quiet college campus or beside some beautiful lake, and catch again the inspiration of youth as you mingle among the coming leaders of our denominational life.

After looking forward for weeks to this outing we arrive singly and in groups, strangers for the most part to each other, but all coming to catch the spirit and enthusiasm bound to be received from such a gathering.

One of the greatest values of any gathering is the social contact with others of like mind, and the assembly is no exception to the rule. We arrive as strangers, but it is not long before we form friendships which sometimes last for life. The social appeal is so strong, that many look forward from year to year to meeting friends at this gathering.

The time for the opening session arrives. The program is placed before us, and we are off. "Inspiration—education and recreation"—three words which have been used by many of our assemblies in their advertising—may well sum up and describe the average assembly program.

The morning hours during the week are given over to classes for the study of such subjects as will be profitable for ministers, workers in the various departments of the Sunday school, young people's societies, World Wide Guilds, woman's mission circles, etc., and from the curriculum we must choose the subjects which will be most helpful to us.

The Sunday spent at the assembly is of the highest value along inspirational lines, from the early morning prayer service, through the Bible study period, the morning worship, the afternoon program, which is often a young people's rally, the young people's service at the regular young people's hour, to the closing inspirational sermon in the evening.

Each day there are periods which are intensely inspirational. The vesper service at the sunset hour is very impressive, and many times leads to decisions for life service. Increasingly Bible study is being emphasized, and these classes contribute to the inspirational as well as the educational value of our programs.

The afternoons of each day are religiously observed at most of our assemblies for wholesome recreation. Under competent instructors mass games are played by all. Tennis, horseshoes, croquet, baseball and other outdoor games are indulged in; where the assembly is located upon a lake, boating, bathing and fishing are part of the program; at the colleges, the gymnasiums are used for volley ball, basket ball, etc., especially on rainy days, and the swimming pools are a source of joy to girls as well as boys.

The evening programs during the week are for the most part of a recreational type. After the study classes of the morning, the recreation of the afternoon, followed by the vesper service, and perhaps a class after supper, it is deemed wise to make the popular hour which closes the day's program of a lighter vein.

Opportunity is sometimes given for a "stunt night" put on by the young people themselves, and many times real talent is discovered, but why shouldn't it be? After all the choicest young people of our Baptist churches constitute our assemblies.

When the time comes to close and certificates are issued for work done and the last session is held, it is with regret we turn our backs upon the college or lake and start for home, but always with the intention of returning next year, to renew acquaintances and receive strength and inspiration for service in our own local church.

The Young People's Department of the Church

By SELDON L. ROBERTS

A LETTER of inquiry recently came to our attention in which the question was asked: "Should courses of study for a conference for training young people in church work, where the ages range from about sixteen to twenty-five, be confined to problems of the young people's society, missions and that department of the Sunday school attended by young people themselves, or should instruction be given in the other departments of Sunday-school and church work?" This inquiry squarely faces one of the real problems of to-day in the relation of young people to church work, and indicates the two main methods by which different groups are seeking to meet that problem. On one hand there is a tendency to regard the young people of the church as a group, quite apart, who are either to be trained primarily for efficiency in their own organization, or organized into special groups for some one specialized phase of work. On the other hand, there is a growing tendency to approach the problem from the standpoint of the entire church and its whole task; and to seek such methods and work as will meet the needs of the young people themselves and at the same time recognize them as an important part of the whole church group, with tasks and obligations that reach every phase of church and kingdom interests.

The young people's department of the church, which embodies, in active planning and direction of work, this second idea, is not a new kind of young people's society but an effort to correlate all necessary and proved methods and organizations that are essential to meet the religious needs of the young people of the church and both to prepare them for and use them in the widest possible way in the whole program of church work.

The church is recognized as the primary agency for planning and conducting all kingdom work.

Under the guidance of the church a director of young people's work is appointed who has general oversight of all the organizations and activities of young people in the church. He is assisted by a committee or department council in which each existing organization or special interest is represented and to which the representative of any new organization needed to complete the plans is admitted.

All existing organizations and methods of work really needed to accomplish the task for the particular group are used, completeness and inclusion rather than narrowness and exclusion being the controlling factor. Groups that will not spare a member for necessary training or needed service in other departments are eliminated or reduced to a minimum, wherever vestiges of such unchristian selfishness still persist.

Two foundation principles are constantly kept in mind.

First, that this is young people's work and the nature and needs of young people not the likes, dislikes, or opinions of others should determine what is to be done or not done. This principle which is commonly recognized by all educators is well stated thus, by Thorndyke: "It is a first principle of education to utilize any individual's original nature as a means to change him for the better. . . . All schemes of improving human life must take account of man's original nature, most of all when their aim is to reverse or counteract it." Young people need opportunities for training for real social pleasures and for worth-while service. They are intensely democratic and resent any unnecessary interference with their work, their plans and their group action. Young people are also immature and inexperienced; capable of rapid growth in any given direction and responsive to good mannered leadership.

Second, the work in question is church work. Not only should the young people have that which meets their own peculiar needs but as far as possible under their own direction and planning they should also have the largest possible opportunity for service wherever their work will help on the common task and should heroically assume their full share of the work in every department and phase of their church and should devote much time and thought during the days of rapid growth and setting of character to learning to do well what needs so much to be done.

The Young People's Division of The Publication Society

By M. M. McGORRILL

WHAT is the Young People's Division of the American Baptist Publication Society? It is the section of the department of religious education that is given to young people's work. As the representative of the denomination it acknowledges all young people's work as coming under its service and endeavors to build a program that takes in all elements of young people's work. Does the division do anything? Well, here are some of the things that are occurring all the time. A church wants help in organizing and directing its young people. Literature of the division is provided. A city wants to unify its Baptist young people. The director meets and confers with the leaders concerning the most effective way of organizing city young people for kingdom service. A state is ready for next steps in a state program. The director goes to that state and works with the leaders until the thing desired is "put over" and in working order. Institutes want teachers of young people's work. The director spends considerable time touching large groups of churches by the centralized method of the institute. Local churches and group organizations are demanding conferences and rallies all the time calling for the time of the director. Interdenominational work for our young people is routed through this division. Hundreds of classes are organized through our office.

Our Young People in Action

Methods are varied. The one aim is: "The complete development and utilization of our young people for Christ and the church." An increasingly bright spot in the denominational life.

Swedish Baptist General Conference

By G. E. WALLENDORF

THE young people enrolled in the Baptist Young People's Unions of The Swedish General Conference number over 8,000 divided among twenty states with their state organizations. Minnesota heads the list with a membership of 2,200, and Illinois comes next with an enrolment of 1,250. There is also a large enrolment of young people in the Sunday schools, which gives to our Swedish churches a large constituency of young people.

The character of the membership in our young people's organizations is rapidly changing. A few years ago it consisted of immigrant young people, and these young people, who had not only left a monarchy for a republic, but also the bondage of the state church for Baptist liberty, did a splendid work especially among their fellow immigrants. Today our membership is made up almost entirely of young people who are born and educated in this country, and the immigrants who come to us are very quickly Americanized. We are glad to be able to state that the new generation is just as loyal to Baptist principles as those who went before them.

The last year has seen great progress along the line of better organization of the work. Many of the local unions have now an up-to-date organization.

A program which is in line with the program of The Northern Baptist Convention was adopted by the general conference for its young people's work at the last annual meeting.

Evangelism is prominent in the work of our young people, and many societies have had definite campaigns of personal and public evangelism. Stewardship in theory and practice is gripping the young people, and there are many more tithers than those who are registered at headquarters. Stewardship of life has received a new and strong emphasis, and the result is that we have a considerable number of life service recruits in our organizations. Greater interest in missions is also noticeable.

Our objective for 1922 is to place proportionate emphasis on every point of the Baptist Young People's program, and especially on extension, evangelism, missions, and stewardship of life and money. We are seeking to put our splendid mottoes, "Loyalty to Christ" and "We study that we might serve," into actual practice.

Maine

By ALEX HENDERSON

THE outstanding feature of our work during the past year was the one hundred per cent increase in attendance at the summer schools in the state. The training for leadership already has meant much in a number of young people's societies in the way of varied programs, service projects, pageants, life service decisions, etc.

Our first young people's department, including all young people's organizations, with a unified program, has been organized. Rev. Ralph T. Andem, our state president, has effected this in his church at Farmington.

Associational conferences and rallies have been held, Mr. Milton M. McGorrell of Philadelphia assisting. We expect the conference feature to become more helpful in planning the program for the association.

Features in Program for 1922-1923

1. Fifty per cent increase in attendance at summer schools.
2. Conference with leaders in young people's work in each association during the year.
3. Rally in each association during the year.
4. Young people in each association assisting in church vacation schools.
5. A "Win-My-Chum Week" observed in each society.
6. A "Life Service Month" program in each society.
7. The use of missionary programs in each society.
8. A stewardship campaign in each society.
9. Two hundred enrolled in the Christian Culture Course and Young People's Reading Course.
10. Inter-society contests, visitations.

Delaware

By J. Y. IRWIN

MOST of our young people's societies are Christian Endeavor. It is difficult to convince Endeavorers that regardless of their name there is a possibility to line up with the Baptist Young People's Union of America. I do not believe this peculiar difficulty is confined to any separate state as my experience convinces me that where C. E. is thriving there is an apathy toward our own Union. Delaware is specially fortunate in C. E. as there is a full time field secretary for this state and Maryland. He is certainly on his job and publishes a monthly bulletin, having for its purpose the creation of a good-natured rivalry between societies in the publication of the special things that are being done by certain societies. When a society reads what some others are doing, there comes a stimulus to excel the published report.

The Baptist young people had an evening session at our Baptist state convention when Rev. Arthur C. Baldwin, Philadelphia, gave a masterly address on "Obeying the Vision." There is very little that is special to report. Stewardship and tithing have not been taken up specially by the young people in their organization, but there has been a little development in some of our churches along this line.

In January there was a Worker's Institute held for the Baptists of our state. It was largely attended by our young people. Many of them received a new vision for service. One of the Sunday-school superintendents told me it had remade their C. E. Society and Sunday school. While all received some help it would not be fair to state that this was one of the representatives of the results. It was so helpful, however, that there is a demand for another institute which I believe will be held in December. In January it was said by some that the three days were not sufficient to introduce all necessary subjects. It is hoped that the one in December will be able to lay special emphasis on stewardship and other points that were necessarily omitted on account of the lack of time in January.

Idaho

By W. A. SHANKS

IN the last year considerable progress has been made in our young people's work. Four new B. Y. P. U.'s have been organized; five district unions have been organized and nineteen rallies have been held. We have set definite goals for our B. Y. P. U.'s. These goals include the formation of a quiet half-hour league, a tithers' league and the life service league in each B. Y. P. U. A large number of our unions have reached these goals. The annual reports have not come in from the B. Y. P. U.'s yet but indications are that over 20 per cent of our young people will be lined up as tithers. We have over 130 life service volunteers. Seven of our B. Y. P. U.'s have qualified as standard unions and several others have met over 75 per cent of the standard requirements. Quite a number of study classes have been held; these have included mission study, teacher training and the B. Y. P. U. trained leaders' course. The registered attendance at our last summer assembly was nearly 400.

Our program for next year will continue to emphasize the organization of the B. Y. P. U. leagues in each local union and will encourage the unions to try and meet all the requirements of the standard of excellence. In addition to the usual rallies we are planning to hold a number of institutes on B. Y. P. U. work. We are planning, too, for closer cooperation among our B. Y. P. U.'s. We expect to have teams of tithers visit nearby societies in the interest of our stewardship campaign. The same plan will be worked in connection with the other objectives of our program. We expect to bring our summer assembly curriculum up to the standard this year and hope to make our assembly, in every respect, one of the best held in the West.

New York

By CHAS. W. BRIGGS

NEW YORK is alive in young people's work. The vacation Bible schools kept a fine group of our young people busy and made it impossible for them to attend the assembly last year. This I call a good sign, for work is what counts, and teaching in a vacation school is fruitful work. The Buffalo and the Brooklyn B. Y. P. U. associations are strong and active, with regular rallies and local activities that are missionary and social service expressions. Rochester groups are C. E. and leaders in the county C. E. organization there.

We have an increasing number of promising Baptist young people in our own and other academies and colleges. Never have there been so many young people pledging themselves for definite Christian service, ministry, missionary and otherwise. A campaign in Schenectady recently enrolled more than fifty such.

Michigan

By MORGAN L. WILLIAMS

MICHIGAN Baptist young people were without a state director during four months of the past year. On beginning his work January 3 the new director launched a survey of conditions in the local churches, and has nearly completed a "Who is Who" of 300 Sunday schools and 200 B. Y. P. U. organizations not including Detroit. The needs of our young people's work are very great; and most pronounced is the need for leadership,—trained leadership. Our State B. Y. P. U. and Sunday-school Convention at Jackson, May 12-14, and our assembly at Kalamazoo July 20-28 are planned to inspire and develop finest leadership among our young people. Study courses by correspondence and circulating workers' libraries; the B. Y. P. U. Christian Culture course; and the more thorough study of stewardship and tithing are some of the stakes of our effort in the months ahead.

Recently junior and senior Baptist Young People's Unions have been organized in three churches and other groups are ready to organize. Our latest development is a city union of the young people of Lansing. Michigan has a big challenging task, and in the name of Christ we are going forward.

Nebraska

By J. D. COLLINS

THE year that is just closing has been a very prosperous one for Nebraska young people. Indeed, it is the best year in young people's work that we have had in many years.

At the state convention last October young people's work was reorganized in order to be in full harmony with the new constitution under which the state convention is working. As a result the young people are now working under a new state constitution also. This constitution is broad enough to include all young people whether they are members of a B. Y. P. U., of a W. W. G. or of an organized Sunday-school class. The new constitution calls for a young people's council of nine members. The chairman of the council is also known as the young people's state president. Each member of the council has a specific task. For example the chairman of the council has charge of membership and evangelism; the vice-president, of conventions and assemblies; the secretary, of the life service league; the treasurer, of the tithers' league. Other members have charge of missionary education, of the quiet half hour league and so on. This form of organization is working well. Each member of the council is pushing his particular line of work. As a result a new interest is manifest everywhere. A convention or rally has been held in nearly every association. These have been unusually well attended. Among the departments the life service league has made the most notable growth. The interest in this phase of the work is so marked that a Nebraska Life Service League has been formed with about seventy-five members enrolled. Until a more perfect organization can be effected Mrs. Ethel Gullion, of Grand Island, and Prof. R. B. Stevens, of Grand Island College, will look after the interests of the league.

Just now interest is centered in the St. Paul Convention and in our own Nebraska Young People's Assembly. We have set our goal at 100 delegates to St. Paul and have good reason to expect success. The assembly will be held at Grand Island College July 30—Aug. 6. This is our first summer assembly so all eyes are turned toward Grand Island. The program is taking shape rapidly and will soon be ready for publication. What goal shall we set for attendance this first year? Shall we set it at 250 or can we make it 300? Let every one boost.

Young People's Work In Oregon

By GEORGE H. YOUNG

PROGRESS in young people's work in Oregon has been marked this year. Every Associational B. Y. P. U. has been thoroughly organized, and two splendid rallies at least, held in each. The Portland quarterly rallies have had approximately 1000 attendants and on March 10, at a great life service rally, 1600 were present, and ninety-three young people dedicated themselves to life service in the kingdom.

A program of study, the quiet half hour, the tithers and the life service leagues are featured. In nearly every society these leagues are flourishing. The state B. Y. P. U. in cooperation with the state convention board, purchased assembly grounds situated thirty miles below Portland, on the Columbia River, at a cost of $10,000. At our first assembly last summer, 248 were registered for all time and many more for part time were present. This year we expect at least 500 young people will take advantage of the whole curriculum. The Oregon Assembly is assuming a large place in the spiritual training of our young people, and bids fair to be one of our great summer conferences.

A most unique and interesting work in Oregon was an eight-day series of special meetings for instruction and inspiration of all the Christian young people of the city of Roseburg, which the director conducted. A similar series was held for the Monmouth Church during Easter week, especially for the State Normal students.

Our future work for the young people of Oregon will be carried on along similar lines. We are hoping to put much emphasis upon evangelism and stewardship of money and life, and will hold a number of conferences with young people next fall with these objectives in view.

Response of the splendid young people of Oregon to the program has been made with alacrity and fervor, so that the youth in our constituency everywhere is becoming exceedingly intelligent, spiritual and serviceable to the church.

Columbia Federation

By JOHN RUTHVEN

COLUMBIA Federation B. Y. P. U., representing fourteen unions in the nations capital, and Virginia suburbs, has had a phenomenal year of progress, and the "forward look" is bright with prospects for still greater things. The federation was organized two years ago last fall, by four local unions—Fifth; Second; West Washington, and Clarendon, Va., with David Joost, an enthusiastic B. Y. P. U.'er from Texas, as president. Today we have fourteen unions, and the "end is not yet."

The past year has been given to building up the efficiency of the local unions and to making them "standard," if possible. A number of them will attain 100 per cent and others will miss it by a very small percentage. This effort has been called the "Better B-Y Campaign." It was based upon the "standard," with a few other points to strive for. A "Baksheesh," consisting of a round-trip ticket to the St. Paul Convention, was offered the union attaining the largest number of points. The campaign began Nov. 1, and will finish, May 28. Second B. Y. P. U. of Washington leads, with Clarendon, Va., Fifth, Randle Highlands and First of Washington in the order named, and working hard. All unions use the group system. A school of instruction was held in March, at Fifth Church. The campaign added greatly to the membership; doubled the daily Bible readers; increased the missionary givers, no union having less than 50 per cent, and five unions reporting 100 per cent. Stewardship and tithing, have been emphasized. A junior city union composed of ten locals is largely the result of untiring effort, by Miss Leona McMurray, another enthusiast from Texas. Miss McMurray has given her time unsparingly to this work and has produced great results. Our future plans are: Continuation of our missionary and tithing propaganda, also daily Bible readers work; a great evangelistic campaign establishment of a local B. Y. P. U. paper; promoting and fostering of such activities among Baptist young people, as will concentrate their attention upon denom-national affairs and give them opportunity for expression of the energy that is inherent in them, and that demands action.

New Jersey

By OTTO F. LAEGELER

THE unified program of advance launched by the New Jersey Baptist Convention in which every department of our state convention cooperates, is probably the greatest thing of its kind in state convention activities. Our churches in the state are willingly responding to an enlarged program of religious education which seeks the organizing of a committee in the local church charged with the definite responsibility of a progressive and well-rounded plan of religious training for every individual to which the church ministers. This has meant the correlating of the various organizations, so as to prevent overlapping and over-looking. Graded lessons are being increasingly used in the state, which is a very hopeful sign that we are recognizing the importance of the religious development of childhood and youth. Furthermore, the religious value of special days has been stressed with the purpose of making them more meaningful to the entire church. We are likewise planning for an enlarged work in week day religious instruction and the church vacation schools (fifty of which are expected to be in operation in the Baptist churches of New Jersey this coming summer).

Special emphasis has been placed upon a trained leadership that shall be able to "carry on" to meet the needs of this new advance, with the result that New Jersey Baptists have more young people in leadership training courses than ever before. The importance of stewardship was urged throughout our Sunday school and young people's organizations, whereby a great many of our young people have been led to enrol in the local chapters of a League of Christian Stewards. It has been the constant aim of the department of religious education to ever seek definite decisions for Christ, and a sincere dedication to a life of service, as the purpose and aim of all religious training.

One of the finest young people's summer assemblies in the United States is being planned for July 1-8.

The state director is hopeful as to an assembly for foreign-speaking pastors, whereby he may acquaint them through definite instruction, with the meaning and trend of religious education today. The solution of our foreign-speaking churches rests in no small measure upon the grasp that the pastor has of the importance and value of religious education in the training of his constituency.

A number of new young people's societies have been organized, and others stimulated to larger activity.

Church schools of missions and church nights with definite programs of training were advocated with good success and profit to the local church. The future holds forth larger accomplishment through our cooperative plan of advance.

East Washington and North Idaho

By T. H. HAGEN

THE big objective before the young people of East Washington and North Idaho for this year, is the purchase and equipment of permanent grounds for the summer assembly. In the recent continuation campaign in East Washington, the young people designated their pledges for the above purpose.

Quite a large number of our young people are tithers and have enrolled with the tithers league of the B. Y. P. U. of A.

One of the new plans we have been using, is the grouping of many of our unions in convenient groups for rallies, and this has met with success.

The annual banquet and rally is one of the important features of our work. The rally is always held in Spokane. This year we met Feb. 20, with an attendance of 300, the address being given by Dr. Riley of Linfield College, McMinnville. Our program includes the stressing of the standard of excellence; the recognition of the fact of stewardship; all our young people tithers; enlistment for life service either at home or abroad.

West Washington

By T. H. HAGEN

HAVING purchased assembly property, the board of managers of the West Washington B. Y. P. U. are at work on the task of improving the property, and hope as part of the program of 1922 to erect an auditorium, and otherwise improve the grounds. Several of our unions are entering very heartily into the local church program of missionary education, and are taking a course with text books in the church school of missions.

The northern and central part of the field is well organized into districts and each district is doing constructive work.

Tithing is being advocated with splendid success. The Japanese B. Y. P. U. of Seattle recently sent in twenty pledges, and South Bend church sends a list of twenty-six. We are stressing the standard of excellence and life work. The unions in Seattle and Tacoma are doing excellent work in the various missions and night schools conducted among the Orientals.

Wisconsin

CHARLES A. BOYD

IT is a joy to report that the work in the young people's societies and the young people's division of our Sunday schools is decidedly on the up-grade. The past year has seen a number of new societies organized and an increase in the membership of many others so that the total membership of young people's societies in Wisconsin is today about 15 per cent ahead of last year's mark. In the matter of organized young people's classes we registered in 1921 almost double the number registered in 1920 and nearly seven times the number registered in 1919.

The young people of our churches are wide awake to their opportunities and responsibilities in stewardship and many of them are enrolled in the tithers' league.

One of the outstanding achievements is the remarkable increase in the enrollment of young people at our summer assembly. Last summer's enrollment was a 30 per cent increase over the preceding year and practically double that of two years ago. This is one of the great uplifting forces of our work.

"Points of Emphasis" for 1922

include the following:

1. The largest increase of any state in the number of its delegates at the B. Y. P. U. A. convention, as compared with the registration of 1921. Wisconsin young people are wide awake to the opportunity of St. Paul Convention.
2. Another big increase in the assembly registration. We are hoping to double the number of churches represented last year. The young people's state organization is planning a "Best Yet" Convention at Green Lake in connection with the assembly.

3. More "standard" societies.
4. A larger number of groups studying the new Christian Culture Course. A larger development of originality in the work of our societies.
5. A stronger emphasis on service in church and community.

Illinois Report

By L. H. KOEHLER

1. An increase of about 8 per cent in senior societies during past year; many new intermediate societies organized; special emphasis placed upon better grading of society organizations, featuring intermediate societies especially; a splendid gain in tithers; rallies partaking more and more of the institute order with lectures, conferences and note-book work; quite a number of societies studying texts in connection with their weekly meeting; organization of associational B. Y. P. U.'s continuing.

2. Plans include reaching a much larger number of selected young people and training them for leadership through the assembly, associational and local church institutes; a state life service league will likely be organized at the coming assembly; special emphasis upon social service for young people.

Minnesota

By ARTHUR J. HANSEN

THE Baptist young people of Minnesota are on the march. Stimulated by the vision of a great convention which they are about to entertain they have forged ahead along many lines.

At least five new young people's societies have been organized during the past year and several dead ones have been revived. The membership of many societies has been doubled, notably some in the Twin Cities, and the devotional life has been deepened. Four Minneapolis churches have this spring turned in forty-four signatures to the quiet half-hour pledge.

The Minnesota Life Service League now enrolls about 200 of our choicest young people. Many of them are securing an education, and leaders of great promise are coming to the front in their ranks. The annual meeting this year is to be in the nature of "a retreat" held on the assembly grounds at Lake Minnetonka just preceding the B. Y. P. U. convention.

Education in stewardship and tithing has been carried on extensively during the winter. A church in the southern part of the state with a membership of 100 has recently enrolled fifteen tithers through its B. Y. P. U. society. Another church of about the same size has thirty enrolled in its tithers' league.

There are many signs of a growing interest in missions. Reading contests have been popular in places. One C. E. society in a rural community in the northern part of the state reports that forty readers have read 211 books, and the contest is still on. Missionary playlets have been produced by different societies with good success. Increased funds over last year have been raised by the B. Y. P. U. for the support of Bohemian work in the state and work on the Congo. The World Wide Guilds are active and are looking forward with great interest to a house party planned for the week following the B. Y. P. U. convention.

Preliminary steps have been taken with a view to effecting a state organization of all Baptist young people including B. Y. P. U.'s, C. E.'s, W. W. G.'s, and organized Sunday-school classes. A convention will be assembled for this purpose on the opening day of the B. Y. P. U. of A. convention. Great days are ahead of us, days big with inspiration and challenge. The splendid accomplishments of our young people in the past under the leadership of Vera Rice, the loyal support of the "elders" who were never more deeply interested in supporting young people's work in Minnesota, the fine initiative of the young people themselves—all this encourages us to believe that Minnesota Baptist young people will greatly move "forward with Christ."

Ohio Young People

By WILSON A. HOLMES

OHIO Baptist young people have been doing things worth while. The Ohio B. Y. P. U., of which Eugene L. Exman is president, is a live organization, comprising 250 local senior unions, over fifty junior societies, and about twenty intermediate societies, almost all doing good work.

Stewardship principles have been emphasized, and over 1200 are now enrolled in the tithers' league. The Ohio Daily Devotions League numbers near 900, and the Ohio Life Service League membership has increased to 330.

The associational conventions and rallies have had good programs, and large and enthusiastic crowds in attendance.

The young people are contributing generously to the N. W. M. and many unions are responding nobly to a special call for thank offerings.

The Ohio B. Y. P. U. and the Ohio World Wide Guild are cooperating in the attainment of the following goals: 1500 tithers' league members; 2,000 daily devotions league members; 400 life service league members.

The Ohio W. W. G. girls had a very successful convention in Toledo in March, with Mrs. D. A. Terradell, state secretary and helpers in charge, and over 600 girls present.

The state B. Y. P. U. holds its annual convention in connection with the assembly at Granville, July 28—Aug. 6.

Iowa Boosters

By MARY STICKEL

YES, that is just what Iowa B. Y. P. U. folks are striving to be. We believe in our state and its possibilities in young life.

The past year has been one of fruitfulness. Several new societies have come into existence and we shall not be satisfied until we have a well organized B. Y. P. U. in every Baptist church in Iowa. At the present time we have 210 societies, including senior, intermediate and junior societies. Many have reported mission study classes. Most of these classes meet in conjunction with the regular missionary meeting each month and are studying such books as "Playing Square With Tomorrow."

Iowa also has over 200 life service league members, thirty-eight of whom are in active service either upon the home or foreign field.

There are also a number of tithing groups and we are emphasizing stewardship in every possible way.

Because we want to add to our efficiency and spell progress in every line, Iowa has set her goal at 1000 delegates for St. Paul. We have had St. Paul boosting conferences in each association and you may expect Iowa to shine in St. Paul.

Young People's Union of Arizona

By W. M. GOODMAN

THERE are twenty-six young people's unions in the state of Arizona. During the past year tithing literature has been sent to all unions within the state.

The standard of excellence has been introduced into the unions of the state and more than 50 per cent of them are using the standard of excellence as their guide. The standard of excellence has revealed many weaknesses and has greatly stimulated the interest among the young people of the state.

The Chimney Corner

"The Zeal of Thy House Hath Eaten Me Up"

(BY A MINISTER'S DAUGHTER.)

A LIVELY imagination applied to this verse at the age of nine made an unforgettable picture of it: to be eaten up by the House of the Lord—what a cannibal fate for a minister's daughter! But the dictionary disclosing the fact that zeal was not real, softened the first horror; although the text lingered in the offing always—was it going to become a personal experience?

It is interesting, therefore, to look back over the years and see how, imperceptibly at the time, but inevitably, the verse has indeed been fulfilled, and to covet for all other girls the beautiful thread of Christ-centeredness which a minister's child unconsciously weaves into the warp and woof of her living by overhearing and sharing the daily concerns of her parents.

There was always, for instance, the glory of father's watch-chain. Other fathers had watch chains. But not special ones! For long before there was any round-eyed little daughter on the scene there had been a Sunday when a missionary offering was to be collected, and at breakfast the minister had said: "I am going to pledge thus and so, my dear." And My Dear replied: "Then I will pledge thus and so." Both pledges were as big as the minister's wife dared make them on their little salary.

But he had a way with him, that minister! He so warmed up to the subject of doing the Lord's work in the world that even as he preached the thing-that-men-call-conscience began whispering: "Here you are, persuading others to strain heart and soul and pocketbook, but how about yourself?" So he doubled his pledge. And down in her pew, his young wife was so deeply moved that she doubled her pledge. Which meant that when they compared notes at dinner-time they found they had completely emptied their exchequer for six weeks to come! And there would be food needed. Rent. Carfare. Incidentals. But they were radiantly undaunted.

"I will sell my watch chain!" said he, for there was a man who had always coveted it. So he sold it; and, himself, wore a black shoestring for a chain with quiet satisfaction.

But watch chains glitter in the pulpit. And one or another of the more observant front-pew-families began missing that old accustomed glitter picked out by the dancing sunbeams. Had he lost his chain? Oh no, this was just a little fad, said he, smiling ingenuously. But it was such a curiously shabby fad that the inquirers tackled the minister's wife: she also was gently evasive. But where there's a will there's a way, and the beautiful little secret was unearthed through a third person. Then came a Sunday-school Christmas festival, closing with a request from "Santa Claus" that the pastor would come up to the tree, please. He came. And was handed a little box. Inside that little box was a gold chain. And with it was a card which read: "This chain is not to be sold for foreign missions."

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

What a rare heritage for the minister's little girl a few years later—the chain a daily reminder that the Lord loves (and blesses) a cheerful giver!

Consider also, her two favorite games: "Playing Church" and "Going to India." When you played the first of these, all the chairs were ranged in rows, with a doll on each chair—provided there was enough of this congregation to go around. Other-

Just As I Am

JUST as I am, thine own to be,
Friend of the young, who lovest me;
To consecrate myself to thee,
O Saviour dear, I come.

In the glad morning of my day,
My life to give, my vows to pay,
With no reserve and no delay,
With all my heart, I come.

I would live ever in the light,
I would work ever for the right;
I would serve thee with all my might;
Therefore to thee I come.

Just as I am, young, strong, and free,
To be the best that I can be,
For truth and righteousness and thee,
Lord of my life, I come."

wise all remaining members were pillows (pillars in the house of the Lord," a well-known vivid phrase!) There had to be some kind of a pulpit and you thumped it at intervals with eloquent emphasis. You let your voice out. You took your voice in. You closed your eyes and prayed. And always, when "Church" was over, you said to mother sewing by the window: "Now push me, mother!" For, to the shy little girl hiding behind her mother's skirts, the most lasting impression of after-the-benediction was the endless jostling of grown-ups as they swayed down the aisles. . . . "Push me, mother!" And she pushed. So that playing church created a zeal that began eating you up!

"Going to India" was more hazardous. As always, mother would be sitting by the window sewing—sewing and rocking.

A bit timidly you went up to her: "Well, goodbye, motherest, I've got to go to India now to tell the heathens about Jesus!" There was a goodbye kiss. You still remember her arms: the tight feel of them. You wonder now if she were picturing some future farewell but she never—even in play—dampened your ardor by saying: "But you wouldn't go so far away from mother, would you, darling? And leave her without any little girl at all?" So you remember the seriousness of that kiss through all these years. There was business to be done in India. She knew it. You knew it. You do not know now how you knew it; but there was an atmosphere in your home that planted the seed in you, and you must be off about that business. . . .

Carey, Judson, Moffat—these all had tedious journeyings in cramped ships. You also! For your boat was the lid of the sewing-machine, inverted, so that the wee passenger—a hymnbook—a Bible could just squeeze inside it, aiding in the navigation by rowing vigorously on the carpet waves with a cane and umbrella for oars. It was a slow voyage, and a tippy one, but vigour prevailed and when India was finally reached, there were the "heathens," waiting. Your own dolls of course, but minus clothes; they sat around in an expectant circle waiting to hear the old, old story. Like a jack-in-the-box you emerged from your ship, and Bible in hand "played church," but with simpler eloquence to suit the ignorance of the heathens! You had the loveliest time in the world laboring with them, and eventually there were converts to be baptized. This was, of course, the climax of being a missionary, for the converts were judiciously-chosen dolls whose joints could not be hurt by immersion and one of the stories your family delights to recall is that when the candidate was being baptized in the bathtub the Little Missionary very reverently repeated: "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and into the Hole-You-Go."

Ah, it was so real: So solemn! So beautiful! You would give anything to catch again the zeal of "Going to India" and "Playing Church;" you still look at the watch-chain that is never to be sold for foreign missions; and you give a prayer of thankfulness for the inheritances of that atmosphere.

There was nothing at all remarkable about it, yet the fervor and devotion of your elders was incorporated wholesale in earnest play. It is something any child may do. It is something every child is doing! Quietly, persistently, unconsciously, assimilating adult attitudes. One sighing groan about a church duty may go echoing down the years with indelible influence. It was twenty years afterwards before the watch-chain father appreciated all that chain meant to his daughter. To this day none of the family know what stories led to the trips to India, but whatever it was it has influenced a whole lifetime, just as the small child in your home is being influenced this very minute either in favor of, or in indifference to, "the beauty of holiness."

The Door To the Church

Boys also feel this home influence. Not long ago The Churchman asked a number of American ministers to tell why they had gone into the ministry. The following reply by Dr. Roland Cotton Smith is another monument to the "zeal of thy house":

"I was born in a house called a rectory with a door opening into a church, surrounded by kind and lovely people called parishioners. I think that for the first two or three years I was under the impression that all houses were called rectories, and opened of necessity into a church, and that all the people outside the houses were called parishioners.

"There must have been a day of rude awakening, for I came to see that other little boys lived in splendid houses, but their unfortunate fathers had to do other things than preach, and could not afford to have a church with a door opening into their house. I accepted this hard cruel fact of life—and pitied the boys who did not know that people were called parishioners.

"The house was a part of the church and the church was a part of the house. I played in the church, and prayed in the house.

"I would watch my father in the pulpit, on the day of all days, called Sunday, when we had roast beef for dinner, and I could feel him bring down the fire from heaven to cleanse and strengthen men's souls, and I would wonder in despair if I could ever be like him. Other boys' fathers had to be bankers and lawyers and physicians; they could not help it, it was no disgrace; those things had to be. But their fathers could not bring down fire from heaven, and while I played with them I pitied them.

"As I grew older I began to understand the influence and power that proceeded out of that house with a door leading into the church. It touched sorrowful and despairing hearts, and they were comforted, and it emancipated the minds of men, it broke down the frozen barriers of sense and revealed a world of the spirit which called for the highest adventure; it built houses for the poor and made part of a city clean; it ran out to the farthest ends of the earth and awakened nations.

"My boyhood friends grew up and built palaces, but I missed the door.

"If you are born on the top of a mountain, what is the use of going down?"

Someone should then play "Way Down Upon The Swanee River" as the ten march round and round until suddenly the music stops and every one sits down. But the person opposite the Chair of Knowledge cannot sit in it unless able to give one fact concerning Negroes—how they came to this country; what they suffered as slaves; how they were set free; who did this; why; name of famous Negroes; name of Baptist school for Negroes, etc. It must always be a fact not yet contributed by a previous player. The person unable to earn the right to sit in the Chair of Knowledge drops out of the game, and a chair must be removed, until finally the game narrows down to the Chair of Knowledge and the one winner.

IV. Turbaning the Hindu Man

Crossing the sea to India you will soon learn that a Hindu man is rarely seen without his turban, so pin on the wall the picture of a man (in "Missions" you can probably find a really handsome Hindu gentleman), then from paper cut his circles to serve as turbans. As in the game "Helping Topsy Grow," blindfold each player in turn, give him a pin and turban and send him forth to fasten a turban on the head of the Hindu.

V. How to Spell in India

All the players stand in a row for this novel spelling-bee and a "teacher" asks the questions, for example:

1. Can you spell India? "H-O-T" would be a correct answer; or "O-R-I-E-N-T"; anything to show you know something about India!

2. Can you spell Carey? "W-I-L-L-I-A-M" would be correct; or T-R-A-N-S-L-A-T-I-O-N-S" to show you know what William Carey did. C-O-B-B-L-E-R would be a wonderful answer; or S-H-O-E-S!

3. Can you spell Zenana? L-A-D-Y; or C-O-O-P-E-D I-N-D-O-O-R-S would show your wisdom concerning the women's apartments in a Hindu home.

4. Can you spell travel? (Bullock cart!)

5. Can you spell jungle? (Elephant; tiger; monkey; python, etc.)

6. Can you spell tree? (Palm; mango; banyan; banana; cocoanut; etc.)

7. Can you spell missionary? (Carey; Duff; Clough; Downie; etc.)

A brief glance through "The Wonderland of India" will furnish dozens of questions and these funny indirect answers, too.

We have half a dozen other games which will be given next week. Cut them out and save them, for they are lots of fun for parties and rainy days.

The Young Reserves

Are You A Crusader

SO many of our Young Reserve boys and girls belong to Crusader companies in their home churches that Miss Mary Noble tells me it will be the nicest thing in the world if we devote our columns occasionally to things of special interest to Crusaders—for then some of you might start asking: "Why don't we have a Crusader band in my church?" Which is exactly what I hope may happen! All you will need is a leader, a group of boys and girls, a room, and something to do. There's always a regular booklet of lovely programs which Miss Noble can provide for your meetings, and this next year they will be about Negroes in America and East Indians in India, so wouldn't it be fun for you to begin playing some of these games now, then you could be wondrous wise by the time your first meeting comes?

Here are some games to teach you things about the Negroes:

I. Helping Topsy Grow

Take a good-sized advertisement of some child and carefully tint the face and hands a dark brown to make her into a lovely but very ignorant Topsy, who has no school, no Sunday school, no pill bottles, no tooth brush, no books, etc. All of which she needs, of course! So cut pictures of brushes, books, bottles, etc., out of some magazine. Pin Topsy against the wall; then, as in "Tailing The Donkey" blindfold each player, provide a pin and one of these things that Topsy needs in order to grow properly; turn player around three times, then let him grope his way toward Topsy to pin his contribution in her hands. The player pinning nearest her hands is the winner.

II. Rebuilding Negro Baptist Schools

These are all famous Baptist schools for Negroes, misspelled. See if your friends can rebuild them properly:

LA MENPS (Spelman)
SNORTRAH (Hartshorn)
THRAME (Mather)
HEMROOSE (Morehouse)
HOPSIB (Bishop)
WASH (Shaw)
NEEDBICT (Benedict.)

III. One Out of Ten

Every tenth person in the United States is a Negro, so it's high time some of us learned about the rest of us, isn't it? For this reason "One Out Of Ten" will be a good game for boys and girls to play, and grown-ups, too. Arrange ten chairs in a row as for "Going to Jerusalem," and label one of them The Chair of Knowledge.

Noticing

*If we notice little pleasures
As we notice little pains;
If we quite forget our losses
And remember all our gains;
If we looked for people's virtues,
And their faults refused to see,
What a comfortable, happy,
Cheerful place this world would be!*

Little Freddie had disobeyed his mother so that she felt obliged to punish him. When he wanted to kiss her good-night as usual she told him that she could not kiss such a naughty boy. He looked at her earnestly for a moment and then held out his hand, saying, "Well, let's shake hands and be friends, anyhow."

BETTER FRIENDSHIPS
1 Samuel 18:1-4; 19:1-7

(CONSECRATION MEETING)

"And it came to pass, when he had made an end of speaking unto Saul, that the soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul."

Poor indeed is the young person without friends—friends of the right sort. Most anyone can have a few so-called friends so long as he can put up a good appearance, and has a few dollars to spend.

1. Is there a lack of real friendships? Then go to the place where such friendships are found—your church; the Sunday-school class; the B. Y. P. U.; the Guild. The choicest people on God's earth are to be found in the Christian churches, however inefficient they are claimed to be.

2. Know your friends. In your association with those whom you call friends, find out all you can about them. Come to know them at work, at play, at worship. Imitate their good qualities and help them to overcome their faults. In this way, both will be helped.

3. Cultivate your friendships. People these days seem to be in such a hurry. Those whom we love best see so little of us. We live this life but once and we should make the most of it, and the greatest good comes from life, in association with folks. Friends, as well as others, have to learn to get on together. Take time to cultivate the budding flowers of friendship. Perhaps they will blossom out in a way that will bring great joy to your heart.

4. Be worthy of your friendships. Do not be a hypocrite—assuming to be something you are not. Modern society is suffering from a deep coat of veneer. There is great need for genuine comradeship in life's activities. If you have a friend who aspires to be noble and good, be worthy of such a friendship. Such a life is the gold among the quartz. Mine it by being every inch a man.

5. Be on intimate terms with your best Friend. When even our most intimate friends here on earth misunderstand us, he will not. He knows our joys and sorrows, and he shares them with us. Walk and talk with him each day. In such companionship, you will find the Christian secret of a happy life.

Why New England Invites Convention for 1923

By F. F. PETERSON

There are several reasons why there should be a convention of Baptist young people in Boston in 1923. First: Because Boston is a city of no mean importance, and has never had this convention. While there are tens of thousands of Baptist young people in this area, they have never been brought in contact with the youthful host of our denomination in other sections of the country, as practically all of our societies are Christian Endeavor. It is, therefore, essential that in this new day of the awakening of our denominational consciousness, the rather important New England section should not be neglected.

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Second: There are doubtless thousands of Baptist young people over the country who have never been in New England. The historical land-marks, and the early incidents connected with our Baptist history are to be found in this section. It should make for greater sympathy if the religious situation in this oldest part of the United States might be brought clearly before the young people of other sections.

Third: New England is the vacation land for large areas of the United States. Those young people who would come to Boston in 1923 would reach here at the most alluring time, and would find rest and recreation at our great beaches, in the mountains, or motoring over the beautiful roads and boulevards of the Bay State.

Finally: The Baptist young people of New England are enthusiastic for this convention, and will prove themselves hosts and hostesses whose one great concern will be the comfort and joy of the delegates.

Evangelism and the Fine Arts

By HATTIE A. MANLEY

In the pre-lenten season, always given to evangelism in First Church, Melrose, Mass., the pastor, Rev. P. H. McDowell, with the cooperation of Prof. H. Augustine Smith of Boston University, used for the first time so far as is known the fine arts as an evangelistic medium. The evenings of March 12, 19, 26 and April 2 were selected for a series of programs which by logical sequence should portray with vivid and gripping appeal the redemptive message of the Christ through music, pictures and pageantry.

The first evening was given to "The Call of the Christ through Hymns and Worship," the congregation singing the great hymns of the church of all ages. With the singing of the hymns there were interpolated scripture, prayer and the stories of the hymns or their writers. So great was the appeal that an after-meeting was held immediately in the auditorium.

The program continued on the following Sunday evening by use of the stereopticon and colored static slides portraying "The Ministry of Christ and the Story of the Master Teacher." The pictures were carefully selected reproductions of art masterpieces in the greatest galleries and churches of Europe and America, and faithfully illustrated the subject. Of those used it is sufficient to note, Zimmerman's "Christ and the Fishermen," Hoffman's "Christ and the Rich Young Ruler," Von Uhde's "Christ Blessing Little Children," Copping's "The Hope of the World," and Hunt's "The Light of the World." With the pictures there was a constant interplay of scripture and appropriate music by soloists, quartet and congregations.

March 26 the introductory service, as on all the previous ones, was carefully prepared with a view to produce an atmosphere of real worship. The program of scripture, static pictures and music was simultaneous proceeding without pause or comment. The order of events depicted was: Sunday—the day of triumph, with hosannas of children; Monday—the day of authority, or the cleansing of the temple and the anger of Christ; Tuesday—the day of controversy, or the last parables of our Lord; Wednesday—the day of retirement scenes in Bethany, the home of Mary, Martha and Lazarus; Thursday—the day of fellowship, the upper room and the Lord's supper, Gethsemane, the midnight hour, the betrayal and arrest; Friday—the day of suffering, trial before Pilate, scourging, via dolorosa, calvary, the earthquake and darkness. As the pictures were thrown upon the screen appropriate solos or hymns were sung.

The climax of the series appeared April 2, when the pageant "The Light of the World" written by Professor Smith was given under his personal direction. Through the spoken word, music, careful and picturesque costuming, and artistic lighting effects there was revealed the spread of light from the time the world lay in the darkness of sin and the prophetic revelation of the Messiah brought the first glimmering ray, on to that moment when the radiance from the star and the manger at Bethlehem became the dawn of the day foretold in the vision of Isaiah, until in full-orbed splendor "The Light" shines in all the world.

The story was made vivid as the church in symbolism emerged from the gloom of the past into the pure light from the manger, and then gradually burst into flame as group after group representing all kinds and conditions of humanity, flocking from every aisle and section of the building, advanced with upraised torches to the manger throne and every electric light from wall to roof blazed. It was then that the great audience sprang to their feet to "Crown Him Lord of All."

The pageantry was conducted in a prayerful atmosphere, the hundred participants preparing in quietness for the presentation, and bowing in prayer as the pastor asked that the Lord would bless the evening to the salvation of souls.

It may be too early to tabulate the results of this appeal through the fine arts. Beginning with a well-filled house the audience increased until on the last night more than a thousand people were present and many were turned away for lack of room. There were confessions of Christ during the four evenings and a rich harvest is in the reaping.

Church School of Missions

The First Baptist Church, Bradford, Pa., Rev. Frederick R. MacArthur, reports:

"The total enrolment in our school was 114, with an average attendance of eighty in the classes for the six nights. The largest attendance was ninety-nine, and the smallest sixty-eight. We maintained ten classes throughout the school and had three general sessions in the church auditorium following the class hour. At one of these sessions I gave the stereopticon lecture, 'The Golden Jubilee.' At another, Dr. William G. Russell gave an address on the New World Movement, and at the third Rev. C. P. Collet, of Bengal-Orissa, spoke on India. The attendance at these general meetings was approximately 100 each night. With the exception of perhaps half a dozen people, the enrolment was confined to our own church people. The primary and junior classes met before the supper hour; the other classes immediately following supper."

International Uniform Lesson for June 4

JEHOIAKIM TRIES TO DESTROY GOD'S WORD

Lesson: Jeremiah 36. Golden Text: Isaiah 40:8. Setting

The great power of the Assyrians waned toward the close of the seventh century B. C., and the Chaldeans gained rapidly. They were united under Nabopolassar, who seized Babylon, and they became known as the New Babylonian Empire. With the Medes, they conquered Nineveh. Nebuchadnezzar, son of Nabopolassar, started westward with a large army. He defeated King Necho, of Egypt, and the whole country was left open to the invading army.

Lesson

When Jeremiah, being "shut up" (not imprisonment in the ordinary sense of the word; perhaps popular disfavor or a command from the king kept him silent) was no longer free to deliver his message verbally he dictated to Baruch, his secretary and legal adviser, the truths which he had been uttering to Judah for twenty years. When this was completed Jeremiah commanded Baruch: "Therefore go thou, and read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, the words of Jehovah in the ears of the people in Jehovah's house upon the fast-day." The fast-day was an opportune time; not only would a vast number of people be reached by a single deliverance of the message, but it was an occasion when they should be in a humble and receptive mood. Observe how different was Jeremiah's attitude in giving his prophecy from that of Jonah when he was commanded to warn Nineveh. Jeremiah says: "It may be that they will present their supplication before Jehovah, and will return every one from his evil way." Baruch followed Jeremiah's orders and report of the reading reaching the ears of King Jehoiakim, Jehudi was ordered to get the parchment roll bearing the message from the chamber of the scribe, Elishama, and read it. After three or four pages had been read the king showed his contempt by cutting them with his knife and casting them into the brazier of burning coals before him. An order was given to arrest Jeremiah and Baruch, but they could not be found. Then the king considered the incident closed. It was merely the opening for a more expansive writing of God's truth.

Leading Thoughts

1. Mutilation or fire cannot destroy truth, the indestructible. 2. Attempts to destroy God's written word have always given it new power. 3. If it were possible now to destroy every bit of the written word, could it not be rewritten from the hearts of men?

Some Things to Think About Before the Indianapolis Convention

Whereas for more than two and one half centuries the principle of the independence of the local church has been fundamental to Baptist polity; and

Whereas the Baptist churches have submitted to no authority except the New Testament in matters of faith and practice; and

Whereas in pursuance of this polity, in common loyalty to the One Lord, while differing widely in details of belief, Baptists have grown wonderfully in numbers, in spiritual strength, and in Christian efficiency; and

Whereas the present federated organization of Northern Baptists is a purely voluntary association of the churches, representing neither in purpose nor in reality surrender of local independence, being rather an expression of the common sense of obligation to carry on Christian service at home and abroad; and

Whereas assumption by our national organization of even an advisory function with reference to creedal formulas would in effect amount to a pressure upon the churches to conform their independence to centralized propaganda; and

Whereas such innovation would not only be revolutionary toward our denominational traditions but it would inevitably dissipate our spiritual and material resources by diverting our attention from the vital interests of the Kingdom to untimely and unprofitable doctrinal contentions; and

Whereas our national organization has neither mandate nor permission from the churches to act as a standardizer of Baptist faith,

Therefore, the undersigned are united in the belief that since the Northern Baptist Convention has not been empowered by the churches to pass upon questions of theological doctrine, introduction of such questions into its proceedings or of measures which would involve doctrinal decisions would be unfortunate in its immediate effects and still more dangerous in its later workings as a precedent.

The Associations

This is the time of the year when the association have their annual meetings. They have already been held in the Dodge Association, and last week the Milwaukee Association was in session at Campbellsport. The annual sermon was by Rev. Samuel Russell, pastor of the Negro church in Milwaukee. Besides the usual addresses on the various topics Miss Isabel Crawford gave an address on her work as a missionary among the Indians. There is an effort being made to line up the foreign-speaking churches with the English speaking associations, and this year the two German Baptist churches of Milwaukee were received into the association.

Dedication of Chapel

Several months ago the West Allis Church opened a mission Sunday school in Woodlawn a nearby suburb. It was first held in a house, and the lady of the home kindly took down her beds in order to have room for the school. In cooperation with the Milwaukee Baptist Union a chapel was erected which was dedicated Sunday afternoon May 7. The building was formerly one of the barrack buildings at the Great Lakes. The total cost was approximately $1800. Those assisting in the dedicatory services were Pastors Alborn, Parsons and Shaw. Dr. D. W. Hurlburt, now in charge of the city work in Wisconsin, gave the address and raised the money. There was needed about $200 but in a few minutes the amount was over-subscribed. Prospects for a thriving church are bright.

New World Movement Results

Many people cannot believe that the New World Movement has been successful. The measure of its success is not wholly on the basis of whether the $100,000,000 has been raised or not. It must be measured in terms of the benefits which have accrued to the work of the local churches which have cooperated with the movement. In Wisconsin we are discovering that many of the churches which were formerly suspicious and hesitated to enter into the movement are now beginning to see that it was a paying investment for those churches which entered into it heartily. There is a whole chapter to be written along that line. This year Wisconsin exceeded the receipts of last year by more than $3000, which is remarkable when it is remembered that last autumn receipts were only 50 per cent of what they were a year ago. To have come up in six months in such a fashion speaks well for the Baptist churches of this state and the leadership which they have had, both local and in the field. The reports for additions cannot be fully made at this time, but seventy-six churches have reported 979 additions for the past year, and if that percentage keeps up for the others, it will mean an ingathering of more than 2200 persons into our churches this year. No mean gain for Wisconsin.

Some Notes

Pastor and Mrs. I. E. Bill were surprised on May 5 when more than 150 of their people gathered to help them celebrate their silver wedding. They were presented with an elegant silver service, and the pastor was given a generous purse—let us hope it was gold—and the choir presented them with thirty-six American Beauty roses. This event was not only a happy surprise to the pastor and his wife, but along with it comes a renewed spirit of cooperation between pastor and people.

The First Baptist Church of Eau Claire had one of their great days on Easter Sunday. Special programs were given during the day, and a special offering of $441 was received. This church finds that it needs four superintendents. One for presiding; one for supply teachers; and two for the arrangements of special occasions.

Rev. C. Walter Smith, of Chicago, has accepted the call to the church at Beaver Dam. Mr. Smith has had considerable experience in the pastoral work, and has been generously and graciously received by the good people of Beaver Dam. He is a Rochester Seminary man of the class of 1914.

The church at Rhinelander is contemplating some improvements this year on its building, and the church at Hudson is undecided whether to repair or tear down and build a modern building. This church has a fine specimen of colonial architecture, but over against it is as modern a piece of building as one would wish to see, making it a very inharmonious piece of architecture. It would be a great thing if they could rebuild and have a modern plant.

Doings at the National Capital

By M. W. MILLER

Baptist interests at the national capital during the week ending April 22 centered largely in two events. On Tuesday evening the District of Columbia B. Y. P. U. Federation, held its monthly rally with First Church of Alexandria. Five hundred and eighty-eight representatives from twelve or more churches were present, the largest attendance at any of the rallies held so far. A very interesting missionary program had been prepared, and enthusiasm ran high. The federation is a lusty youngster for a two-year old, and is still growing. Plans are being matured to send a strong delegation to the B. Y. P. U. A. Convention at St. Paul, where an effort will be made to secure the convention for Washington two years later. The Baptist young people of the District are alive, and are exemplifying the B. Y. P. U. motto, "Saved to serve," in many ways.

The second outstanding event, was the laying of the corner stone of the national Baptist memorial to Roger Williams and religious liberty, at 16th street and Columbia Road, on Saturday, April 22. This building is being erected on an open space just in front of the present Immanuel Church building, the site being donated for this purpose by the Immanuel Church. Secretary of state, Charles E. Hughes, assisted in laying the corner stone of the new edifice, and was the principal speaker of the occasion. Mr. Hughes paid a glowing tribute to the Baptist pioneers of America, who first erected the standard of religious freedom on the new continent, a full report of which appears in the issue of May 13.

The Ministers' Federation of the District reports over 15,000 additions to the city churches during the Easter period. Our Baptist churches received their proportionate share of these. At Calvary they are planning great things for the future under the able leadership of the pastor, Dr. Abernethy. This is the church which President Harding, and secretary of State Hughes attend.

St. Louis

By W. E. DARROW

Our Baptist laymen have organized the St. Louis Baptist Brotherhood. All men connected with our Baptist churches are eligible to membership, but only laymen can hold office. Its object is to engage in Christian service as there may be opportunity and need. The initial meeting was held in the assembly room of Third Church Sunday afternoon, April 23. Wm. M. Hopkins of Third Church was elected president; Wm. L. Bohnenkamp, Third Church, first vice-president; H. C. Noe, Water Tower Church, secretary; and E. Matter, Lafayette Park Church, treasurer. The writer was selected reporter. The brotherhood will meet on Sunday afternoons, once each month, in various Baptist churches of the city and vicinity.

Brother Wm. B. Harris, a long-time member of the West Park Church and organizer of its Sunday school, died Monday, March 27, in his 87th year, at his residence, 5864 Ridge Ave. The funeral was from West Park Church, March 30, to the Bethania Cemetery. On Saturday, April 1, his wife, Emma M. Harris, passed away in her seventy-seventh year. The funeral was from the West Park Church on Tuesday, April 4, to the Bethania Cemetery. A memorial service for both Brother and Sister Harris was held in the West Park Church Sunday afternoon, April 9, with Pastor P. G. Van Zandt in charge of the service.

From Easter, 1921, to Easter, 1922, there have been 6,476 additions by confession and 4,305 additions by letter to the evangelical churches of our city so far as reported. Baptists had 1,069 additions by confession, 901 by letter; Lutherans, 1,351 by confession, 714 by letter; Methodist Church, South, added 1,282 by confession and 575 by letter; Presbyterian, U. S. A., added 1,174 by confession and 592 by letter. The report, while not complete, will help a little to understanding of the religious situation in our city.

Pre-Easter meetings were held in a number of churches with good result. The Tabernacle Church, Rev. G. C. Schwartz, pastor, rejoices over a quickening of its interest and some additions to its membership. A noon-day meeting, under the auspices of the Church Federation, Ministerial Alliance, Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. was held down-town for a number of weeks before Easter, the first of its kind for many years. Effort was made by some of the evangelical churches to recognize Good Friday in a united way. At Third Church there were services each night during the week before Easter with good attendance. The seating capacity Easter morning was insufficient to accommodate the crowds; 1,395 in Sunday school and ten additions to church by baptism. Large number of accessions to the church during the week. Pastor N. E. Aregood of Calvary Church, reported seventy additions to his church as the result of special meetings. Dr. R. B. Whiteside of the Euclid Church is back home again after two months' illness.

Victor J. Miller, chairman of the board of police commissioners, has been removed because he talked too much concerning vice conditions in our city and specially because he opposed the plans and conduct of certain political leaders influential at the city hall and Jefferson City. A resolution, presented by Dr. S. E. Ewing at the April meeting of the Ministerial Alliance of St. Louis, was passed, and a copy wired to Gov. Hyde. It commended the good work accomplished by Mr. Miller in minimizing crime in St. Louis. The day after the meeting of the Ministerial Alliance Mr. Miller was bowled over and P. H. Brockman, another member of the board, was elected in his stead. Mr. Miller was elected treasurer of the board.

Dr. P. C. Wright was in our city recently in the interest of the Ministers and Missionaries' Benefit Board. He preached at the Water Tower Church on Sunday, April 23, and had conference with a number of our pastors the day after. Mrs. Manly J. Breaker had much to do with the preparation of the jubilee program issued by the St. Louis Baptist Woman's Missionary and Benevolent Union. Inadvertently, this fact was not noted in the recent report of the Jubilee meeting. Rev. Forrest L. Ferkins has left the pastorate of the Water Tower Church. The ministers of our city will have their annual outing at St. Charles, Mo., on Monday, June 5, being the guests of Lindenwood College. The Ministerial Alliance of St. Louis, an interdenominational organization, engineers the outing.

A New Bible Conference

Winona Lake, Ind., has become famous as a gathering place each year of thousands of ministers and Christian workers for the great benefit which comes from the annual Bible conference at that place. Recently a group of consecrated ministers and laymen felt lead to provide a conference along similar lines for the great host of ministers and Christian workers who are not able to attend the Winona conference, and arrangements have been made for a Bible conference to be held in the spacious and very suitable tabernacle in Riverview Park, Cedar Falls, Iowa. The date of the conference is August 6-13, 1922, and it will be in charge of Dr. Parley E. Zartmann, of Winona Lake, Ind., who was associated for many years with Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman in the direction of that Bible conference, and who will bring to this new conference the advantage of his knowledge of men, and experience in directing such a conference.

In addition to the tabernacle for the principal meetings there are summer cottages, a summer hotel, and other ample and satisfactory accommodations for those attending. It is too early to announce all the speakers, but the daily program will consist of an early morning devotional hour, an hour of Bible study, an hour of church methods, an hour of consideration of the great truths of evangelical religion, and an evening hillside service, followed by an inspirational address. The afternoon hours will be left free for rest and recreation except as there may be need for special conferences. The regular program will be varied with consideration of laymen's work in the churches, a special day for foreign missionaries, and other features.

Among those already secured for the program are Drs. G. Campbell Morgan, of London; W. E. Biederwolf, of Chicago; Bishop Homer Stuntz, of Omaha; W. M. Holderby, of Chicago; E. O. Sellers, of New Orleans; representative laymen like A. K. Harper, L. E. Durham, and others; Mr. Homer Rodeheaver, and other speakers who will bring inspirational messages.

AT THE MAY COMMUNION SERVICE of First Church, Watertown, the pastor, Rev. H. J. Vosburgh extended the hand of fellowship to fifty-two new members.

EMMANUEL CHURCH, BROOKLYN, held its annual meeting May 5. The pastor, Rev. A. A. Shaw, has just completed the eighth year of his pastorate. Sixty-four members were received during the year, the present membership being 974. The weekly offerings were the largest of any year in the history of the church. The treasurer reported receipts of $48,300. In addition to this the receipts of the various organizations of the church and of the New World Movement treasurer amounted to $32,000. Approximately $30,000 of this went for general expenses and $50,000 for various benevolences. The church raised $7,000 in the special New World Movement Campaign and has increased its N. W. M. pledges to $204,400, which is $4,000 above its quota. The treasurer has a cash balance on hand of $1200.

GENEVA: Rev. Havard Griffith, pastor of First Church for the past three years, has presented his resignation and will close his work June 4. At a large business meeting of the church, it was voted not to accept the resignation, but Rev. Griffith announced he would not reconsider it. Mr. Griffith's first pastorate was in Pennsylvania, where he served for nearly nine years; he now returns to that state and will take up the pastorate of First Church of Monongahela City, where a fine field awaits him.

COUNCIL OF NORTHUMBERLAND ASSOCIATION met with First Church of Jersey Shore to examine for ordination to the gospel ministry Mr. Vernon S. Ellezy:—

If you wish to be better informed, do not fail to be present on Czecho-Slovak Nationality night, at First Bohemian Baptist Church, 24th Street and Millard Avenue, Friday, May 26. A real Bohemian dinner will be served at 6:30, for 50 cents per plate, followed by a program including addresses by Dr. Otto, of the Baptist Executive Council, and by Czecho-Slovak leaders, folk songs by young people in costume, music by Bohemian choir.

To reach the church take Douglas Park "L" to Lawndale Ave. station, walk one block east and three blocks south to church; or 22nd St. car to Millard Ave., walk two blocks south; or Blue Island-26th St. car (at Adams and Dearborn Sts.) to Millard Ave., walk two blocks north.

The church can accommodate only 150 persons, so get your tickets early! Tickets may be secured from your church, from the office of the Baptist Executive Council, 125 North Wabash Ave (State 7966) or from the office of the Christian Americanization Dept. Woman's Home Mission Society, 2969 Vernon Ave., Chicago, (Telephone Douglas 5625).

Rev. A. A. Cober, of Newberry, moderator; Rev. Fred G. Bangs, of Berwick, clerk; ordaining prayer by Rev. A. A. Cober; charge to the candidate by Rev. Edwin Simpson of First Church, Williamsport; sermon by Rev. W. W. Davis, pastor of First Church of Jersey Shore. Rev. Ellezy is a student in Colgate University, and is pastor of a church near there.

HERBERT M. SMITH was ordained to the gospel ministry April 15 in Pine Street Church (Colored), Scranton. The examining council was held April 14, which, after listening to the candidate's statements, recommended the ordination. Rev. W. G. Watkins acted as moderator and Rev. J. H. Carter Jermy, as clerk. The sermon was preached by Rev. F. W. Means, pastor Salem Church, Jersey City, N. J.; others taking part were Rev. W. G. Watkins, Rev. C. Mason Jones and Rev. J. E. Philpot.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

REV. STEPHEN G. HASTINGS DIED AT HIS HOME in Antrim April 10. He was pastor in Antrim 1890 to 1894 when he went to California for the benefit of Mrs. Hastings' health. He was born in Suffield, Conn., sixty-nine years ago and his mother, whose age is ninety-three, still lives at Suffield. Besides holding the pastorate at Antrim he was pastor in Baptist churches in Connecticut and Massachusetts for about thirty years. The church at Antrim has been without a pastor for a few months and Mr. Hastings has been occasional supply in his old pulpit.

REV. B. D. REMINGTON, PASTOR at Colchester for the past twelve years, died April 23, aged seventy-two years. Mr. Remington was a faithful pastor and greatly beloved by the people of all denominations in the locality. An evidence of the esteem in which he was held was shown by the fact that the Zionist organization of the Jews sent to the home of the deceased a beautiful floral tribute as an expression of their love and esteem.

His funeral was held in the Colchester Church, Monday evening, April 24. The service was conducted by Secretary A. B. Coats of the state convention and Rev. E. E. Gates, pastor-at-large, assisting.

MASSACHUSETTS

BEFORE AN AUDIENCE that completely filled the auditorium of Park Memorial Church (Springfield) parish house the pageant, "The Striking of America's Hour," was presented by adults and children of the church on the evening of April 28.

HARVARD HAS BEEN GENEROUS TO BAPTISTS in its list of preachers at Appleton Chapel during the present term. Professor Soares of Chicago University, and Dr. W. C. Biting of St. Louis, have preached. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick is soon to come. After hearing Dr. Biting on April 30, a prominent federal judge said to the writer: "That man knows how to preach!"

DR. LEMUEL C. BARNES, our home mission secretary, delighted the trustees of the Newton Seminary by happening in town at the time of their annual meeting May 2. Dr. Barnes was honored by a unanimous invitation to join the board during their deliberations. It was an unusually large and interested company of laymen and ministers. Mr. Charles W. Bailey, bank president, and recently president of the Social Union, was elected trustee to fill out the term of Emery B. Gibbs, recently deceased.

AT THE PRESENT TIME THERE IS PROSPECT of a strong delegation of Massachusetts Baptists at the convention gathering at Indianapolis. Two of the state's able and devoted laymen who usually are familiar figures in Baptist council, Mr. Henry Bond, and Col. Edward H. Haskell, find with regret that imperative business interests will take them abroad at the time of the meetings. Mr. Bond has been president of the Convention, and Col. Haskell always is a substantial inspiration.

PRESIDENT HOBBS OF NEWTON SEMINARY has recently returned from a southern trip taking him as far as New Orleans. He reports the pleasantest experiences, and delightful welcomes, in Baptist assemblies and banquets. Some of the picturesquely wise sayings that he heard from representative southern Baptists ought to be printed. They have a way down there of winging their arrows and hitting the bull's eye.

DR. ROBERT LEE WEBB, our apostle of ministerial education, has also been visiting in the Southland. Of course his name is a winner among the southerners, but his personality and purpose easily do the rest. Dr. Webb is a thorough student of the material of our educational development, and it makes his addresses upon the subject of compelling interest.

MAINE

MILLINOCKET: Easter Sunday was a great day at Millinocket. Twenty-six were baptized as a result of the recent revival in which the pastor, Rev. Raymond W. Cooper, preached on vital themes. The contributions for the day were nearly $300, of which $52 was a special offering for the New World Movement. Plans are on foot for the enlargement of the church at an expense of $13,000.

THE LITTLEFIELD MEMORIAL CHURCH, Rockland, Rev. O. W. Stuart, pastor, held special meetings with new voices in January; then cottage prayer meetings for two months carried the fellowship to shut-ins and to the farther districts. In March Rev. Joseph A. Paquette, of Sanford, sang the Gospel and the pastor preached it for a series of ten evenings. Twenty-one persons will be baptized as soon as it is suitable to go to the sea shore for the ordinance. The Sunday school work in all departments is flourishing, average attendance now being over 100.

RHODE ISLAND

TWELVE ITALIANS were baptized recently at First Church, Providence by the Rev. J. Di Tiberio, pastor of Federal Hill Italian Baptist Church.

REV. ELMER F. WEST of Lowell has accepted the call of East Greenwich Church, beginning there May 1.

REV. V. E. BRAGDON, pastor of the church at Apponaug met with a painful accident recently when the auto in which he was riding overturned, and he has been compelled to resign as the doctors have advised a complete rest for the present.

PASTOR J. C. WORDEN has accepted the call of the church at Fiskeville, and closed his labors at Chestnut Hill, April 30.

THE REV. W. B. GREENE, pastor of the United Church, Providence, for twelve years, has accepted the call of the Woodlawn Church, Pawtucket.

THE BETHANY CHURCH, PAWTUCKET, has called for the second time, the Rev. G. H. Horton who has been pastor of the church at Carolina two years.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Woman's Missionary Society was held at Second Church, East Providence, April 26. There was a good attendance and addresses were given by Miss Jennie Crawford, China; Mrs. S. P. McCurdy, Mrs. J. F. Ingram, Bhamo, India; Miss Ina E. Burton, of the Woman's Home Mission Society; Rev. B. T. Livingston, and others.

MR. FRANK L. WILKINS was elected state president for the ensuing year. The Continuation Campaign has been well organized.

IOWA

FIRST CHURCH, CRESTON: May 7 was a notable day due to the large number receiving the right hand of fellowship. Twenty-six have come into the church during the past month, twenty-one by baptism and four by experience. Since the last of March every Sunday has witnessed some coming forward in response to the invitation to accept the Saviour. There have been baptisms each Sunday evening since Easter. The interest is continuing, five are awaiting baptism next Sunday. The church program has been prosecuted vigorously throughout the fall and winter. Since the first of the year it has included a church school of missions and the stewardship, continuation and evangelistic campaigns. This work is now bearing fruit in the present ingathering, the end of which, we believe, is not yet in sight.

INDIANA

EASTER SUNDAY, REV. H. R. MACMILLAN, pastor of First Church of Franklin, baptized thirty-one young people, nearly all members of the Sabbath school. Among the number was his own daughter. Mr. MacMillan has been with this church less than a year. During that time there have been fifty-eight additions to the church, thirty-eight having been received by baptism. A number are still awaiting the ordinance. All the services of the church are well attended. The church is looking forward to the erection of a modern Sunday-school addition in the near future. The present church building is badly overcrowded.

WISCONSIN

THIRTY-TWO PEOPLE HAVE BEEN BAPTIZED into the membership of First Church, Madison, during the past few weeks. Between January 1 and April 30 this church collected and paid $5,000 for the New World Movement.

RICHLAND CENTER IS THINKING of establishing a wireless between its church building and that of Ash Ridge Church. Rev. Clyde L. Gibbons, pastor at Richland Center would be the pastor of both fields and conduct a mid-week service on both fields. On Sunday the message would be received at the Ash Ridge Baptist Church. Carrying out this plan, Mr. Gibbons broadcasted a sermon from the State University of Wisconsin May 3.

NEBRASKA

FIRST CHURCH, Omaha, A. A. DeLarme, minister: At the annual meeting all reports showed the church to be in a prosperous condition both spiritually and financially. Twenty converts were baptized. Easter morning, $28,855.50 was contributed during the year for all purposes. During the past six years the offering for current expenses have increased 100 per cent and for missionary benevolences nearly 200 per cent. Miss Beatrice Akenon, of Minneapolis, has been elected pastor's assistant and church secretary. The church greatly misses Dr. D. D. Proper who was a member of the board of deacons and a valuable counsellor in all departments of work. First Church is the nearest of the Baptist churches to the business section and all the great hotels of the city and many Baptists from all parts of the country worship here each Sunday.

FIRST CHURCH OF STELLA presented on Easter Sunday evening the pageant "The Dawning," by Lyman R. Bayard, which attracted so much attention that it was repeated the following Sunday. The church has decided to make a program of this nature an annual affair, since it has in the church an expert director, Mrs. A. W. Montgomery.

KANSAS

APRIL 20 the pastorate of Rev. C. F. Mathews, with First Church, Topeka, was three years old. During this time 289 new members have been received and there has been a net gain in the resident membership of about 100, a gain of over 200 in the Bible school enrolment, a gain of over 300 per cent in benevolences and of almost 200 per cent in current expense offerings. For current expenses there were received during the year, $12,869.30; for benevolences, $9500. The present membership of the church is 812 and of this number 698 are resident. This is an increase of 78 during the past year in the resident membership. The Bible school reported a revised enrolment of 625 with an average attendance for the year of 399. During the last quarter the average attendance was 467. The largest attendance of the year was 535.

ILLINOIS

FIRST CHURCH, DECATUR, recently had a revival conducted by the pastor, Dr. Marsh. During the first week Pastor Rapson of East Park Church, and Pastor Fox of Riverside Church preached a sermon. The second week the pastor was assisted by his sister, Mrs. R. B. Favoright, of Jerseyville, who is director of children's work for the state convention. Thirty-one converts have been baptized with several more approved for baptism. There were a number of additions otherwise received. All departments of the church are doing excellent work.

REV. E. C. SHUTE recently closed his pastorate at Fairbury, and has become pastor of the church at Arthur. Mr. Shute was ordained and held two pastorates in the Bloomington Association. He has proved himself to be a tireless worker.

REV. ROBERT LEITZ of Shurtleff College has been doing a fine piece of work at Fosterburg. This is one of the smaller churches but is wide awake and progressive. The church has been remodeled and is in need of new pews. It would appreciate a gift of some pews from a church having any to dispose of. Communicate with Rev. Robert Leitz, Shurtleff College, Alton, Ill.

WHITEHALL CHURCH has outgrown its present quarters and is in the midst of a drive for $20,000 to enlarge the plant, remodeling the old building and putting on an addition which will give adequate floor space for a Sunday school of 300. Since Easter, the men's class, with seventy-two present, has had to meet elsewhere because lack of room. Rev. L. E. Ellison, became pastor in February. Five young men were baptized at the close of the evening service, April 23. Sunday congregations are large, the audience at night nearly filling the auditorium. Attendance and interest at the Wednesday night prayer service is increasing. All departments of the church are in good condition, and bending their concerted efforts toward the building campaign to enable carrying on the work of the winning of souls for Christ.

OHIO

MAD RIVER ASSOCIATION held its mid-year Sunday-school and B. Y. P. U. convention with Millerstown Church, April 29-30. Among the speakers were Dr. Roliv Harlan, Missionary W. C. Valentine, and Prof. F. G. Boughton, of Denison University. Millerstown Church has recently taken on new life. The doors were closed for a number of years. Two years ago services were begun on Sunday afternoons by a neighboring pastor. Rev. Clarence Motter then began his work as pastor. He now has twenty-two candidates awaiting baptism. Millerstown has about two hundred inhabitants and is the center of a distinctive community of its own.

THERE IS PROBABLY NO OTHER PLACE in the territory of the Northern Convention where there are as many Baptist churches in a country community as around St. Paris. There are seven, the greatest distance between any two of them being eleven miles. The churches are St. Paris, Lena, Mt. Pleasant, Millerstown, Myrtle Tree, Mt. Zion, and Honey Creek. These churches include over eight hundred members on their roll. A neighborhood Baptist Church Council has recently been organized with delegates from the various churches to perfect plans for cooperation and mutual helpfulness.

SINCE THE COMING OF REV. C. H. DONALDSON, Jan. 15, to First Church, Massillon, ninety have been received into the fellowship of the church. Easter Sunday fifty were baptized, the oldest received being eighty-two. The largest congregations ever gathered were those of Easter Sunday. Since then the auditorium has been filled at every service, baptism occurring each Sunday. On April 30, an entire Catholic family was baptized. Mr. Donaldson is his own evangelist. The Bible school has outgrown its rooms and plans are being made for enlarging quarters.

MICHIGAN

THIRTEEN SUNDAY SCHOOLS OF LANSING, under the auspices of the Lansing Sunday-school Council of Religious Education presented the pageant, "The Triumph of Light," on May 5 at First Church. This pageant was arranged for Children's Week from the choicest scenes in two great Children's Week pageants, "The Rights of the Child," by H. Augustine Smith, and "The Lamp," by Anita Ferris.

MARSHALL, REV. J. BURT BOUWMAN, pastor, reports a woman's union formed to carry on the work of the women under one strong organization uniting the social welfare and the missionary work of the women of the church. During the winter and early spring eight rural social meetings have been held in as many districts. Many contacts with country people established which are gradually bringing them to the church. About forty from the rural districts have enrolled in Sunday school and eight have been received into church. While no evangelistic meetings have been held, forty were received into the church during the Easter season. Prayer circles organized in the adult and young people's classes, forming at the same time evangelistic teams who work in the classes, accomplished these results. The Sunday school enrolment is about 425; attendance between 250 and 300. Plans for the building of a community house are under way and a drive for funds in the community and the church will be put on within the next few weeks.

MINNESOTA

EASTER SUNDAY was a red letter day in the calendar of First Church, St. Paul. Rev. John A. Earl, pastor. Thirty-three new members were received into the church by baptism; most of them from the Sunday school. Nearly $2,000 was given in money and checks in the special offering for missions; added to this was the $570 contributed by the women's society and $1,000 contributed by a friend, making a grand total of special gifts for Easter of more than $3,500. In addition to this the treasurer of benevolences reports more than $4,000 paid in on pledges. By the will of Mrs. Lutheria C. Bailey, mother of Mrs. C. R. Cowell, of St. Paul Park, $500 has been bequeathed to the American Foreign Mission Society, and a like amount to the American Home Mission Society. This amount, added to the extra gifts for missions given on Easter, raises the full amount of special gifts to nearly $5,000. Mrs. Bailey was a charter member of the Baptist Church of Newport.

The community has been reached as never before by the church and the gospel. More than 12,000 persons have attended church in seventeen Sunday nights, as against 4,000, the average Sunday evening attendance for the seventeen Sunday nights preceding the first of January.

NORTH DAKOTA

REV. W. A. DANIEL, PASTOR of First Church of Minot baptized twelve candidates on Easter Sunday, and two more believers are accepted for baptism.

MISS HELEN CRISSMAN OF NEW YORK, field secretary of the national World Wide Guild is reported to have made a successful tour among churches in North Dakota. She made a deep and, it is thought, an abiding impression upon the Baptist girlhood and young womanhood of North Dakota.

THE COMING STATE CONVENTION to be held at First Church of Grand Forks, June 1-5 promises to be one of the very strongest and most inspiring conventions held by Baptists in North Dakota.

COLORADO

FIRST CHURCH, OF LOVELAND, REV. A. W. Atkinson, pastor, closed a two-weeks' evangelistic campaign conducted by Franklin W. Swift, on April 30. Over 100 professed conversion, with twenty-five adults among the number.

ARIZONA

THE REV. GEORGE H. O'DONNELL began his pastorate with the Douglas church April 30. The church gave Pastor O'Donnell and his family a most cordial reception.

REV. E. L. BARKLEY closed his work at Winslow March 31. Brother Barkley has been ill for several months so that he could no longer carry the burden of the church. He leaves the church in good condition for a progressive work.

PASTOR NORTHRUP OF GLENDALE assisted Pastor Summers in a ten-day meeting at Buckeye which resulted in thirty-six professions of faith; twenty-four were baptized and four received by letter.

EVANGELIST BASSET is in a meeting with the Immanuel church, Phoenix, and Darnell at Middle Verde church.

ON SUNDAY, APRIL 30, Pastor Lands of Tempe baptized twelve Pima Indians into the fellowship of the church. This makes thirty-three of the Pimas who have thus become members of that church.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

JEFFERSON STREET CHURCH, LOS ANGELES, has closed three weeks' revival services. Rev. J. G. Carmichael preaching every night. Immediate results: Thirteen baptized and ten joined by letter; large class to be baptized next Sunday. Reports for the year for the Santa Barbara Convention to be held in a few days show gain of fifty-nine. Our records show that during the past six months our Sunday school, including our newly organized home department, has increased almost 100 per cent. Two years ago we had nothing but an empty lot. Now we have a plant, lot, building and furnishings valued at $11,800 without a cent of debt.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, April 30, a council composed of representatives from the Baptist churches of the San Francisco Bay District convened for the purpose of recognizing as a regularly constituted Baptist church the newly organized Thousand Oaks Baptist Church of Berkeley. This is situated in one of the most rapidly growing sections of the city and gives promise of becoming one of the strong churches of the district. After a short devotional service conducted by Rev. J. N. Garst of Oakland, the action of the church calling the council was read by the pastor, Rev. Albert Ehr Gott. The statement as to the doctrinal and denominational affiliation of the church being satisfactory, it was unanimously agreed to recognize the church as a properly constituted Baptist church. Dr. Arthur S. Phelps, acting pastor of First Church, San Francisco, extended the hand of fellowship and Dr. C. M. Hill, president of Berkeley Baptist Divinity School, delivered the charge to the church. Dr. E. A. Hanley of Berkeley First Church, from which a majority of the new organization had received letters, extended a warm fraternal greeting to the new church.

THE VALLEJO CHURCH, Rev. L. P. Russell, pastor, opened bids May 1 for a new building to cost about $50,000.

REV. RUFUS KEYSER, pastor at Lindsay, has resigned his work to take up special evangelistic work under Dr. John Brown of Siloam Springs, Ark.

REV. WALTER L. BAILEY of the Twenty-First Avenue Church, San Francisco, has resigned his pastorate on account of the illness of his little son who cannot stand the climate of the Bay District.

THE SAN JOAQUIN ASSOCIATION, the largest of Northern California, had an enthusiastic session at Sanger, April 18-21. A total of 504 baptisms and 1,247 additions were reported by the churches of this association during the past year. Dr. C. W. Brinstad made an earnest appeal on behalf of the New World Movement and the association entered heartily into plans for an immediate ingathering of mission funds.

THE SACRAMENTO ASSOCIATION held an interesting session at Rio Vista, April 25-27. A larger number of baptisms and additions was reported than has been on record for several years.

THE NORTHERN CALIFORNIA CONVENTION meets at Chico, May 9-12, and is eagerly looking forward to the visit of Judge F. W. Freeman, Dr. Bruce Kinney, Dr. James A. Francis, Dr. John Newcomb, Miss Mabelle McVeigh and others.

THE THREE-MONTHS' evangelistic campaign under the leadership of the state evangelistic committee and the superintendent of evangelism, Arthur V. Willey, is being brought to a successful conclusion.

While at this time complete reports are not in, yet over 3,000 additions and baptisms are anticipated. Besides reaching all the English-speaking churches, this campaign was carried into the Swedish, Indian, Negro, Chinese, Japanese and Mexican churches and missions. It was indeed a notable event when an Indian woman 101 years old walked into the cold mountain stream to follow her Lord in baptism at the hands of Missionary J. G. Brendel.

OREGON

EASTER SUNDAY was the best day that First Church, Newburg, Rev. W. H. Cox, pastor, has had. At the morning service 150 were present, with three baptisms and three received by letter. This makes twenty additions during the present pastorate. The Sunday-school attendance was ninety-eight. Sunday evening the Sunday school gave a program to an audience of 300.

Young People in Action

Arizona is endeavoring to raise $100 to put literature in the Mexican language to combat the Seventh Day Adventist movement.

The young people have had a good year in the service of our Lord and are looking forward to the coming year for still greater results.

Pennsylvania

By RITTENHOUSE NEISSER

UNDER the direction of the education board of the Pennsylvania Convention, the young people's department is cooperating with the state board of promotion in emphasizing stewardship, tithing and missionary education. Through the summer assemblies and local institutes an effort is being made to increase the efficiency of our young people's societies. During the coming year it is hoped to bring these organizations into closer relationship with each other and with the B. Y. P. U. of America, so that the plans of the general organization may effectively reach the local societies.

Southern California

By WILLIS SANFORD

LARGELY as a result of the inspiration, the unity, and the training acquired by our young people at our summer encampments, (which have an annual total registration of nearly 200) the young people's work in Southern California has shown a very healthy growth. We held at San Diego, last November, a three-day convention which surpassed that of the previous year by 100 per cent both in number of delegates and of societies represented. Our associational rallies have grown in power and enthusiasm, the Los Angeles Association having an average of nearly 1,000 young people at each quarterly rally. Perhaps the best thing about these activities is that the leadership and the initiative have come from the young people themselves. Our work is being pushed forward under the influence of one great purpose, namely, "the complete development and utilization of our young people for Christ and the Church." We are urging our young people not only to shoulder their responsibility in the local church, but also to support wholeheartedly the great program of our denomination. We are now in the midst of an awakening which augurs well for the future.

In West Virginia

By A. B. WITHERS

THE young people's work in West Virginia was organized over thirty years ago, soon after the B. Y. P. U. A. was launched. During these years it has had a varied experience. For the lack of a general worker to cultivate the work among the churches, it has not had the growth nor accomplished for our young people what it might have done had conditions been better. West Virginia is a mountainous state and access to the churches is difficult on this account. We have something like 600 churches, but the great majority of these are country or village churches where advantages for training are limited. Many of these churches are in mining villages; some in lumber camps. Many others, however, are vigorous and forward-looking. Some of the best organized churches in the Northern Convention are in West Virginia. These are in the minority, however.

Our last report, showed over 150 B. P. U.'s in the state. Some of these are weak and struggling; others strong and progressive. So far as we know, there are but two or three Endeavor societies in our Baptist churches.

For many years now, the B. Y. P. U. of West Virginia has cooperated vigorously in the West Virginia Baptist Assembly and also in the West Virginia Baptist Girl's Encampment, and has had a creditable share in the great good accomplished for our young people by these two institutions.

We have two city unions: Parkersburg and Huntington. The latter was recently organized, but the former has been doing a splendid work for several years. The president of the state organization is Mr. Kenneth Leeson, of Mount Hope. The secretary-treasurer, Miss Esta Roberts of Parkersburg. Several of our district associations are organized, and meet annually with the Sunday-school conventions.

We report with deep sorrow the recent death of Dr. T. C. Johnson, of Charleston, a life-long friend of the organized young people's work and active in the launching of the B. Y. P. U. A., appearing several times on the programs of our national meetings.

There is a healthy growth of interest in recent months in B. Y. P. U. work, throughout the state, and we believe the future is bright for the cause.

Our greatest need at this time is a general secretary for the young people's work of the state. This would, we believe, solve our problems.

North Dakota Moves Forward

By E. WIESLE

THERE has been progress all along the line. It is not so sensational that we need fear reaction. We feel that in many parts of the state our young people have worked as never before. The progress cannot be stated in figures, nor approximated in any other way since there has been no attempt to gather such information.

The number of societies has increased by six, which means considerable in our small convention. Three societies have been reorganized and report very good interest. The program which was so enthusiastically adopted at the last convention is reported to have given direction and definiteness to the work in a number of instances. It is hoped that after the next convention shall have been held in Grand Forks, June 1-5, the means will have been provided for an even greater unification of forces. It is also expected that the first state assembly to be held in North Dakota will materially aid in giving vision and instruction to our splendid young forces. Our societies have been emphasizing life-service stewardship, evangelism and missions since the beginning of 1922. What will be the points of emphasis for the coming months has not been decided.

Seventy-six young people have thus far volunteered for special Christian service. Others are seriously considering the step. Only two have withdrawn their names. As a result of the stewardship campaign, we now have seventy-eight members in the tithers' league. Many names have not yet come to the office. The young people are more than holding their own in comparison with the rest of the tithers in the state.

Since Miss Emma E. Anderson came into the state, a number of new World Wide Guilds and Children's World Crusader Companies have been organized. These organizations are carrying on a good work under the direction of their leaders.

Resolutions Presented

At a meeting of the New York Ministers' Conference, on Monday, May 15, the following resolutions were presented:

In response to the request of our president, Mrs. Montgomery, and in union with the prayer groups established by our women's societies, we resolve:—

I. To hold June 4-10 as a week of prayer for our whole convention work:

II. To use the day preceding and our usual mid-week service or some portion thereof in special prayer for the convention;

III. To ask mission circles and young people in their services of that week to join with us in prayer for the same purpose;

IV. To invite ministers' conferences and clubs all over our convention field, and our newspapers to emphasize with us these efforts for special prayer and supplication on the part of those who attend and those who may not be able to attend the convention sessions. ALBERT G. LAWSON.

A sect of the Hindus, very common in India, believe that the world is now in the period of Kali Yuga, or wickedness. This cycle will not be completed until the world becomes worse and worse and finally touches "bottom" in moral depravity, and then the Golden Age will suddenly dawn.

Program of the Northern Baptist Convention

By HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

DR. C. W. CHAMBERLAIN, chairman of the program committee for the convention, has just given out to the public an outline of what we are attempting to present this year. The theme of the convention is "The Uplifted Christ," and the entire first day is given to the exaltation and adoration of the Christ in whose name we meet. No items of business are allowed to have consideration, except those which are prescribed in the constitution of the convention—the appointment of members on the standing committees of the convention, such as the nominating committee, the committee on resolutions and the committee on the order of business. Places will be provided where each state delegation may meet and discharge with decorum and dignity the important function of appointing its representatives on these committees.

The keynote address on "The Uplifted Christ," from the text, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me," will be delivered by Rev. Carter Helm Jones of Philadelphia. This will be given at the close of the morning session. The only other addresses of the morning are the address of welcome by Rev. F. E. Taylor of Indianapolis and the address of the president. In the afternoon the theme, "The Uplifted Christ, the Undiminished Attraction," is considered under three phases: "In the Proclamation of the Evangel" is presented by Rev. J. J. Ross of Chicago; "In the Witnessing Power of Personal Testimony," by Rev. C. L. Travin of McMinnville, Ore., and "In the Abandon of Sacrifice" by Rev. W. H. Geistweil of St. Louis. The evening session will center about the theme, "The Uplifted Christ in the Conquest of the World." This will be presented by Rev. J. C. Robbins, secretary of the Foreign Mission Society, who has recently returned from an official visitation to the fields in India, Burma and Assam. This session will close with a stereopticon lecture.

The most novel feature of the entire program will be the presentation of mission study before the whole convention. The delegates form one huge mission study class. This feature comes at 11 o'clock each morning. The first three mornings the class will be conducted by Mrs. W. T. Elmore, and will study the foreign mission text book for the year, "Working with India," by Prof. Fleming of Columbia. The last three days the mission text book will be presented by Rev. C. A. Brooks, and will discuss the home mission topic for the year on the book, "The Trend of the Races," by George E. Haynes.

Another feature of the convention program will be a devotional Bible study conducted each day by Rev. J. A. Francis, of Los Angeles, Dr. Francis has not yet announced his theme, but many hope that he will present his wonderful study of the Book of Ephesians. We can be assured of a rich spiritual feast, in whatever theme he chooses.

The afternoon of Thursday has the joint session of the American Foreign Mission Society and the Woman's American Foreign Mission Society. This is followed by the college reunions. The evening is given over to the presentation of our educational work at home and abroad. Dr. Padelford is to discuss our educational work in China and Japan. The speaker on education in the home field has not yet been announced.

One of the most interesting features of Friday morning will be the report of the Columbia Conference, by Judge Freeman, and the session of the Publication Society. The entire afternoon of Friday is given over to the laymen. The evening session is devoted to the presentation of the work of the Woman's American Home Mission Society, and will close with a set of stereopticon pictures. On Saturday morning the Ministers and Missionaries' Benefit Board will present its work, and the afternoon will be largely given over to recreation and acquaintance. The evening will have the two banquets, that of the brotherhood and that of the women.

On Sunday morning there is to be a great convention prayer meeting called at 10 o'clock, and the convention sermon will be preached by Dr. Albert W. Beaven of Rochester, N. Y. The young people will hold their session, which is always one of the most interesting of the entire convention, on the afternoon of Sunday, and the evening will be crowned by an inspirational address as is usual. Monday morning is given over to convention business—the report of the nominating committee, the committee on resolutions, and the report of the board of education.

It was felt that many attending the convention want an opportunity for more intimate and informal discussion of various phases of the work than they can get in the convention sessions, and therefore the entire afternoon of Monday is given up to conferences. These are now being arranged for, and will probably embrace social service, rural evangelism, religious education, missionary methods, young women's work, work for children, and other topics that may be called for. The evening of Monday is devoted to civic questions—the duty of the Baptist denomination toward the great moral questions of the day. The speakers are not yet announced. Tuesday will have a morning session of the Home Mission Society, and a joint session of the foreign societies in the afternoon, with presentation of candidates; in the evening a great session given over to the consideration of the Negro. Major Moton of Tuskegee, will give an address on "The Negro in America," and Dr. Lerrigo who has recently returned from Africa an address on "The Negro of Africa." This session ought to be a fitting climax to the whole program.

Mrs. Orrin Judd, of New York, has been appointed chairman of a committee to arrange a program of prayer for the entire convention. There will be groups engaged in intercessory prayer in all the hotels and boarding houses. Special topics will be printed in the daily issue of THE BAPTIST, and in many ways Mrs. Judd will see that organized and united intercessory prayer is offered for the convention. It is hoped that those who can not attend the convention will remember the speakers in prayer, and will follow the program daily with their intercession.

MUSIC FOR COMMENCEMENT-TIME.

Since the end of the school year is now not very far distant, several requests have come to me for suggestions as to choral numbers suitable for such occasions—more particularly for pieces written for two-part chorus of women's voices. A visit to the well-stocked music store of Clayton F. Summy Co. rewarded me with the following list of such material. All tastes and all conditions can be met from the choice offered—none are difficult, all are melodious and of practical range.

ORGAN MUSIC

The question of what is legitimate organ music is open to much discussion. My object today is to bring before you a side of organ music which has not yet been thoroughly developed, namely, original compositions for the organ more suitable for the concert room than for the church. I do not agree with those who hold that the German school is the only ideal school of organ music. English builders were the first to give attention to improvement in mechanism and the invention of the swell. The French followed suit, but they have been far slower in adopting improvements. With this development of mechanism and the introduction of fancy stops, it is only natural that English and French organ music should have a style of its own.

Surely, then, because the style of our organ music and that of the French has grown out of the development of the instrument, it is hardly reasonable to say that these schools are not legitimate and just as true to the genius of the organ. I have never heard it said that, because Chopin and the modern pianoforte composers availed themselves of the improvements in their instruments, those masters who preceded them were the only composers of ideal pianoforte music. The prejudice against arrangements for the organ is happily dying out. In fact, they are an absolute necessity for the concert room; but I want to see more actual concert music written for the organ. Why should not dance rhythms be employed? We often hear it said of certain passages played on the organ, "Those are pianoforte passages," or "Those are orchestral passages," and people are scandalized to find modern mechanism and fancy steps taken advantage of. What does this signify, if the passages can be played on the organ and sound well?

—Alfred Hollins in an address delivered in Glasgow.

THE PROBLEM OF THE ORGANIST

In order to assist churches in securing the best organists and choirmasters available, The American Organist, published in New York City maintains a registration bureau where churches may secure organists for any part of the country and at such salary as may be offered. The bureau is conducted without cost to either the church or the organist. Church officials and ministers are invited to consult The American Organist when in need of an organist, and to take advantage of its services of advice relative to new organs, which is freely rendered ministers and organ committees as a means of furthering the building of proper church organs. The American Organist magazine may be addressed at 36 W. 65th St., New York.

CIRCULATION BRAG

Every little while some little incident occurs which brings home in a more dramatic fashion than usual the wide-flung extent of the circulation of this paper. One such case was brought to my notice a few weeks ago. One of our Baptist missionaries stationed far in the interior of China—at Chengtu Sze, to be exact—ordered a set of Christmas carols from the Clayton F. Summy Co. in Chicago. These carols were newly published this season, and were reviewed on this page. An order from such a distance makes it probable that THE BAPTIST was the medium by which the order was suggested. This probability became almost a certainty when there was found on the subscription list the consignee's name and address—Mrs. H. J. Openshaw, Chengtu Sze, West China. ADVERTISING PAYS.

ORGAN RECITAL

Isabel Pearson Fuller gave a recital under the auspices of the Northeastern Pennsylvania chapter of the A. G. O. at Immanuel Baptist Church, Scranton, Pa., Feb. 19. Marion Parsons, contralto, of the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York City, assisted her. Mrs. Fuller's selections included: "Praeludium Festivum" (from the First Sonata), Rene L. Becker; Idyll, Harold Vincent Milligan; Scherzo (from Fifth Sonata), Guilmant; Russian Boatmen's Song on the River Volga, arranged by Clarence Eddy; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; "Will-o'-the-Wisp," Nevin; "The Lost Chord," Sullivan; "Evening Bells and Cradle Song," Macfarlane; "Rameses II" (Allegro Marziale from "Egyptian Suite), Stoughton.

It was at a camp-meeting and hats had just been passed round to receive the collection. The preacher rose and said, "Let us sing while the hats are coming in."

The pianist after some fumbling with the pages turned to him and said, "I can't find it."

"Eh?" said the preacher, not understanding.

"That song, 'While the Hats Are Coming In'—it isn't in my book," said the pianist. —Boston Transcript.

Tubular Tower Chimes

Electrically Operated

I have heard sweet
Chimes a-ringing,
Down the lanes of memory,
Heard them calling,
Heard them singing
In the days that used to be.
But the sweetest, purest,
clearest,
Dringing ring of fairs
nearest,
Making life divinest,
dearest,
Are the Old Church
Chimes to me.
Anon.

Tower Chimes are the Memorial Sublime

Their location becomes a landmark; the sublimity of their music is in harmony with man's feelings of reverence—an outpouring of musical solemnity and worship.

Just the mere touch of a finger upon the electric keyboard in the organist's console, or the minister's study, brings forth the full power of the magnificent, sweet yet sonorous tones of Deagan Chimes.

What more fitting memorial, what greater philanthropy could be bestowed upon any community than the installation of a set of Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes? May we send you more complete information?

Fresh from the Field

Rev. Frank Peterson, of Minneapolis, general representative of the Board of Promotion, left on May 16, at the invitation of the Home Mission Society, on a tour of some of the Baptist Indian and Negro schools in the South. He is to visit Bacone, at Muskogee; Roger Williams, at Nashville; Spelman and Morehouse, at Atlanta; Benedict, at Columbia, S. C.; Virginia Union University and Hartshorn, at Richmond, Va. He is expecting to deliver the baccalaureate sermon at Richmond and to confer the diplomas on the graduating class at Spelman.

The Moody Institute, Chicago, is to begin in the fall a three-year course for the preparation of pastors. The reasons given are as follows: "The alarming fact that in recent years a large number of churches throughout the country have been closed for lack of pastors, while at the same time the number of young men studying for the ministry has showed a marked decrease, and the still more alarming development of religious teaching, which reduces the Bible to a naturalistic basis and denies the deity of Christ and the supernatural in his life and death." THE BAPTIST gives this announcement as a matter of news but repeats its conviction that Baptist pastors should be trained in Baptist schools.

The Methodist Federation for Social Service has just held, May 23-25, at Evanston, Ill., a conference on "Christianity and the Social Order," at which Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of Pittsburgh, presided, with a notable list of subjects and speakers. The Methodists are much awake to the social applications of the gospel.

The catalogue of Hillsdale College shows 466 students this year. Among the improvements announced for the year is the remodeling and new furnishings of the women's dormitory into an elegant women's home at a cost exceeding $40,000; the rebuilding of the steam plant which heats five of the seven buildings; erection of a large chemical laboratory; additional equipment of a building which is devoted entirely to teaching domestic science and living rooms of students in that department; larger teaching staff for business administration and the several kinds of instrumental and vocal music, glee clubs, public school and community music; an unusual increase in students in all departments; and substantial gifts of money and pledges for the endowment, which now exceeds a half million dollars. The catalogue will be sent free on application to the secretary of the college at Hillsdale, Mich.

THE BAPTIST, in its issue of April 15, published a cablegram from Secretary J. C. Robbins announcing that 2500 converts had been baptized since the first of January on the new field in China, across the northern border of Burma. A confirmatory letter from Secretary Robbins has just been received by the Foreign Mission Board, which indicates that Rev. William M. Young, the missionary on this field, and his two native preachers have baptized 2507 converts since Jan. 1. Mr. Young has been on the field for two years, as this was opened two years ago largely as a result of the stimulus and the promise of new resources from the New World Movement. During these two years a total of 3351 converts have been baptized. At the time of Secretary Robbins' visit, early in March, the association was in session with 1300 delegates present. For the entertainment of the people, the Christian villages in the immediate vicinity of the place of meeting furnished fifteen steers, fourteen hogs, 8126 pounds of rice, 195 pounds of salt and ninety pounds of pepper. Secretary Robbins reports strenuous experiences on this journey, rising every morning at 4:30, packing cots, bedding, tents, etc., and in the saddle at 6:30, riding until 11:00, resting in the heat of the day, resuming the journey at 2:30 and camping at 5:00 each afternoon. After dinner there is always an evening service and conferences, so that the retiring hour is generally about ten o'clock. The journey required eleven days from Rangoon. One was spent on the railroad, two in a Ford automobile and eight in the saddle.

Crozer Theological Seminary will observe its fifty-fourth anniversary, June 4-6. The baccalaureate sermon will be preached by Rev. Chas. L. Williams, of Granville, Ohio, and the missionary sermon by Rev. Philip J. McLean, of Aiken, S. C. On Monday morning there will be an address on the subject, "Is There Need for Baptists?" by Dean J. R. The commencement address on Tuesday morning will be by Dr. W. W. Keen, of Philadelphia.

In personal letters to the Board of Managers of the Foreign Mission Society, Secretary James H. Franklin has reported unusual evangelistic achievements in Japan. At the Shiba church in Tokyo, a part of the field of Rev. William Wynd, thirty have been baptized and twenty others are awaiting the ordinance. The Liuchiu Islands have also reported thirty baptisms. At Waseda University twelve students are awaiting baptism. Two days after Dr. Franklin's arrival, he attended a meeting at the Immanuel Church, where forty-nine professed conversion. The series of meetings was being conducted by Rev. S. Kimura, who is popularly known as the Billy Sunday of Japan. Missionaries expressed the opinion that this year will prove to be the best in the history of Japan in evangelistic achievements.

The National Child Welfare Association, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City, announces three illustrated lectures under the titles, "Child Welfare—Everybody's Business," "Makers of American Ideals," and "Warfare or Welfare," for churches, schools and general community gatherings. Each lecture has fifty colored slides and is arranged for use as a special feature of a regular program or as a complete program for a special meeting. "Child Welfare—Everybody's Business" points out that the most effective child welfare endeavors can be promoted in any community by the simple device of cultivating the normal child's natural inclinations and interests. "Makers of American Ideals" helps young and old to realize their debt to those who have striven for the establishment of America's great ideals and to inspire them with a resolve to pay that debt. "Warfare or Welfare" tells of the nation's endeavors for public betterment through many agencies and suggests what might be accomplished if a part of the money and energy now spent for war purposes were to be devoted to constructive welfare activities. The lectures are available by purchase or rental.

The May number of the "Journal of Religion," published by the University of Chicago Press, has particular interest at the present time because of the first three articles contained in it. The titles and authors are: "The Kentucky Campaign Against the Teaching of Evolution," by Alonzo W. Fortune; "The Constitutional and Legal Status of Religion in Public Education," by Carl Zollman; "Can Christianity Welcome Freedom of Teaching?" by Gerald Birney Smith.

Rev. Henry T. Hodgkin, for many years secretary of the Friends Foreign Mission Society of England, has been touring China, visiting among other places the Shanghai Baptist College, maintained by Northern and Southern Baptists. Concerning the college, he wrote to Mr. Mornay Williams, "Shanghai Baptist College was new to me. The other institutions I had visited before. At Shanghai I found the spirit peculiarly fine. There seems to be a combination of good scholarship, social enthusiasm and deep personal religion, such as is not very common."

The new program of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, revived at Chicago on May 3-4, is to be built with a view of bringing the laymen of local churches face to face with the world missionary program in communities where there are at least two churches representing different evangelical bodies. Such a local meeting should be strictly missionary, fraternal and cooperative. Local workers or workers secured in exchange with neighboring communities will be preferred. In addition there will probably be various central conferences to suggest a uniform plan of missionary education and stimulation. In short, the idea is to produce the greatest amount of missionary knowledge and enthusiasm with a minimum of machinery.

On May 10, the Second Church, Chicago, Dr. J. J. Ross, pastor, held its annual meeting, which was the best in the history of that historic church. During the year, ninety-six persons received the hand of fellowship into the church, forty-nine of whom were baptized, the rest coming in by letter and experience. The total amount raised for current expenses was $20,570.52, and for Missions and Benevolences, $27,819.52, which was $10,319.52 above the previous year gifts to missions and benevolences, and above the objective for those objects that the church aimed at for the year ending April 30. In the meeting, there were many expressions of appreciation of the good work done by the pastor, and his assistants, Misses Frances Fredrickson, Lennie Rhodes, Hazel Greene, Mrs. Lee Potts, and Mr. Fred W. Heath.

As a Layman Sees Us

A. R. Wood of Norton, Kan., writes: "THE BAPTIST is getting better every day. You are making it the paper of the Baptist people. Too often in the past our papers have been made by preachers and for preachers. We need a paper that is for the people as a whole. Keep on putting the emphasis on the young people. Keep on giving us news. Keep on with Killam's Kollum. It is fine. I read it first. Keep on telling us of a living religion. A religion that is the old-time religion practiced and preached to meet our modern needs." This man must have had access to our "editorial policies." We are trying to make a paper which will help our Baptist people in their personal lives and in their work.

Killam's Kollum

Tell Us the Truth—About Others

The editors of the American Magazine credit W. O. Saunders with publishing one of the most interesting small-town newspapers in the country. In the June issue Mr. Saunders gives us some very personal and intimate facts concerning his editorial experiences. He has been mobbed. The tar has been heated and the feathers prepared for a "party." He has been boycotted. He has been charged by the church folks with infidelity. He has been sued for libel in almost every county where his sheet circulates. But in spite of—or perhaps because of—these experiences, in a dozen years he has made "one of the most interesting" papers in the country. You notice some folks got mad. You will notice that there did not seem to be any question about whom to sue or mob. He did not even have a committee "to stand the gaff." THE BAPTIST is especially interested in his discovery "that the American people have a lively passion for the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth about everything and everybody—except themselves and their family connections." Mr. Saunders, we believe that you would learn some new things about human nature even yet were you to edit a Baptist newspaper.

Thank You

Rev. L. J. Velte, formerly pastor of the Tabernacle Church, Chicago, and now pastor of the Merriam Park Church, St. Paul, writes: THE BAPTIST sure is a storehouse and a powerhouse. It is most stimulating and challenging in its fair dealing and forward look." It does not take a prophet to foresee a great list in the Merriam Park Church. Set the young folks at the task. They will put it over.

He Has Earned the Right

At the recent meeting of the Michigan Baptist Convention in Jackson, Rev. J. C. Rooney, familiarly known as Father Rooney, stated that this was the forty-second successive annual meeting of the convention that he had attended. He spoke following a discussion of the action of the board of managers memorializing the Northern Baptist Convention relative to a creedal pronouncement. He recalled his early training for the priesthood. He told of the steps which led him into the Baptist fold. He then referred to parts of the discussion and said, "these discussions, pardon the statement, seem very immature to one whose convictions led him to the Baptist position and whose nearly half century of service has been given in one state to the promulgation of New Testament Christianity." No one could resent the statement of any man whose life and ministry for such a period have been beyond reproach.

On May 12, the trustees of the Frances Shimer School, Mt. Carroll, Ill., let the contract for the erection of a new residence hall to house sixty-five pupils and teachers, and a dining room for 250, to be ready for the opening on Sept. 20. The contract price is $60,500, and it is expected that the total cost, with necessary additions and furniture, will be kept under $70,000.

Mr. Clinton N. Howard, of Rochester, N. Y., is to be the speaker on Civic Evening, Monday, June 19, at the Northern Baptist Convention. His theme will be, "A Warless World and a Law-Abiding Nation." Mr. Howard has been prominent for many years in temperance and reform organizations and is a speaker of international reputation. He is certain to move the convention by his presentation of the double theme suggested above.

Rev. Elisha M. Lake, pastor of the First Church, Springfield, Mass., on May 14 presented his resignation, to take effect Sept. 1. About two years ago, the State Street Church, of which Dr. Lake was pastor, and the First Highland Church united in the formation of a new church. This consolidation was wise and has worked out well. "The work of organization having been effected," says Dr. Lake, "and the consummation of the union having been realized in spirit and purpose, I now believe that the time has come for another pastor to take up the important work." Dr. and Mrs. Lake are planning to spend several months in Europe in extended travel and study.

Rev. Herbert W. Hines celebrated the anniversary of his first year as pastor of the First Church of Kankakee, Ill., by extending the hand of fellowship to sixty new members at the last communion service, fifty of whom were baptized on Easter Day. This is the largest number ever received into the Kankakee church at one time.

The annual convention of the Illinois Sunday-School Convention is to be held at Galesburg, June 13-15, the larger meetings being scheduled for the Central Congregational Church. The program committee believes that it has outlined the most significant program ever presented.

The San Joaquin (Cal.) Valley Association which met April 18-21, passed resolutions expressing the loyalty of its members to the New World Movement and its conviction that "there ought to be no cessation of efforts to secure the entire $100,000,000 as at first planned." April 23-30 was set aside as self-denial week.

The closing exercises of the International Seminary, East Orange, N. J., will be held from May 28 to June 1. Sunday morning, May 28, President George Edwin Horr of Newton Theological Seminary, will preach the annual sermon in the North Orange Church. Monday evening, May 29, the prize contest in Scripture reading in English on the part of the students will take place. Three prizes are offered, one for each of the three classes in English. Tuesday evening, May 30, the faculty and students will take charge of the prayer meetings of the four Baptist churches in the Oranges. Wednesday evening, May 31, annual seminary banquet for the faculty and students of the seminary. Thursday, June 1, 4 p.m., in the main building of the seminary, the annual meeting of the board of trustees. In the evening of the same day, Dean J. F. Vichert of Colgate Theological Seminary will give the annual address at the First Church of East Orange.

Rev. W. T. Dorward, pastor of the Tabernacle Church, Milwaukee, Wis., is to address the annual meeting of the Marion County (Ind.) Young People at Indianapolis on June 6. The meeting will be preceded by a banquet at which it is expected that 500 people will be present.

The fifty-fifth commencement of Storer College, Harpers Ferry, W. Va., will be held from May 27 to 31, the latter date being commencement day.

Commencement exercises at the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, Chicago, will be held May 25-31. There are nineteen members in the graduating class and between fifty and sixty representing twenty-five churches, have enrolled in the Institute evening classes. The baccalaureate sermon will be given by Dr. A. S. Carman and the missionary sermon by Rev. A. G. Johnson. On Monday evening, Chicago ministers and their wives and friends will be guests at a theological conference. The graduating exercises will be at 8 p. m. on May 30.

Rev. B. T. Livingston, secretary of the Rhode Island Convention has accepted the position of general secretary of the New England Evangelistic Association, with offices in Tremont Temple, Boston.

Dr. Erdmann Smith, professor of education and psychology at William Jewell College, will teach psychology in the University of Oklahoma during the summer term.

Two dramatic sketches illustrating the New World Movement have recently been issued by the Literature Department of the General Board of Promotion: "The Vision Splendid," "The Sweep of the Searchlight," "The Vision Splendid" was prepared by Rev. C. A. Boyd, director of religious education for Wisconsin, and has been used widely in that state and elsewhere. "The Sweep of the Searchlight" was presented at the annual meeting of the General Board of Promotion in Indianapolis and is now available for general use. These are in multigraphed form and can be had for 15 cents from the Literature Department of the Board of Promotion, at any of the following addresses: 125 North Wabash Ave., Chicago; 276 Fifth Avenue, New York; 700 Ford Bldg., Boston; 504 Columbia Bldg., Los Angeles.

Laymen Wanted at Convention

By FRED W. FREEMAN

While the results of the last campaign are not available to me as yet, it is quite evident that we closed last year with a very large debt. It is not possible to see to what extent the laymen's movement was useful, but so far as my information goes, it is believed that the laymen's organization has only begun its usefulness.

I am writing this brief note to suggest that the laymen be at the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis.

The program committee has provided in their tentative program of the convention for one and one-half hours' conference by laymen. At this time the activities of the past will be summarized and the recommendations as to the future program will be made by the executive committee.

It seems highly desirable, for these reasons, that laymen should make every effort to be present and participate in these conferences.

The oncoming convention promises to be one of the most important in recent history and I believe it will prove to be among the best. Our present situation certainly ought to bring out the best that is within us, and we should approach the convention in a spirit of willingness to be led by the Spirit of God to do the right thing.

A lot of cross-currents of opinions will have their play but my conviction is that all these are covered by Romans 8, and that all will work out under the Providence of God and leadership of the spirit for the good of our cause.

William Hiram Holden

William H. Holden, a prominent attorney of Chicago and long influential in Baptist affairs, died at his home in Evanston, May 11 and was buried, May 13.

Descended from distinguished New England ancestry, Mr. Holden was born in Chicago, June 6, 1843, when his parents were living in Clark St., where the Planters Hotel is now located. He remembered playing with the soldiers stationed at Fort Dearborn and crossing the Chicago River at Rush Street on a rope ferry. His father, Chas. N. Holden, was prominent in business, politics and church affairs in the middle of the century and was at one time candidate for mayor of the city.

In 1866 he began the practice of law and the next year married Sarah J. Revell, sister-in-law of Dwight L. Moody. This same year he became a member of the Chicago Law Institute, serving as treasurer for twenty-three years and as librarian for nearly twenty years. He was the first examiner of titles appointed under the first Torrens act passed in the state. His office to which he went regularly to within two weeks of his death was in the Tribune Building, just across the street from his childhood home.

During his residence in Chicago, Mr. Holden was prominent in the Second Church, where he was for more than thirty years superintendent of the Sunday school, and for long periods president of the board of trustees. He was also one of the first trustees of the University of Chicago and for many years of the Theological Union. He was also a trustee of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. and president of the Moody Colportage Association.

Mrs. Holden survives her husband, as do also two children—Mrs. Ethel H. Chapman of Winnetka, and Chas. R. Holden, vice-president of the Union Trust Co., of Chicago, and also a trustee of the Theological Union, the third of his line to hold such a position.

Annual Meeting of W. A. B. H. M. S.

The forty-fifth annual meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society will be held at the Cadle Tabernacle, Indianapolis, Ind., Monday morning, June 19, 1922, at which time officers and members of the board of managers will be elected, and other necessary business transacted.

The Baptist

Can Baptists Walk Together?

"CAN two walk together except they be agreed?" The Bible does not say they cannot; it merely asks the question. As a matter of fact and of experience we know well that they can walk together even though they disagree on many very important matters. Otherwise marriage would be quite impossible. But though identity of conviction is not essential there is one thing that is essential. They who are to walk together must trust one another. If they love one another, that, of course, covers all; but at the very least they must trust one another, they must have confidence in one another's sincerity. It would be well if every Baptist who reads these lines, whatever may be his theological predilections, would pause here for a moment and ask himself seriously, "Do I believe that my brother with whom I disagree in doctrine is as sincere as I?" Brethren, if we do not trust one another we had better part company without delay! The parting will come "eventually, so why not now?" Without mutual trust we cannot walk together.

But if we believe utterly in the sincerity of the brethren with whom we disagree, what then? Then we must deeply resolve to understand one another, in spite of all limitations and human perversities. We must say, "We will understand; we are determined to get our brethren's point of view!" There are no causes of dissension and disunion greater than the constant irritation that grows out of the misrepresentations of another's real position that spring from misunderstanding. If we persist in the effort to understand, it may be that we shall discover a larger content of agreement than we now suspect.

But if we come to an understanding and still find that we disagree radically with our brethren, what then? Then, either one or the other of several courses are open to us. We can attempt to convert our brethren who seem to us to be misguided, and persuade them to listen to reason and believe as we. We would not, of course, endeavor to compel them or scold them or bully or scare them into conformity. Only weak minds would succumb to such measures, and assent thus gained would be an empty triumph, a Pyrrhic victory. No, we must persuade them by argument addressed to the reason. We must meet them on their own ground and prove that their premises are false and their conclusions fallacious. By all means let us attempt to do so, but in courtesy and love. Let the mind of man clash with the mind of man: truth will be the gainer.

However, speaking for ourselves, we have no hope of converting all our brethren to our point of view. Once in a while we find an open-minded brother, and we can almost always bring him around to see things as we do!

But most of our acquaintances, in the ministry at least, appear to have already made up their minds, and to have a theology that suits them, and they are incredibly obstinate! They seem to be absolutely indifferent to the fact that we do not approve their views, and think them to be impossible! Well, we would have them know that we are quite as indifferent to their opinion of ours! We achieved our convictions through struggle. We feel toward them as Audrey toward his wife—they may be poor enough, but they are our own! If any one wants to work with us they must take us as we are: we cannot change our convictions just to accommodate them!

If we cannot convince the brethren with whom we disagree that they are wrong, and still admit that they are as sincere as we, what then? Perhaps on that account we must part company with them. Perhaps we have so little in common with them that there is no tie between us. That is the question which in this hour the Baptists of the North are called upon to face. It is a solemn question and fraught with great destinies, and we are called upon to decide it in the presence of our God and of an onlooking world which will not be slow to judge us and to deride if we make mistakes.

If we decide to walk together, then we must of necessity find a basis of unity other than identity of doctrinal conviction. It is useless to stay together unless we can find that. We cannot live in peace together if we are to be hectoring and nagging one another all the time. The present situation is fast becoming intolerable. We can walk together if we disagree, but not if we are too disagreeable.

Where shall we look for such a bond of unity? We may, in the first place, make more than we do of the modicum of agreement in doctrine that now exists. It is something less than identity of conviction, but it has a very considerable substance. In general men are more likely to agree in their affirmations than in their negations. That may suggest a hopeful direction in which to look for some measure of common ground. But we must look farther. We must concentrate attention upon other points of contact than doctrinal identity. We have one Lord, even Christ, and a common devotion to Him. We have the same heritage and the same responsibilities. We have a common duty toward a world distracted and torn and in such distress and need as no generation has known before. We have a great task still undone. We undertook it together, and we ought to see it through together. There is no such unifying influence as a common interest in a common enterprise. Perhaps we need to work together more faithfully before we shall see eye to eye.

After all, religion is a life, and theology is only the attempt, more or less successful, to explain that life, and find rational grounds for it. We may differ widely in our explanations of the life while still helping one another to live it. We are not saved by our orthodoxy. It is quite possible that we might be hugely mistaken in our theology and yet be saved by Christ. A child might be saved by a parachute if he trusted himself to it, though thoroughly mistaken in his understanding of the principle on which it works. We are not saved by our doctrine of the atonement, but by the atonement. We are saved by our loyalties, that is, by our faith.

Old-Fashioned Baptists

FROM the resolutions passed by the First Church in Newton, at Newton Centre, published in THE BAPTIST of May 20, we judge that there are left some old-fashioned Baptists. They still believe, for example, down in Newton Centre, "that the local church has supreme authority in all matters of discipline and government and, therefore, must deny the right of any group of individuals or churches, or of any State Convention, or even of the Northern Baptist Convention itself, to impose its authority upon the local church;" and that "each church decides as to the eligibility of its own membership and the correctness of its own views in accordance with its own interpretation of the New Testament."

We have not heard such doctrine for so long a time that we had supposed that it had been discarded as out of date and behind the times. We have become so accustomed to some brother arising in the columns of our Baptist press or in public address, like some reincarnated Peter with the keys, to invite some other brother, with whose theology he disagrees, to walk out of the denomination, that we had supposed that this represented the new order of things, and that church discipline and the determination of doctrinal orthodoxy had now, by common consent, been relegated to any theological Tom, Dick or Harry who volunteered to undertake it, or to any group of individuals who were willing to relieve the local churches of the rather ungrateful task.

Indeed, it has lately been hinted that good friends in other denominations might be given a voice in the difficult and unpleasant process of weeding out the undesirables. Dr. W. B. Riley, of Minneapolis, quotes with cordial approval The Presbyterian as an authoritative exponent of Baptist polity. The position of Baptist liberals, says The Presbyterian, "has become infidelity of a type exceeding that held by Tom Paine and Bob Ingersoll." It affirms that "the only manly and fair thing is for the rationalists (The Presbyterian's endearing epithet for those with whose theology it disagrees), who are the intruders into the evangelical historical heritage, to withdraw and organize a body of their own." Dr. Riley heartily endorses this program made for the liberals by The Presbyterian. The suggestion, it might be said in passing, betrays perhaps a somewhat naive conception of the Baptist historical heritage excusable in a Presbyterian, and certainly an incongruous faith in the manliness and fairness of those whom it conceives to be so false to their Lord. But the Baptists of Newton Centre are still living in an age when questions of doctrine were left to the decision of the local church, and seem to be unwilling to relegate that responsibility with respect to their own members to any of the most eager volunteer assistants. They want to do it themselves!

There are other respects in which the Baptists of Newton Centre seem to be belated, and to be living in what we might term a "mid-Victorian" stage of ethical development. In view of the fact that "there is widespread and indefinite criticism in our denomination which threatens the very life of our denominational enterprises, both at home and abroad, and tends to discredit our colleges and seminaries, to separate our churches and to limit the usefulness of our denominational agencies," they declare that they "regard general criticism, general accusations and blanket indictments as highly unethical. They give rise to suspicion, kill confidence, sow discord among brethren and cause the innocent to suffer with any who may be justly accused." Are these brethren in this neck of the woods unaware that customs are changing? New times, new manners! General accusations and blanket indictments are the fashion of the day. They are now orthodox. There seems to be now thoroughly established by the authority of good usage the precedent of spreading broadcast vague and unsubstantiated charges of infidelity and Unitarianism, directed toward the denomination at large like bullets from a wide-bored shotgun, in the hope that some stray pellet may bring down some game. Only recently, in the vicinity of Newton Centre, the new pastor of Tremont Temple reiterated his familiar charges of infidelity directed toward Baptist teachers and schools unnamed, and charges of "Unitarianism" directed toward Baptist ministers, still unnamed, who, the speaker is reported to have said, "should go out of the denomination."

The Baptists of Newton Centre, old fashioned though they may be, are right. We do not believe in all the new fashions, merely because they are new—take "jazz" and bobbed hair, for example! We do not approve the methods of these "modernists" in ecclesiastical etiquette. We are like our brother quoted above in that we believe, in this respect at least, in sticking by "the ancient interpretations" and "the ancient landmarks." We believe that our friends in Newton Centre have done us a service in calling our attention to the fact that "the New Testament (in Matthew 18) provides the method by which charges may be brought against any Baptist church or institution or any member thereof, should serious differences of opinion arise." "We believe," say these Daniels come to judgment, "each individual must assume the full responsibility for any criticism which he may make of any person in the denomination or of any member of the faculties of our schools or of any policies of our accredited societies and boards," and "we urge our sister churches to withhold judgment as to all charges which are now being made until each side has had an opportunity to formally present its case." In spite of the split infinitive, we believe that too.

It is full time for the local church to reassert its prerogatives. Baptists cannot go forward together until we are willing to hold in fellowship all members of duly recognized Baptist Churches who are cooperating in the work of our denomination.

One Croker Goes, but the Tribe Lives On

Richard Croker, from 1886 to 1901 the political boss of New York City, died recently in Ireland where he has been inhabiting for some years a beautiful castle purchased from his "earnings." He left a fortune estimated at $3,000,000. Where did he get so much money? Probably he was a shrewd investor but where did the capital come from which laid the foundation of such a fortune? The answer is so easy we will not give it here.

American municipal government seems to be, as it was when "The American Commonwealth," was written the great failure of our American system. This particular boss is gone, but there remain Curley in Boston, Hyman in New York, Thompson and Lundin in Chicago, and a host of others the country over. Almost every city of any size has in it some man who is perfectly willing to play the part. These men know what they are after and play the game perfectly with their subordinates. "Good citizens," so called, are generally individualists and play the game with nobody except a few who think exactly as they do. They are thus divided and beaten. If there were less omniscience among decent people, there would be fewer political bosses, provided these good people were able also to develop the human contact with other men which the bosses show.

Our cities get just as good government as they deserve. The first reformation in civic things should be among Christian men and women. When they can get together and play the game, the rest will be easier. But the crooks do not believe that there can be any such getting together.

Applying the Baptist Principle

The Vatican which has now succeeded in having diplomatic representatives sent to almost every country in Europe and many in America would like to have such a representative at Washington. Other presidents have denied such a suggestion, and now President Harding, making practical application of the well-known Baptist principle of the separation of church and state, does the same. Here is what he says:

"The United States maintains diplomatic relations only with other governments exercising temporal authority over recognized nations, and there is no more apparent reason for sending a diplomatic representative to the seat of one great church establishment than to any other. Whatever our religious views may be, the government as such does not assume to maintain relations with religious organizations as such, and no reason is apparent why exceptions should be made to this long-maintained rule."

From such sound Americanism there should never be any departure. There is no valid reason why the United States should maintain such relations with one or many denominations.

No Time for God

Mr. James Douglas, writing some time ago in the London Daily Express deplored the fact that England was submerged beneath a flood of materialism and lust for pleasure. It has no longer, he said, any time for God. "There are, it is true, some churches which are not empty, and some which are full. But the empty church is the rule rather than the exception. So is the empty chapel. Never in my lifetime has religion ebbed so low. Never has the spiritual pulse of the nation beat so feebly. I set no value upon the rite of churchgoing as a sign and symbol of moral vitality. Even if all our churches and chapels were closed we might save our souls alive. But it is the soul of the nation that is empty. England has no time for God."

The mass of the people, Mr. Douglas thinks, are weary trying to have a good time. Their depression is unspeakable. And yet there are signs of reaction. The soul of man will not forever content itself with husks.

"The tidal wave of materialism has nearly reached its highest point. It has submerged conscience and drowned morality. The home has been swept away by the flood of immodesty in dress and manners. The family upon which society is based has foundered in the deluge of irreverence and indiscipline. But the foul waters will recede, the home will be built again, and the family will be restored to its old place in the spiritual life of the nation. There will be a revival of humility and reticence and restraint. England must find time for God. Statesmen will arise with power to inspire the nation with aims that are not base and with ideals that are not mean. The churches will breed great divines like Bunyan and Wesley, Dale and Booth, Manning and Newman. Poets like Wordsworth will stir the soul of England into penitence and peace. There will be organ voices in England summoning us to return to our ancient ways of simplicity and serenity. There will be a great slump in immorality. There will be a panic in the pig markets of sensual cynicism and grovelling cruelty. Our young men and our young women will see visions and dream dreams. England must find time for God."

American churches and people may or may not need such a picture presented to them. But here it is, substitute "America" for "England" and read the story once more.

Capitalizing Scandal

The Dearborn Independent, Henry Ford's weekly, has in a recent number an article on the way in which the Shuberts, vaudeville producers, "have capitalized the Stillman divorce case scandal by exhibiting in motion pictures Fred Beauvais, the alleged Indian guide-lover of Mrs. Stillman." The film is called "The Lonely Trail," and has interest only because of the fact that the Indian appears in it.

Motion picture houses as a whole had taken a stand against this film because of the censure they were sure would follow its presentation, and so would have nothing to do with it. From a statement of the secretary of the Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce, which numbers among its members the B. F. Keith interests, it appears that "none of our members will display the film." If it is promoted throughout the country it will remain for the Shuberts to do it.

Whether the public will welcome this exploitation of scandal remains to be seen. The mere recital of the facts should be enough to put all Christian people on their guard. It is time that the use of men and women in films for no other reason than that they appear in some well-known scandal or crime were rebuked.

Dreamers of Dreams and Their Fulfillment

The visions of our noble men from America who have labored in Japan are being fulfilled. Twelve students at Waseda awaiting baptism. Mabie Memorial filled to overflowing.

By JAMES H. FRANKLIN

TWELVE more students in Waseda University are awaiting baptism. What an extraordinary situation is this—a great private Japanese institution whose officials cordially invite Christian instruction for their students. This great university in Tokyo, Japan, enrolls 12,000 students and thus has the largest student enrolment in all Asia. Every Sunday the Brotherhood meets in one of the large rooms of Scott Hall, a splendid structure, whose lines blend appropriately with its Japanese environment. Dr. Kawaguchi, educated in America, who is professor in our theological seminary, is the pastor of the Brotherhood church in the university and has shown himself the man for the place. At the dedication of Scott Hall the Dean of the Waseda Middle School urged the Brotherhood to remember that, above everything else, Christ must be taught. Since then he has invited Missionary H. B. Benninghoff to start Bible-study groups in each of the thirty-five classes, whose total enrolment is over 1700.

The Alvah Hovey Dormitory is well under way and is to be finished in good time for use in the autumn. It, too, will be a splendid structure, and its lines will harmonize with those of Scott Hall. Provision is being made for L. G. Crocker and H. G. Spencer, the two men who were appointed by the board last year for service at Waseda, with their salaries paid by the university, to live in the dormitory with the students. This is a fine arrangement and will permit close fellowship with the carefully selected large group of applicants. From the men who found a Christian home in the dormitory during their student days at Waseda, five are already members of the faculty of the university; one is treasurer of the university (a very important post with managerial functions) and still another is secretary to the president of the school. When Dr. Thomas S. Barbour saw the opportunity at Waseda University in 1908 and told Dr. Benninghoff to enter the open door, even if the foreign secretary himself must meet the initial cost of the venture, he laid foundations for a work of far-reaching value. It is appropriate that his picture as well as those of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Scott should be hung in the assembly room, which seats about 300 and is used for the larger meetings.

How I wished that American Baptists might have climbed with us the high hill in Yokohama! On the ten-acre site of the Mabie Memorial School the principal portions of the main building are already finished and crowded with boys. Instead of the small inferior wooden structure, the home of the school in Tokyo until 1917, a splendid concrete building stands more than half finished. When money becomes available for the permanent assembly hall, for the gymnasiums on the ground floor, the tower and the improvement of the grounds, we shall have a commanding structure. About 100 students in all comprised the classes in the school in Tokyo, of which this is the successor; 460 are enrolled here, and the next class will bring the total to about 600. The day after I arrived a new class of 130 was admitted and 210 were of necessity turned away because there was no room for them. I wish you could have seen the class, with every boy's parents or guardian present in the assembly hall. With very few exceptions, the boys and their parents heard the New Testament read and prayer offered in the name of Christ for the first time in their lives. These are the sons of fairly well-to-do business people in a great city in modern Japan. What an opportunity! When I went into one of the large rooms this morning I saw over two hundred of the boys attending the voluntary chapel service, and over the platform which they faced was Hoffman's famous and beautiful picture of Christ as a lad in the temple with the doctors. These boys will find inspiration as they face toward that picture day by day. A few minutes later I spoke to the entire school trying to point the students to Christ.

Principal Sakata and Dean Takata are doing splendidly. The faculty includes six graduates of the Imperial University. Usually the department of education will not recognize a private school until it has graduated a class, but the very day I reached Yokohama the faculty was delighted that two full years before the customary time, the department of education has forwarded the coveted certificate.

Already this development of a worthy high school is improving the morale of Japanese Baptists, as I could surmise from the spirit at a meeting of Japanese pastors, educators and other workers from Tokyo and Yokohama, held in the chapel of the Mabie Memorial School the day after I landed. Dr. Chiba, the reliable and very able president of the seminary, who studied at Rochester twenty years ago, was there, and Takahashi San who was at Newton and Louisville, and Principal Sakata, and a great many of the older men. There were present as well four of the young men who have studied in our American schools in recent years. These young men who have secured special training in America will help to hasten the new and larger day in Japan.

As I write these lines I am sitting in Frank Briggs' office chair. The last letter he ever wrote us was to express his joy that at last we had bought a fine site for a school needed in Yokohama. Across the room is J. L. Dearing's desk, presented to the school by Mrs. Dearing. Dr. Dearing dreamed of a great Christian high school in Yokohama, and his dream is coming true. Henry C. Mabie dreamed of Northern Baptists erecting institutions of higher learning in the Orient. His dreams are beginning to come true and his name is an inspiration to this school. Thomas S. Barbour was the first representative of our board to see the opportunity offered us at Waseda University. His picture hangs in Scott Hall close to those of the donor and the one whose name is given to the building. Who knows? Perhaps they find satisfaction as they see their dreams come true. To us may grace be given to follow in their train! Would to God the denomination at home could lift up its eyes to the fields that are white unto the harvest.

If I had had but that one day in Japan it would have been worth the voyage across the Pacific. Some of the visions of our noble men from America are being fulfilled.

The English Meetings

Wherein the English Baptist Anniversaries are like and unlike our American meetings.

By W. T. WHITLEY

BAPTIST anniversaries in England now spread over a fortnight, and in the second week at least they are sometimes three of four deep. This year they were held at Leicester, where Baptists have worshiped for at least 271 years and have had such leaders as Carey, Hall, Mursell, Greenbough, Thew. The Historical Society arranged a fifty-mile motor excursion to the three hamlets where the three great branches of the Baptist family have long been represented, the Generals or Free-Willers, the Particulars or Regulars, the New Connexion. Two hundred booked for this promptly before the lists were closed and made their pilgrimage also to the home of John Trotter of America and his brother Thomas, of Nova Scotia.

Program on the Congo

The Missionary Society had its romances from all parts. A wave of prophetic enthusiasm had engulfed some of the churches on the Congo, but the old landmarks are re-appearing and sanity is being restored. You in America know something of the emotional nature of the Negro and the dangers that beset Ethiopianism, and perhaps can better appreciate the risk and the deliverance than can the more stolid Englishman. The society rejoiced, however, in the news that never had so many converts been won in any year of work; and the story of financial shortage did not much depress, even when coupled with the recent death of the treasurer.

The most striking meeting was to take leave of about fifty workers abroad, from veterans of thirty years' service as pastors and doctors, to those just girding on their armor for the first time; among these was a lady from the Dutch Baptist Union.

The children had a fine day at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, where Carey Bonner conducted a cantata, singing of the progress of the gospel on the Congo, introducing a native boat song and a congregational hymn. This is the kind of meeting that wins the young to take an interest in the foreign work; and is well backed by excellent missionary books written for children. At another meeting it was told how the head hunters of the Lushai hills in India had been bravely approached, in the first instance by two New Zealanders; one of them recounted the progress, saying that today London seemed to him a pagan city in comparison with these hills, where every third person is a real Christian, where surgeons, schoolmasters, authors, editors, degreemen, are now evidencing the power of the gospel.

Rapid Increase in China

The story of China was peculiarly interesting. Politically this great kingdom has been rent asunder, but one of the most efficient rulers is a Christian general, in one of the provinces evangelized by the English Baptists. His army is largely Christian and its influence is most helpful. And this is but one sign of the power of the gospel, which is also shown in the rapid increase of Christian churches, sixfold the speed of the increase of population; in Chinese jurists commanding the respect of Europe, in a Chinese presiding at a League of Nations conference.

The note of joy and of hope was all through these missionary meetings, which do so much to widen our horizon and open our eyes to the magnitude of God's work. Kindred in spirit is the Colonial Society, though this works entirely within the British Empire. Large parts of the self-governing dominions both sustain their own Baptist work and send to other parts. But the thin populations of Western Canada, West Australia, Queensland, need supplies of ministers; South Africa has peculiar problems complicated from the white man being outnumbered tenfold by the aborigines; islets like St. Helena ask for advice and preachers. Such appeals are met by a society that works from London.

Thirty Million Hungry

The work in Europe which you are so magnificently supporting was told of by Dr. Rushbrooke. Thirty million people are in famine areas, which are spreading; there is inadequate sowing and the harvest will not be enough to support the survivors from this year. But Hoyt E. Parker, of your Southern Convention, is ready to distribute whatever you and others can send. The general breakdown is evident when a letter took thirty-four days to travel from Odessa to Riga. Yet it is possible to save lives, in the Crimea, the Caucasus and wherever grain can be unloaded. Your generosity is going to make the lot of Russian Baptists the happier when the rulers see "how these Christians love one another," so that religion once again is seen to be not a thing of words, but actual giving of the things needful to the body.

Our Baptist Union exercises functions unknown in America on any great scale. The great sums raised this century to sustain the ministry and to augment annuities to aged or sick pastors, have focused attention on the relationship of the churches to the ministers. Methods are being explored of coordinating the colleges, encouraging their alumni to continue study on lines of their own choice for at least three probationary years. Part of a scheme was approved by a vote of about 1,700 to one. Another part was postponed for a year as there was not time to convince all of its value.

Shortage of Ministers

There is a general shrinkage of men offering for work. One Anglican bishop lately said that in his diocese only eleven men had been ordained in four years. While Baptists are not quite so bad, it was shown that numbers are falling off and the quality is falling off even more rapidly. The need of local preachers was never so great and a scheme for finding and training these is being devised. It proves that a lady has organized a tutorial system which is preparing 300 for the foreign field; and some modification of this may suit the home field also.

School affairs are attended to, and demonstrations attracted keen workers from distant parts. But the English conception of a Sunday school differs widely from the American; it would take a long letter to explain the difference and to ask whether each system really suits its own country.

The officers of the Union appear to be far more influential than the officers of your Convention. The treasurer was re-elected as usual; an honorary legal adviser is coming to be recognized as a valuable addition, able to counsel the Union and the churches in difficult situations. A year ago Dr. Shakespeare notified that the state of his health obliged him to lessen his service; but his medical advisers permit him to continue as secretary to the Union; the denomination rejoiced and chose him for a twenty-fifth year. When he began, the Union work was done in two hired rooms; today it owns a handsome block where all the home work of Baptists centers—taxing the energies of a large staff which incidentally has the care of $3,000,000 of investments and the gathering of large annual subscriptions.

The Presidents

The out-going president, Carlile of Folkestone, is a fine example of an evangelical pastor, open to recognize new needs; his year of office has endeared him to men all over the kingdom. He is followed by John Chown, son of one minister, father of another, who has always been zealous in London, especially with hymnals and with missions: his organization of a great United Fund brought him rapidly to the knowledge of the country which at once called him to the highest post and is going to learn that he is a man of prayer as well as of business. He will be upheld by W. E. Blomfield, once pastor in a great city, latterly head of a seminary, which has renewed its youth and increased its wealth under his leadership. In a land where a D.D. is not flung at the head of any man, his own university of St. Andrews is just honoring itself and him with this degree.

It would be possible to say much of public questions, though the only problem that received serious attention is that of temperance. But there are three outstanding features that ought to be emphasized—the position taken by women, laymen, young ministers.

The Women's League is another of Dr. Shakespeare's creations. It has of course wives and daughters of the manse, but not these alone. They look at things to which the mere man is indifferent, plan and execute. They foster a women's college and a girls' hotel in London, with a restaurant; a Dane and an Estonian have come to profit. To Russia they have sent much clothing.

The roll of prominent laymen who have joined the church triumphant during the year is both long and weighty; but Leicester showed that more laymen are coming to the front and are ready to strike out new lines. Even more conspicuous were the many young ministers of the front rank.

Greetings Reciprocated

The greeting of your Convention was acknowledged and reciprocated. Mention was made of the conference due in August for working out the program at Stockholm next year. Such gatherings enable us to understand one another by actual contact and to form friendships that grow year after year.

In Step

By CORA HARDY JARRETT

SOMEONE met a soldier singing
On a lonely way.
High and clear the notes were ringing,
For the song was gay.
Hearers marveled (says the story)
At its gallant tone,
For he sang of love and glory,
Marching all alone.
"Friend," they said, "the world grows older
Every day and night,
And the burden on your shoulder
Seemeth far from light;
Yet your step is light and ringing,
Marching all alone,
And you march to martial singing,
No one's but your own."

"Nay," he answered, "there are swinging
Footsteps at my side;
Every wind a song is bringing,
Swinging to our stride.
Comrades keep in step together
Half the world apart;
What's a thousand miles of weather
To the singing heart?"

So (they say) as eve grew older
Passed he from their sight,
With the burden on his shoulder
Toward the sunset light,
Singing passed into the boundless
Silence of the sinking day,
Keeping step with footsteps soundless,
Half a world away.

Bishop Lawrence Speaks on Prohibition

Newspaper reports of the Bishop's speech to the Episcopal diocesan convention at Boston on May 5 made him appear hostile to the prohibition amendment. Here is the speech in full. It tells another story. A call to all loyal citizens to support the law.

His Own "Copy"

EVER since the prohibition constitutional amendment was passed, its enforcement has been accompanied by a bitterness of discussion and in some localities a reaction which augurs unhappiness and dissension in our social and national life.

"One cannot wonder at this. Hundreds of thousands of working men who found solace and comradeship after the day's work in what they felt to be their innocent glass of beer had it snatched from them, and thousands on thousands of reputable citizens found their personal liberties and domestic habits broken in upon. "Were it not that there is so much at stake in happiness and national welfare, I should not add a word to the discussion. Have we not, however, reached a stage when we may consider the subject with less feeling or passion?"

Citizen Has Right to Protest

"In the first place, is it not time that we recognize the right of any citizen who did not and does not believe in constitutional prohibition to say so, and in public if he wants to? Surely it is competent for any citizen to speak, work, and do everything consistent with the law and to have a law amended or rescinded.

"Prohibition of drink does not involve the prohibition of the liberty of expressing one's opinion. The public expression of such opinion may be thought by some to be a waste of good voice material or a loss of time, but one of the corner stones of American liberty is the right to talk, provided it is not such seditious talk as to lead to seditious action.

Should Support Law

"Jealousy for the practical integrity of the constitution was what led many citizens to oppose this amendment. The fact is, however, that the constitutional amendment stands; and it has been carried through by the same constitutional steps as preserve our liberties. Every loyal citizen is bound to stand by it; and in my judgment every loyal citizen is bound to support such state laws as will insure its enforcement.

"Beyond this plain duty as citizens, what reasons have we to be confident that this great experiment will succeed, and that the whole of the American people will in time agree that the prohibition of intoxicating drink is, with all its limitations of personal liberty, worth while?"

Liquor's Effect on Efficiency

"First, and most obviously, the competition in industry and of industrial nations with other industrial nations is going to be very keen, and the peoples which waste most in brains, physical strength, and character, will go to the wall first. Every employer of labor knows that the men who drink are in the long run less efficient than those who do not drink.

"Experience in the army and navy proves it in endurance and fighting tests. The directors of railroads, mines and factories, the officers of banks and business enterprises know this.

"How then are those directors and officers who drink cocktails or whisky and White Rock going to answer the question of the men in their employ, 'Why is not that which is bad for our efficiency just as bad for your efficiency?' 'Are your brains made of different stuff from ours?'"

Business Is Business

"*B*USINESS is Business," the Little Man said,

"A battle where 'everything goes,'
Where the only gospel is 'get ahead,'
And never spare friends or foes,
'Stay or be slain,' is the slogan cold,
You must struggle and slash and tear,

For Business is Business, a fight for gold,

Where all that you do is fair!"

"Business is Business," the Big Man said,

"A battle to make of earth
A place to yield us more wine and bread

More pleasure and joy and mirth;
There are still some bandits and buccaneers

Who are jungle-bred beasts of trade,

But their number dwindles with passing years

And dead is the code they made!"

"Business is Business," the Big Man said,

"But it's something that's more,
far more;

For it makes sweet gardens of deserts dead,

And cities it built now roar
Where once the deer and gray wolf ran

From the pioneer's swift advance;
Business is Magic that toils for man
Business is True Romance."

"And those who make it a ruthless fight

Have only themselves to blame
If they feel no whit of the keen delight

In playing the Bigger Game,
The game that calls on the heart and head,

The best of man's strength and nerve;

"Business is Business," the Big Man said,

"And that Business is to serve!"

—BERTON BRALEY.

"Have not we who work for the corporation for which you work as much right to expect of you clear heads, alertness, and the capacity to meet the strain of responsibility as you have of us?"

"The plain people who have invested their earnings in the corporation are also asking these questions, and they have got to be answered.

Lessons of Experience

"This principle of industrial efficiency is of course based upon laws or habits of nations revealed to us in the last fifty years by science. Men who drank two generations ago felt stimulated, and although they had their reactions and headaches, they assumed that they were better workers and fighters.

"They did not know. Every intelligent man today knows, or may know that for even moderate drinkers the curve, be it ever so slight, is never upwards, always downwards. And further, the reactions affect the judgment, the intellectual perspective and the power to discriminate between right and wrong, the very foundation of character.

Why England Watches Us

"We in these days believe in the inerrancy of facts which science, when it has tested them out, brings us; and we know that these facts bring results as sure as fate. The nation which completely stops drinking intoxicating liquors has thrown off one of the heaviest weights in the race of industrial leadership.

"The statesmen of England are watching our experiment with keen interest; for if the experiment of prohibition fails they will breathe more easily; England with her awful drink wastage may have a chance to lead, but if we stop drinking England has got to reform or something will happen.

"While this or that group of citizens may feel that they could have handled the matter better with local option, state prohibition, outlawing the saloon, light wines and beer, these citizens did not have the conviction or enthusiasm to put up a fight for them. They had their chance in license days, but did not take it; and the awful waste of life and money with the political demoralization continued.

No Question as to Legality

"Then millions of people over the country determined that the wastage must be stopped. They tackled the subject with deep conviction and created a public sentiment which resulted in the constitutional amendment. And whether you or I or any other citizen likes it or not, it is the plain duty of every citizen of this country to respect and obey the law.

"He who is an anarchist opens the door to anarchy at any and every point; and men and women who own property have more to fear from lawlessness than those who do not. Citizens who are law abiding and public spirited in every way except this will do well to consider what influence their example in law breaking has upon their sons and the younger generation.

Quotes Bar Association

"I cannot forbear quoting the warning of the judicial section of the American Bar Association, speaking for all the judges to the American people:

"Reverence for law and enforcement of law depends mainly upon the ideals and customs of those who occupy the vantage ground of life in business and society. The people of the United States, by solemn constitutional and statutory enactment, have undertaken to suppress the age long evil of the liquor traffic. When, for the gratification of their appetites, or the promotion of their interests, lawyers, bankers, great merchants and manufacturers, and social leaders, both men and women, disobey and scoff at this law, or any other law, they are aiding the cause of anarchy and promoting mob violence, robbery and homicide; they are sowing dragons' teeth, and they need not be surprised when they find that no judicial or police authority can save our country or humanity from reaping the harvest.'

Facts That Many Ignore

"Speaking wholly apart from the legal and patriotic point of view, the most disappointing feature to me in this matter is the apparent want of Christian consideration shown by men and women who have in other respects Christian standards, or are also members of the church.

"The practical universal testimony of the men and women who touch most closely thousands on thousands of people whose conditions tempt them to the abuse of intoxicating drinks is that there is an immense improvement all along the line. Here and there there may be a local or temporary reaction; but the multitude of wives and husbands, too, and children that are the happier and healthier for prohibition, the decrease of numbers of arrests for drunkenness, of inmates of jails and poorhouses, the gratitude that goes up from thousands of homes of the people of moderate means and the well-to-do that one or another member of the family has stopped drinking and gone to work, is enough, one would think, to touch the heart of any one.

Gives Duty of Church Members

"I need not speak of the relief from taxation in the support of public institutions—a taxation which will steadily decrease, for with the enforcement of prohibition, there will be fewer feeble-minded, fewer insane, fewer cripples, fewer congenitally diseased, fewer with abnormal habits, fewer with criminal tendencies, and this taxation, like all taxes, falls in the end not upon the well-to-do but upon the whole people, especially the wage earners.

"How can any Christian man or woman, any one with consideration for others, continue an indulgence which he may even think harmless, when by his abstinence he may help others? And even if he thinks it makes no difference, how can he be happy in taking that chance? Is his pleasure or even his sense of liberty worth the risk?

"However, with the fact settled that constitutional prohibition is here, all loyal citizens will give it support. And if we do our part, we may be confident that education in health and efficiency, of economics and industrial leadership will in time bring universal acquiescence."

A Hopeful Japanese Movement

By SIDNEY L. GULICK

A UNIQUE campaign by Japanese for Americanizing Japanese in Hawaii is being directed by Rev. T. Okumura and his son—two remarkable men.

The father has been a Christian pastor in Honolulu for thirty years, has built up a strong church and has established a highly successful Christian school for boys. Two years ago he went to Japan to explain to Japanese leaders the underlying causes, so far as Japanese are concerned, of the anti-Japanese movement in America. His statement of those causes was extraordinarily frank. The list of leaders whose support he secured shows that he reached the most influential men in Japan, such as Viscount Shibusawa, Dr. Takuma Dan, Dr. I. Nitobe, Viscount Kaneko, Dr. J. Soyeda, Admiral Baron Uriu, Mr. S. Asano and a score of others.

The method of the campaign in Hawaii is unique—personal and individual, reaching "key men" rather than using public mass meetings or other "wholesale" methods. All the principal plantations have been visited and 1,452 individual Japanese have given their "pledge" to stand for the American ideals and interests.

Unassimilable

"When we look at the conditions among Japanese in Hawaii," Mr. Okumura reports, "we cannot help but note certain things which cause us to be disliked by American people." After enumerating several causes of irritation under the headings "Living Conditions," "Religious Conditions," "Japanese Children Born in Hawaii," and "Evasions of Law," the report goes on:

"Without eradicating these sources of irritation, Japanese can not hope to escape from the odium that they are 'unassimilable and undesirable people.' Whenever any question like California's arises, it is natural for us to expect the government of the two countries to arrive at a solution through diplomatic channels. We actually want to have the vital problem solved once and forever. But the problem relating to Japanese will arise again and again. Nothing can prevent its recurrence unless the Japanese, particularly in Hawaii, become wide-awake and remove those causes of anti-Japanese sentiment.

If this is done, the Japanese question will be settled forever."

In talking to the Japanese on the plantations Mr. Okumura emphasized two ideas: "(a) Forget the idea 'Japanese' and always think and act from the point of view of the American people, as long as you live under the protection of America and enjoy many privileges and blessings. (b) Inasmuch as your children were born in Hawaii, and expect to live here permanently and work shoulder to shoulder with the American people, you should educate and build them up into good and loyal American citizens.

"In our speeches to the Hawaiian-born Japanese on the plantations we have emphasized their opportunities for service and their duties to the plantations and Hawaii."

In describing his "hopes" for the full

The Swords Disappear

By Jesse R. Wilson

A MAN high up in the diplomatic circles of Japan, high up enough to be counted among the special advisers of the imperial family and to be one of the small party that went with the Crown Prince on his recent visit to England, spoke to a group of foreigners recently on the results of the Washington Conference. Among other things he said that when he was in the imperial university some twenty years ago he hardly dared to think of peace and disarmament. In fact he thought it was a crime to consider these things seriously. But now he not only thinks but speaks of them freely and with hope of their realization. He said that fifty years ago the mark of a Samurai was two swords buckled to his sides. But now, he said, if I had come to this place tonight wearing two swords you would have laughed at me. The two swords have been laughed out of court. "Some day in the near future," he continued, "I believe the big swords of army and navy will also be laughed out of court." It is not without interest and significance to know that this man is a Christian and has been in touch with one of the leading missionaries of Japan ever since his middle school days.

solution of the Hawaiian-Japanese problem Mr. Okumura contrasts the Japanese of today with those who were coming from Japan a generation ago.

"Already a radical change is taking place among the Japanese today. The Japanese on plantations and in the different towns today are different from those of early immigrant days. The taste of the drifter has disappeared and the majority of Japanese have come to make Hawaii their permanent home. Instead of sending the bulk of their earnings to Japan they are investing their money in the island industries and have come to see that they must assimilate American ideas and ideals, American customs and manners, if they are to live here and work side by side with the American people. They have clearly displayed their spirit of cooperation with the American people, particularly during the war and in the various welfare fund drives. In our tours of different islands, we were profoundly impressed by the Japanese sincerely thinking of the general welfare of Hawaii. This is surely a remarkable change and progress for the immigrants with only thirty or forty years' experience.

A Badge of Honor

"The unconscious revolution which the children born in these islands are undergoing is far more remarkable. They speak the English language more freely and fluently than Japanese. They are receiving from public schools far greater influences than from their homes or Japanese language schools. Brought up in the Christian atmosphere, they have an innate consciousness of God. It is a super-man's job for any Buddhist priest to instill into their minds the Buddhist teachings. Their ideal, their interest, their tastes, their hopes and their ambition are totally different from those of young men of Japan. 'That far country' of their fathers is a foreign country to them. Their ideals and interest are all bound up only with America. American citizenship is to them a badge of honor and distinction. It is no wonder that Baron Goto was moved to say: 'These boys and girls are Americans in all but their physical appearance.'"

What Home Missions Have Done for Porto Rico

Dense population and absence of fuel a problem. Products are luxuries. Staples must be imported.

By C. S. DETWEILER

FOUR days out from New York by the best boats the traveler reaches Porto Rico, the easternmost and the smallest island of the Greater Antilles, which comprises Cuba, Santo Domingo, Jamaica and Porto Rico. The island is a parallelogram one hundred miles long and about thirty-six wide, comprising 3,600 square miles. The population is 1,300,000, giving us a density of 377 to the square mile. As the average density of population in the United States is thirty-four to the square mile one can easily understand that Porto Rico is frequently referred to as the most densely populated part of the United States. If one hears that Massachusetts is more densely populated, one must take into account the large cities and industrial centers of that state. Porto Rico is unique in that it has a dense rural population and no large cities. Ninety-two out of every hundred live by agriculture.

Some Worthwhile Progress

When Spain ceded this island to the United States in the fall of 1898 there was not a single school building belonging to the state. All school rooms were rented and only 21,000 children were attending school, out of a population of school age amounting to 322,000. Now after twenty-one years there are 185,000 children in the public schools, out of a total population of school age of 450,000. Then there were 325 teachers. Now there are 3,000 teachers. Under the Spanish regime there was but one road built connecting the north and south coasts and very few branch roads. Under American occupation the island is crossed in different places by splendidly constructed roads with concrete bridges spanning the rivers and every town on the island may now be reached over a good road. Since 1917 all Porto Ricans are citizens of the United States, enjoying the same rights as American born citizens. The island itself is governed under a territorial form of government and only a few of the administrative positions are filled by presidential appointment. English is taught in the public schools as a special study up to the fourth grade. From the fifth grade onward instruction is given in all branches in the English language, so that by the time the pupil reaches the high school he has a free use of it. The study of Spanish grammar and literature is continued through all the grades. Thus we are developing a bi-lingual people but teaching them American traditions, folk songs, and patriotism.

Problems to be Met

The greatest problem grows out of the dense population and the absence of fuel in Porto Rico cheap enough for industrial purposes. There is neither coal nor oil on the island. This is very unfortunate because Porto Rico needs above everything else manufacturing industries for the employment of its people. At the present time practically the only industry is that of cigar making. For the most part the people must seek employment on the great estates, raising sugar-cane, coffee and tobacco. The fact that Porto Rico is an island given over entirely to agriculture would not have serious import were the land in the possession of the people. But according to careful investigations two-thirds of the people do not own their own homes, to say nothing of any land. The result is that there is only seasonal employment for the majority of the people. The times when crops are harvested are the times when men find work. From the first of June to the first of December is the "dead season," when there is great suffering among the poor because of unemployment.

Someone has suggested that were a banquet to be given to the capitalists and leaders on the island it would be very fitting to put before them on the table nothing but some sugar to eat, some coffee to drink and some tobacco to smoke. This is the extent of what capital does for the development of Porto Rico. These three chief articles that form the bulk of Porto Rico's products, are, for the most part, luxuries and exports. Such common articles of diet as rice, beans, potatoes and onions have to be imported and this is an important factor in the high cost of living.

Moral conditions are the same as in other parts of Latin America, with this favorable exception—that the influence of the public schools under American supervision and the example of most of the American government officials has told in recent years as a powerful factor in raising moral standards. Concubinage has been as common here as elsewhere in the past, but as the island has been more thoroughly covered by Protestant missions than any other part of Latin America the ministry of our pastors has contributed materially to a reduction of the number of cases. It was also due to the efforts of Protestant pastors that the people were educated to understand the evils of alcoholism to such an extent that Porto Rico approved of prohibition by a decisive popular majority two years before it was achieved by the nation.

Shall We Send the Gospel To Them?

A letter from Mrs. Elizabeth W. Moody, one of our missionaries in Sona Bata, Congo Belge, Africa, gives a touching picture of the new hunger of the people there for Christ. She says:

"A word picture can never describe the revival at Sona Bata. You would have to be here the first Sunday in the month and see from 1000 to 1500 people on our lawn to get an idea of it. And this is not all. At twenty-four other centers where communion is held, hundreds attend. And in parts of our district, where there are no church members but the teacher and his family, from 500 to 600 are attending Sunday and evening services, being taught and waiting for the missionaries to go to examine them for baptism.

"With this joy and blessing came added work. So you can imagine how grateful we are that Mr. and Mrs. Hill can be with us a few months. With school, girls, medical and woman's work, it is impossible to do justice to it all. Mrs. Hill takes the morning school and we divide the afternoon classes and the Sunday school work.

"Old men and women who have not wanted to hear the gospel story, and held on to their old superstitious ways, come. The spirit of the Lord is touching their hearts, and they are seeking the new way.

"We sold more books in the last six months than in three years before, and we cannot supply the demands for books.

"Christmas was a day long to be remembered. Over 300 were baptized and twenty-five couples married. The new members had to receive the hand of fellowship out on the lawn. There was no standing room in the chapel. We had a meeting in the school which holds about 300 and a crowd outside.

"These people who forty years ago had never heard of the Christ child, came with song on their lips and love in their hearts and praises for their newly found Savior. Nothing but the transforming power of the spirit of the Lord could bring them out of such heathen darkness into this marvelous light."

Missionary Comity Successful

The island has been divided into different spheres for each of the Protestant denominations, the Presbyterians on the west, the Congregationalists on the east, and Baptists and Methodists in the center. The United Brethren and the Christians have smaller fields on the south coast near Ponce; while the Disciples and Christians and Missionary Alliance are on the north coast near San Juan. With the exception of the four or five larger cities there is but one Protestant church in each of the many towns on the island. Because the island is small and the different denominations are brought into close contact, there has developed a high tone of Christian fellowship and cooperation. All of the evangelical denominations unite in a common paper published every two weeks and having the largest circulation of any paper, secular or religious, on the island.

Opposite the campus of the insular university in Rio Piedras is the Grace Conaway Institute founded by the Baptists for the training of Christian workers, but now used as a home of the Evangelical Seminary in which six denominations cooperate in the training of their pastors. The nearness to the university makes it possible to send the students there for some of their classes, and some of the men who are more advanced will receive their Bachelor's degree from the University at the same time that they graduate from the Seminary. Thus by combining in this effort for ministerial training the different missions have been enabled to raise the scholastic standards and to do better work. A faculty of three missionaries, one Baptist, one Presbyterian and one Methodist, gives the Biblical and theological instruction, each denomination reserving the privilege of giving separate instruction to its own men in any subject of strictly denominational interest.

Outstanding evangelical institutions are the Presbyterian Hospital in San Juan, which last year treated more than thirty-eight thousand patients in their clinics; the Ryer Memorial Hospital maintained by the Congregationalists at Humacao; the Polytechnic Institute at San German, under the Presbyterian Board, where two hundred young people are receiving at the same time an industrial and academic education; and the Robinson Home for Girls maintained by the Methodists in San Juan. Missionaries representing the Woman's Boards of Home Missions are conducting in different centers day-nurseries, kindergartens, and industrial classes. In San Juan the Baptists have recently constructed a beautiful building which is adapted to serve both as a house of worship and a community center in a crowded section of the city.

After twenty years of missionary effort the Protestant churches report 12,000 members in full communion, and a Sunday school enrolment of 17,000. Their influence is out of all proportion to their number. Many public school teachers are active members of Protestant churches; and the present Commissioner of Education, the first native-born Porto Rican to hold the office, is a Presbyterian. One of the Justices of the Supreme Court teaches a Bible class in the Y. M. C. A. and is a welcome speaker in the churches or in the annual Summer Christian Workers' Institute.

Porto Rico for Christ

At the present time the churches are engaged in a united movement called "Porto Rico for Christ," in which the evangelical press, owned by all the denominations, plays a large part. In the month of November a special effort was made to promote family worship, and tracts on Christian family life and on prayer were circulated. In December special prayer meetings were held and personal workers' classes organized. In January, February and March simultaneous evangelistic campaigns were promoted in all the churches. In April the campaign was directed toward building up the Sunday schools and Young People's Societies. In May stewardship will be stressed; and in June Christian literature, including a drive for subscribers to the evangelical paper of the island. Great enthusiasm has been awakened over this campaign, and reports indicate that already there is evident a quickening of the life of the churches.

Because Porto Rico is a small island and conferences between leaders are easily arranged, it has been possible to secure efficient cooperation on the part of all the evangelical forces and to exhibit a new territory under our flag where Christianization by church agencies has kept pace with Americanization by government agencies.

A Church With a Program

By HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY

RECENTLY at a big mass meeting in Pittsburgh, I spoke of the responsibility of the pastor for promoting the higher education of his young people and showed how many churches which had 300 or 400 members had not more than one or two young men or women in college. At the close of the service Rev. E. A. Hanna, pastor of the Homewood Baptist Church, came up to me and modestly told what had been accomplished in that church in the way of Christian education in the last twelve years. When he came to the Homewood Church of Pittsburgh, things were at a low ebb. There would be not more than ten at the mid-week service, thirty-five in the Sunday evening congregation, and ninety members of the Bible school. Moreover, the church had a mortgage of $2500, upon which the association was paying the interest, and the church was opposed to giving money to missions. There were only two young people in high school, and no one was thinking of college or of a life-enlistment for work other than that in which he could make a living.

Today this church has a property worth $90,000, with an indebtedness of only $1800 upon it. The missionary spirit has increased until it has subscribed more than $12,000 to the New World Movement, and has paid its pledge in full to date. The steady, persistent work of twelve years in the furtherance of higher education has fruited, as is shown by the record of this present year. There are thirty-seven of the young people of the church in high school, and nine in college. One is preparing to be an agricultural missionary, and two of the high-school students have declared their purpose to enter missionary service.

When I asked the pastor what the secret was, he said, "It has been persistent and steady missionary education. We have made a thorough study of the subject of educational missions, and the group studying this has presented its findings at the mid-week services. We have done the same with respect to industrial and medical missions. The women have given their presentation of the study book at the Wednesday evening services, and the World Wide Guild has done the same."

This record shows what can be done with a church that is below the average in spiritual activity, by the steady educational pushing of an alert pastor. The church has a definite program every year, and works steadily toward the fulfilling of that program.

A Barber of Cathay

By F. C. WILCOX

"DO YOU want to continue in school even if your uncle refuses longer to provide the necessary funds?"

"Yes, teacher," rather humbly, but with a fine light in his eyes, "I cannot serve God with the mind of a dullard."

Fatherless, motherless, and now at this new juncture, helpless, apparently, this Chinese school boy stood before me giving pathetic expression to an ancient racial passion for learning. In my experience as principal of a mission high school for boys I was familiar with similar aspirations, set off all too sharply by such hopeless backgrounds. So I proceeded wearily in my task of reducing his situation to the absurd in his most reluctant opinion.

"Now that your uncle says that his new wife holds the family purse you are entirely dependent on yourself for all your needs. Other students who receive aid somehow find the money for clothes and books. But you—don't you see, Da-Fu, that your case is beyond . . ."

I had no courage further to make the boy run the gauntlet of his own cruel misfortunes. Head downcast, an occasional shifting of the feet, tears in his heart if not in his eyes—I had seen the picture before and the subject of it too often had passed out to an easy oblivion.

But days later he came back.

"Teacher, I have a plan. It will help, perhaps, if you approve."

Then he explained that prior to my period of service in that school, during a prolonged period of revolutionary disturbances, it became necessary for the school to lock its gates, hoist the American flag over the gate for protection, and shut itself in from the turmoil without. Work of all kinds was assigned to the students. To Da-Fu was given the task of cutting the other students' hair. And this was the only skill he possessed.

"But, . . ." he halted, "I am ashamed to do this. You know, teacher, how our past is always with us, that we who are students are supposed not to work with our hands. And barbering—what will they think of me! Do you not know that the scholars of our ancient Cathay expressed their contempt for barbers, who serve not the minds, but only the persons of others, by excluding from the government literary examinations any boy whose ancestors for four generations had a barber among them? I am so ashamed to try."

Was not this just the situation which an American could understand? Of course there was no dishonor in work of whatever sort. Was not Jesus himself a carpenter? I would help him get the necessary tools to start at once, would even solicit business for him from the Americans in the city.

The boy set himself up in business, growing both in wisdom and in skill, joyful in the knowledge that he was debtor to no man.

Came the month of graduation and with it a visit from the president of Shanghai College. And also Da-Fu.

"Teacher, will you speak to the president for me? I want to go on to college. But, please, may I not do more honorable work in college? Here all these students are my friends, but there all will be strangers and they will belittle me."

But his plea was of no avail. Barbering his way through college was the only alternative.

Following in the footsteps of another Boy, but with no father or mother to accompany him, Da-Fu at the appointed season went up to the great city to sit at the feet of scholars and learn of life.

With what consciousness of the meanness of his only opportunity for self-support he took up his task in a new and strange environment we shall never know. But as he approaches his junior year in college we find that he has glorified his degraded task. He is now an employer of barbers, working with and directing men who possess only a fraction of the intellectual equipment and training that he has. These men, conscious, yet careless, of the ancient social disapproval cursing the work of the barber, are both amused and astonished at this scholar serving the persons of others for pay.

But I know that, like a sheet-anchor to windward, to keep him steady and strong in the perilous task of setting up new standards of dignity for men of letters is his strong determination that when God calls him to his life work he shall find in him no dullard but a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

The Future of the Board of Promotion.

A few constructive suggestions from a well-known New York layman.

By JAMES C. COLGATE

THE writer has been looking for some constructive suggestions for the June Convention. He has heard much of mistakes which have been made and of things which should not be done but he has looked in vain for constructive ideas. It would seem as if those holding positions of responsibility have been so battered by criticisms they feel discredited and therefore not in a position to suggest. Those who have been the severest critics offer no remedy. On all sides there is a spirit of apprehension and fear. Having waited in vain for others to suggest, the writer ventures a thought or two in the absence of any better.

Probably all will agree that some kind of organization is better than none, that it is wiser to retain our present machine, even if some of the cylinders miss fire, than to destroy it before we have something better. The writer is not convinced that our present organization is inherently bad. In fact he is willing—this requires real courage too—to say that in his judgment it is really good, and needs only a little readjustment here and there to make it a thorough success.

Sprung upon a denomination unprepared and uneducated for its reception, too cumbersome and complicated in its inception for the work it had to do, our General Board of Promotion has accomplished wonders. In the past three years we have done more as a denomination and become more of a united working force than any time in the past twenty years. We have a working basis for the future, have found out the size of the foundation upon which we can build. Our plans were too ambitious, we overestimated the generosity or ability of our denomination, and with sorrow and confusion we must recast them and build more modestly for the present.

Sand in the Gear Box

The Board of Promotion has met with opposition from the start. It has been hampered at every turn. A great deal of sand has been put in the gear box. Much of the opposition was conscientious, a great deal of it was due to misconception of the function of the board. Some of it was malicious.

With a simplification of its organization to meet its present task, a reduction of expenses proportionate to its revised work, and, above all, with a spirit of co-operation in place of hostility, the Board of Promotion can perform for the Northern Baptist Convention a most useful and indispensable task.

Let it be borne in mind, however, that it is a business, not an ecclesiastical or spiritual organization. Its function is to collect funds from the members of the denomination and to distribute those funds to the various denominational organizations according to the directions of the convention. It is not responsible for the management or policy of the organizations to which the funds are given. It is the collecting and distributing agent of the convention. When the limitations of the powers and responsibilities are fully comprehended, its usefulness will be increased.

When the individual member of the local church recognizes that in addition to his duty to his church he owes a duty to the denomination, and that the amount he pledges to the Board of Promotion for denominational purposes is his estimate of such duty, we will be on a firm financial foundation and our enterprises can be run on a business basis instead of the present hysterical plan. It is significant that the churches which have cooperated most freely in the present movement are showing a marked increase in vitality.

The great success of our women's organizations lies in the fact that they are in direct touch with the individual in the local church and they therefore receive a steady stream of gifts which are proportionate to the ability of the givers.

The aim of the board should be to have every member of every church a contributor. This means education, organization and cooperation.

If the thoughts stated above should find favor with the convention, our business difficulties would soon be solved.

When it comes to the differences of an ecclesiastical and theological nature, the writer ventures no suggestion beyond the idea that the payment of debts is a good foundation for sound theology. He has also been told that active work for the Master tends to clarify theological ideas.

The Pastor Perplexed

SOME of us are troubled. We are holding the interstices of the fighting line. We are obscure and unknown; but we are field officers, and upon our morale depends the morale of the Baptist army. The deacons and the trustees, the Sunday-school superintendents and teachers, the masses whose dimes and dollars must make the "hundred million," the "folks" are looking to us for instruction "to victory." One of us, of no account alone but significant because he is typical, makes this complaint. He is lately settled in a great country parish, over a church which over-subscribed its quota in the New World Movement 23 per cent, and which is paying its subscription. The people are coming to church in increasing numbers, and the young people from college attend the home church during vacation. The pastor is preaching the gospel and avoiding controversy. The signs of a genuine revival of religion are not wanting. In the midst of this he is receiving documents bearing honored names, before which some of us feel like standing at salute. The tone of these circulars is earnest and honest, but not always patient. They contain evidence of serious differences at headquarters. The situation is confusing, and the outcome is problematical. Shall this pastor take sides? He favors the so-called Fundamentalists; but he cannot go with the extremists of that party. What will be the outcome?

First, the denomination is drifting toward secession. We may not like the word, for it is a disagreeable term; yet the fact is apparent to every person familiar with the psychology of controversy. We are acting just as men have always acted in the past when they were preparing unconsciously to divide into new forms. The thing has happened more than once in a small way in our denomination. We have an exceedingly independent organization of units but that has not saved us, and will not save us. This pastor abhors the idea of denominational division, but recognizes the danger.

Second, the secession of any party will not carry that party's strength with it. There are thousands of us who will not follow the extremists of our side. There are not merely two parties; there are thousands of independent thinkers, natural born Baptists, who believe that there is some truth on both sides, who have discovered that the truth does not usually lie in extremes. These men and women are disturbed by the noise of controversy; but they will not follow any radical movement whether conservative or progressive. They are anxious to fight the devil, but not anxious to fight each other.

Third, if so deplorable a thing as secession comes it will divide local churches and associations. Let no man think that when this controversy spreads to the "folks" it will not rend things. Our people are humans, plus Baptists, and their reaction will be normal. The unutterable weakness left behind by even a puny secession will be appalling. In the face of a militant Romanism a further division of Baptists looks like a crime. We must avoid it, brethren.

Fourth, the things sought to be corrected cannot be cured by secession. For example, if, and as far as, evolution is a subtle falsehood it needs temperate refutation. Pitiless exposure, not of heresy but of the truth, is the cure of falsehood. Light, not controversy, is the cure of darkness. Those of us who doubt some of the conclusions of evolution can afford to wait and work prayerfully for the reaction that is bound to come. Those who are persuaded of some of these faith disturbing conclusions can afford to wait for faith to perceive the kernel of truth that may be in the message which they bear. God is not in a hurry, why should we be? The truth is our mother, not our puny child. Secession will not cure what ails us.

Fifth, we need just a touch of the spirit of Gamaliel. He may have been an opportunist, but he was right in the particular item which Luke records in Acts 5. It is foreordained and predestined, with all the certainty held by our fathers concerning those doctrines, that he who stands against the onward march of light and truth shall be swept from their path. He may be a good man, and the truth which he opposes may be obscured by clouds of false logic or wrapped in the swaddling clothes of superstition and error; yet that truth will shake itself free from all the obscurations and falsehoods which impede its progress, and will march to empire over the graves of its opposing friends as well as over those of its bitterest foes.

Secession is as unnecessary as it is unwise. There is still time to shut off the gas (excuse the figure), and put on the emergency brake. This pastor believes that this is what the brethren will do; but our pace is disquieting. Please, let us believe in each other, even when we cannot believe in all the "stuff" which happens to be temporarily in the other fellow's theological kit.

LOYALTY TO OUR FATHERS—AND SONS

Much time and attention of late has been given to the reiterated cry of loyalty to our fathers for whom we were not responsible. A word, therefore, may not be out of place concerning loyalty to our sons for whom we are responsible. We had nothing whatever to do with shaping the faith of our fathers. We may have much to do in determining the beliefs of our sons. With increasing light their beliefs ought to be better than those of either our fathers or ourselves. To this end we should seek to transmit, not the specific doctrines of our fathers, but rather their spirit of truth-seeking and right-living. We should not be determined to have our sons inherit any final creed or confession. Instead we should endeavor to instill into them such a spirit that, in shaping their own beliefs, they could say:

Be it old, be it new,
We will seek what is true;
And persistently strive
Just the right thing to do.

Such a spirit is thoroughly Baptist, is it not? If not, it should be. It certainly is fundamental. In fact it is the fundamental and as such is to be commended to all who are interested in the continent-wide discussion concerning the so-called fundamentals. For a right consideration of these it is absolutely essential.

"Be it old, be it new." Doubtless there are some faith-faddists who are ready to doff the old because it is old and to don the new because it is new. They, however, are few compared with the doctrinal "die-hards" who condone the old and condemn the new without, in either case, honestly facing the basic question: Is it true? After a sermon, in which there was an incidental caution against condemning certain modernists, without at least giving them a hearing, an irate visitor made a vehement attack on the preacher who, in requesting a quiet conference, said: "I think I could convince you of the wisdom of the suggestion." Imagine his feeling of amused helpfulness on hearing in reply: "I would not believe it if you did convince me." Of course there was no conference. The conservative brother, who prided himself on his conservatism, in his anger unwittingly put into words the attitude of mind that ever makes so difficult any progress in theological thought. He was not willing to confer because it involved inquiry into the reason for his own position. His outstanding trouble was conceit.

That conservative brother's cry—a cry common in all denominations and in fact in all religions—was that of loyalty to the fathers. If this so-called loyalty were divided into three parts, two of them might safely be classed under pride of opinion. The thought with us is not so much "the fathers" as "our fathers"— with the emphasis unmistakably strong on the pronoun. We fight for our beliefs (though inherited) as we fight for inherited properties because we look upon them as ours. Of course there is something good in this professed loyalty. But it is largely a good thing gone wrong in that it centers more on beliefs than on spirit. True loyalty to our fathers is shown in emulating their spirit of truth-seeking and right-living rather than in adopting without question their particular beliefs. In fact this loyalty to them may compel us, in the increased light of our times, to differ from them in some of their most cherished beliefs. The hope of progress lies in the awakening of increasingly large numbers to this fact.

A devoted Christian woman, in whose house began the church of which she was still a member, opposed some modern teaching of her pastor. In a prolonged conference with her he kept asking: "Mrs. Peck do you not want the truth even though it should differ from some of the doctrines your father and your mother taught you?" But his unanswered question seemed to produce no effect. In a way she could not adequately express she felt entitled to her inherited views, not only by right of possession, but by some kind of a vested right back of which was the authority of God himself. Seven years later, however, the pastor received from her a letter expressing regret for her opposition and containing the significant words: "Oh Mr. . . . , I never could get away from your question; 'Mrs. Peck don't you want the truth?'" For years it had haunted but, eventually, it had greatly helped her. Perhaps no theological caution today is more needed than against pride in our own opinions and the feeling that we have vested rights in those we have simply inherited. Perhaps no theological exhortation is more needed than for that truest loyalty to our father and our sons that will inspire to quest the truth and to do the right rather than to rationalize our inherited beliefs and practices.

Because, as a prominent Fundamentalist has admitted, "Baptists have ever refused to subscribe to a formal and an authoritative creed," they, today, unhampered by this "dead hand," are preeminently free for consistent adjustment to meet present-day needs. This it is, together with their democratic tendencies, that is back of John R. Mott's conviction that "Baptists have the greatest opportunity of any people on earth." It is for us, therefore, to see to it that no creed (nor any confession or statement of the faith of our fathers, used virtually as a creed) rob our sons of this opportunity. If the present manifest effort to fasten such a creed upon them be successful, one of two things, and maybe both, will follow. Either the creed will cramp their growth, or their growth will crack the creed; and history tells us that the cracking of a creed is rather a painful process. If in their interest we want them pledged to something, let us, in the pledge, "substitute purpose for tradition." Instead of committing themselves till death to be true to the "faith of our fathers" let them make some such declaration of purpose as contained in the verse quoted above.

Such a declaration of purpose would be in keeping with the recent words of a suggestive writer on social reform: "Nothing is going to be settled in the sense in which things were supposed to be settled, for the simple reason that knowledge will probably continue to increase and will inevitably alter the world with which we have to make terms. The only thing that might conceivably remain somewhat stabilized is an attitude of mind and an unflagging expectancy appropriate to the terms and rules according to which life's game must hereafter be played. We must promote a new cohesion and cooperation on the basis of this truth." Amen. In so doing we shall be loyal both to our fathers and to our sons.

SOME EXPLANATIONS NEEDED IN FUNDAMENTALISM

Dr. E. H. Johnson, the great teacher of his day at Crozer Seminary, always insisted that most of the mental conflicts in life arose from either differences in definition or from misunderstandings. The discord which has been growing among Northern Baptists for some years certainly has in it many elements of misunderstanding, otherwise men of equal spirituality and devotion to Christ would not be, as they are, against each other. We have a collection of our constituents who name themselves Fundamentalists, any or all others are simply not Fundamentalists, they have no commonly accepted descriptive other than that which they have always borne, Baptist. In reality our Northern Baptists are for the time being divided into Baptists and Fundamental-Baptists. Surely no one will be un-Christian enough to think, much less to say, that essential Christianity is confined to either the one or the other of these groups; it can be found in about equal percentages in both the Baptists and the Fundamental-Baptists. It should be noted that their title, Fundamental-Baptist, has not been conferred upon those who bear it, but has been conceived and assumed by themselves.

There are some matters which the Baptists would like the Fundamental-Baptists to explain to them that there may be a mutual understanding.

They would like to have some explanation about the Confession of Faith adopted by the Fundamental-Baptists at Des Moines in their separate conferences. Why was it so slow in developing? Why is it different from the confession adopted earlier at Denver in the interdenominational Fundamental Conference, in which Fundamental-Baptists participated? The Des Moines Confession of Faith is one which the Baptists could have written and cheerfully subscribed to at any time in the past twenty years, without any trail-blazing by other denominations. Do the Fundamental-Baptists think that Baptists in subscribing to that confession are reluctantly returning to a faith they had lost? Are they aware that the Baptists during all the Fundamental-Baptists turmoil have been living with that confession in their hearts? Are they aware that the number who now, or in the past did, depart from it in any serious measure are so few that to disquiet the whole denomination about them is like starting a campaign in all Pennsylvania against wildcats because there are a few to be found in remote mountain districts and in cages at the "Zoo"? Do they realize that the real objection of Baptists to the Des Moines Confession is not to its contents nor to those who drew it, but to the fact that it is presented to them from without and they are asked to subscribe to it under duress as something of which they had lost sight?

The Baptists would also like the Fundamental-Baptists to explain some of their propaganda utterances and methods. What do they mean and to whom are they referring when they put forth the following statements found in Dr. Goodchild's article of March 2 in the Watchman-Examiner? Fundamentalism, the distinguishing quality of Fundamental-Baptists, is "A revolt against that disposition which denies that there is any authority over a man external to his own mind, or any revelation of truth, except through science." "It is unwilling to substitute education for evangelism. It will evangelize by means of education, but it will not educate except to evangelize." "Social service should not be made a substitute for evangelization." "We own no other authority but Christ's, but his authority over us is absolute. His will is our law and it is our delight as well. That will we find revealed in the New Testament, interpreted to us by the Holy Spirit. On that book our Baptist forefathers took their stand. We see no reason to shift our position."

Baptists can as honestly and sincerely subscribe to all those propositions as can the Fundamental-Baptists. Baptists as a class have been living and laboring according to those principles all these years and want some better explanation given than has yet been given why they should share in a propaganda which publishes to the world the conception that our feet had "well nigh slipped" in these matters when they are conscious that such is not and never was the case. Baptists want an explanation why they should participate in an upheaval in a million and a quarter Baptists to confess the sins of 1 or 2 per cent of their number.

Again Baptists feel they would like an explanation of some things manifest in the methods of the Fundamental-Baptists. Why is it that in not a few quarters there exists among the Fundamental-Baptists constituency a trail of misrepresentation and insinuation against Baptist pastors and Baptist leaders who carry in their inmost hearts a reverence for all the Des Moines Confession contains, with no more sense of personal difference than the Fundamental-Baptists frankly confess exists among themselves, and who would die if need be for the name of the Lord Jesus? Who started those reports among the followers of Fundamental-Baptist leaders and on what meat do they feed? Are the followers of Fundamental-Baptist leaders concluding that every Baptist who is not a Fundamental-Baptist is guilty of all the sins against which their leaders inveigh, or are some of the leaders putting the mark of disloyalty on their loyal brothers?

Baptists who have not consented to share in the ferment of Fundamentalism, but who nevertheless are loyal to the proclaimed confession of faith and who are tainted with none of the evils against which the Fundamental-Baptists protest have a right to ask the Fundamental-Baptists to define themselves differentially in a far more satisfactory way than they have yet done. Nothing that has been brought forward up to date amounts to any Christian justification of the turmoil, confusion and stagnation of activities which has been brought upon Northern Baptists.

INDIANAPOLIS AND THE CONFESSION OF FAITH

The fundamentals are not at stake in the present controversy. Things fundamental have a self-perpetuating power. The mists may obscure the mountains, but they cannot remove them. When the present storm is over we shall find the fundamentals still with us, like the old rock of Gibraltar, storm-beaten and wave-beaten, yet untouched at its loftiest peak. And so we need not fear for the fundamentals. I believe them, and preach them. I yield to no man in faithful allegiance to, and courageous proclamation of, the great doctrines of our faith. And the same may be said of 90 per cent of the ministers of the Northern Baptist Convention. So far as I know there is not one Baptist minister in the state of Ohio whom I would call disloyal to "the truth as it is in Jesus."

The only thing at stake in the present situation is our historic Baptist position. If we are willing to go back on that: if we are ready to repudiate the achievements of the past: if we are quite agreed that we should retrace our steps, and strike out as invalid the triumphs of spiritual liberty; if we can no longer trust the Holy Spirit in his office work as teacher and guide; if, in other words, we believe the time has come when the only way to safeguard the "faith of our fathers" is to bind it once more upon the individual conscience by some external and mechanical action—then, by all means, let us adopt a confession of faith at Indianapolis. But, unless we are willing to accept the implicates of such a step, we should make vigorous protest against it.

It is a grave mistake to suppose that conferences on fundamentals, and the adoption of creedal statements, can preserve the faith, and keep the church together. We can achieve neither of these ends in that fashion. After two years of vigorous discussion about doctrines and creeds, what has happened? We have come perilously near to the very thing that Henry Ward Beecher hinted at years ago when he said, "There are men who fight about the candlestick until the candle falls and is extinguished."

One cannot but feel that the adoption of a confession of faith, drawn and fixed by certain individuals, will prove to be a negative quantity so far as its value is concerned. It will divide both clergy and laity; it will create wider schisms than it attempts to heal. Furthermore, if a man cannot be trusted without the formal imposition of a creed, he cannot be trusted with it—he should not be asked to subscribe; and, on the other hand, the man who can be trusted with a formal confession of faith, can be trusted without that instrument—he does not need to subscribe.

As a Baptist I believe that the freedom of the spiritual life must include two fundamental experiences. Paul's conversion to Christ meant freedom from the intellectual bondage of Judaism, and freedom from the moral bondage of Pharisaic legalism. From this double bondage he was set free by one and the same act. It appears that some of our Baptist brethren have not entered into the glorious liberty of the children of God, being yet in bondage to creeds and confessions.

A hardened, inelastic Christian tradition is no better than a Jewish one. There is an orthodoxy which is sin. A hard-shell orthodoxy is just about as bad as the intellectual bondage of Judaism. Some men need to be converted from a creed as much as Paul needed to be converted from the law, or Augustine from sensuality.

Let us endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, but let us remember that we can never do this by instruments of external and mechanical character. Nor can it be done by coercion. The Roman church tried that method, and the West threw it overboard in consequence.

Let us come up to Indianapolis determined to throw ourselves back upon the leadership of the Holy Spirit, and not upon the leadership of any man, or group of men. Let us have done with our bitter incriminations one of another. For when the storm is over, and we have hurled the lightnings, we shall look up to find our Master standing by with eyes that search us through and through, and we shall hear him saying, "Beware, ye, of the leaven of the Pharisees"—rigid orthodoxy that would tithe the mint and anise, and ignore the weightier matters.

It Is Not Raining Rain to Me, It's Raining—?

WHAT do you do when it rains? Three-to-Ten-Years-Old presses its disconsolate nose against the window-pane and sighs all the way up from its ten toes! What do you do when it rains?

Do you house-clean the bureau or the desk or the closet that has been a catch-all for weeks? A rainy day is perfect for such a job as that! Do you mend all the holes in all the socks and patch up all the rents? For then the sunny day that follows is brighter yet. Do you answer all the letters that you always "mean to" answer? There is marvellous satisfaction to see them piled up ready for the postman. One letter never produces such a beatific glow as that little mountain of mail which will carry a bit of yourself to all corners of the map! Or do you settle down in the softest chair and read the magazine, catching up with lost time? Maybe you launder all the fragile little collar and cuff sets and the silk gloves that never get sent for the washlady's tender attentions. Maybe you shine the silver or polish the brasses. Maybe you set yourself a little embroidery or knitting "stunt": just so much must be done by such and such a time! Then urge yourself on to the winning of the dare.

But it seems to me that these little Adventures in Domestic Practicability are as nothing compared to the rainy-day Adventures in Cheerfulness which the most ordinary of us may fare forth to meet. Did you ever notice the damp mood of a street car? the unsmiling collisions on street corners? The provokingness of restaurants on days when sopping coats drip from every hook? The low spirits of shoppers? The dullness of clerks? It is a psychological something akin to that sad droop of little Three-to-Ten-Years-Old as it flattens its nose against the window-pane and hates the weather. Yet once I saw a lovely thing. A little girl in a red-riding-hood mackintosh boarded the same street car where fifteen of us sat in glum, damp rows. She stood on tiptoe and dropped her pennies into the box, then she said to the conductor (an old friend, as this was her school route): "I've got three perfectly lovely angle-worms to take home to mother, see?" He chuckled in polite surprise. We all smiled. We all "moved along" hoping she would deign to sit by us. We all sat watching her every blessed minute of that ride. And one of us said to herself: "How about cultivating adventures in cheerfulness yourself?" So when we bumped perfect strangers in the usual down-town collisions, we grinned as if it were a perfect lark, and they grinned back! And ever since, an envelope of rainy-day clippings has been growing, part of which you may enjoy sharing;

"Country Showers"

By MILDRED CUMMER WOOD

The motherly rain
With persuasive fingers
Washes the dust-streaked faces
Of the little landscapes,
And sets them laughing down
To play again in the sunshine.

Rain Drops

I hear leaves drinking rain;
I hear rich leaves on top
Giving the poor beneath
Drop after drop;
'Tis a sweet noise to hear
These green leaves drinking near.

And when the sun comes out,
After this rain shall stop,
A wondrous light will fill
Each dark, round drop;
I hope the sun shines bright;
'Twill be a lovely sight.

Red Ribbon

By H. UNDERWOOD HOYT

Thank you for wearing something red today!

I've wanted red.
There have been so many people around
With rain clothes, drab-on-purpose things,
With damp thoughts and dull-on-purpose thoughts.

Thank you, thank you, thank you
For wearing that clear red ribbon on your blouse.
It sings.

It is you,
You are a lover of the stars—
I believe you are a friend of Pegasus.
Are his wings gold today,
In some other sky?
I believe you have danced on Olympus.
I believe you don't mind all this rain and weather.

I believe you can forget the smell of rain-coats,
You lover of crimson.

Rainy-Weather Clothes

IN connection with this Red Ribbon bit of verse the following anecdote by Miss Sangster in the Christian Herald about rainy weather clothes suggests another adventure in cheerfulness. An unexpected gust of wind had demolished her umbrella by sending it underneath a truck:

"There was nothing to do but buy a new umbrella, for the gray sheets of rain were doing really terrible things to my hat and jacket. Without more ado I turned from the wreck in the middle of the street and scurried into a nearby shop. And there I made known my wants.

The clerk behind the counter was a young girl with pink cheeks, and the star dust of dreams in her clear blue eyes. It seemed to me, as I glanced at her, that she should be doing something more colorful and vivid than the mere selling of umbrellas. She had all of the clean romance and freshness of springtime about her. And umbrellas, at best, are not exciting! And yet, in just a very few minutes, I found that I had made a mistake. For selling umbrellas, to her, was not a stupid profession. She made it real and beautiful by the power of her imagination.

"Do you know," she said to me, and her voice was the most cheerful thing that I had listened to for many a day, "do you know—I wish you wouldn't buy a black umbrella!"

I had asked for a black umbrella. I have always asked for black umbrellas, quite as a matter of habit. No other clerk had ever suggested any change. So it was not strange that the girl's suggestion—if it could be called a suggestion—came as a complete surprise to me.

"Just why," I asked her, "do you wish that I wouldn't buy a black umbrella?"

The girl smiled up at me, and a tiny dimple flickered, for an instant, in one of her pink cheeks.

"I don't like black umbrellas," she told me, "I don't like black umbrellas at all! I hate to sell 'em! I'd almost rather sell no umbrellas than black ones. Rainy days are dreary enough, goodness knows, without black things. And yet people always wear dark old clothes on rainy days and almost all of them buy dark old umbrellas—just as you were going to buy one!"

I couldn't help laughing softly. But I wasn't laughing at the girl—I was laughing with her.

"What shall I buy?" I questioned, "since I don't want to hurt your feelings—what shall I buy?"

All at once the girl was childishly eager. "Buy a red umbrella," she told me, "or a green one, or a purple one. They don't cost a bit more than the black umbrellas, and they're much prettier! Why, just seeing a gay umbrella opened up on the street makes the whole world seem brighter and happier. Rainy-day things—clothes and hats and neckties and umbrellas should be cheerful enough to make folks forget all about the weather!"

I compromised on a purple umbrella. I paid for it with a sensation of utter recklessness, and said good-bye to the pink-cheeked little clerk, and went out again into the street. And with a feeling of extreme consciousness (for I have owned black umbrellas all of my life!) I opened it up for all of the world to gaze upon. And then—because I had suddenly remembered my business appointment—I hurried on.

The purple umbrella was bright. And pretty, too. It made a pleasant little reflection upon the wet sidewalk—a wee lavender colored reflection that scurried in front of me like a small bit of rainbow. In all the sea of moving black umbrellas it was the only light spot—the only cheerful color note. It made me vaguely happy—curiously proud. I felt like a little girl-child with her first pink sash. I felt as a small boy feels when somebody has given him a puppy dog for his very own! I think that I made a better impression, when I finally kept my appointment, because of that feeling. I think that I felt stronger and healthier because of it. I almost think that the other people—the strangers who passed me by on the street—were aware of my happiness.

And so—because in my own case it has proved true—I can't help thinking that the little clerk was right. Rainy-weather clothes should be gay clothes—cheerful clothes! We shouldn't put on our oldest, saddest garments because the sky is hidden from us by storm clouds and there is a heavy wind and a chilling rain. We should wear a bit of brave color to offset the cheerlessness of the day.

Watch the Corners!

By LULU LINTON

WHEN you wake up in the morning of a chill and cheerless day, And feel inclined to grumble, pout, or frown.

Just glance into your mirror and you will quickly see

It's just because the corners of your mouth turn down.

Then take this simple rhyme,

Remember it in time.

It's always dreary weather in countryside or town

When you wake and find the corners of your mouth turned down.

If you wake up in the morning full of bright and happy thoughts

And begin to count the blessings in your cup.

Then glance into your mirror and you will quickly see

It's all because the corners of your mouth turn up!

Then take this little rhyme,

Remember it in time.

There's joy aplenty in this world to fill life's cup

If you'll only keep the corners of your mouth turned up.

When the Rain Comes Down!

By PEGGY

WE used to be the worst children in our family when it rained for we would be sure to go pestering mother every five minutes with the question, "O mother what shall we do now?"

I guess we were really quite a nuisance to her, until one day Uncle Tim thought of the brightest scheme! He took a piece of cardboard which had come in the mail as the covers of an advertisement. He cut it into lots of little cards and on each card he printed something. We kept wondering and wondering what he was writing, but he kept it a dead secret all the time he was writing, and when he finally finished the cards he put them in an envelope, labeled it "For Rainy Days" and gave it to mother to keep for us when the first rainy day came. And would you believe it, it was clear for two solid weeks? Every day we used to stand on the sidewalk gazing up at the sky.

"Isn't that a cloud?" Bill would say.

"No, it's railway train smoke," I would sigh.

But finally it did rain, oh! a perfect deluge of it one Saturday, so mother gave us the envelope and told us the directions: we could shuffle the cards, then beginning with the top one we were to draw off the cards, doing the things suggested for as long as we liked. But we mustn't "peek" at the underneath cards, for it was to be a surprise game right straight through the day. We did every single one of the things that first day, of course, we were so awfully curious about what was coming next!

Every rainy day since then we get out Uncle Tim's cards and go through the pile of them all over again, so now I'm passing the suggestion on to you, for Timothy, Bill, and I never have to bother our mother any more; we even like to have it rain.

These are the things suggested on Uncle Tim's rainy day cards: Play crokinole; make a scrapbook for a missionary; blow soap bubbles; play house; piece a picture puzzle together; play hide and go seek; write a letter; fix up your desk; read a story; play anagrams; dress up; act out a missionary story; write a missionary story. This was lots and lots of fun, for we would always divide it into three chapters each of us taking one of them, then reading them aloud to each other afterward. Timothy is so little that his chapters are comical, he gets so little said! For instance one chapter was: "THIS LITTLE BOY IS BLACK ALL OVER," with half the letters twisted the wrong way round. But it fitted in all right with Bill's second chapter about a splendid boy in Africa who climbed coconut trees to get something in exchange for a Bible; then came my chapter about the daughter of an African missionary and her adventures with a doll. Do try these "progressive" stories sometime, it's enough to fill a whole morning of a rainy day! Then you can act it out all afternoon.

Has The Sunday School Failed?

By HENRY EDWARD TRALLE

No, if it had failed, there would not be any one now to criticize it. Who are these critics of the Sunday school, anyway? You hear them in the conventions and the conferences. You read their articles in the religious journals. They say, "The Sunday school has failed."

Who are these critics of the Sunday school, I ask again? Why, they are the products of the Sunday school. Nobody else has interest enough in the Sunday school to criticize it. The others are not thinking about it one way or the other.

If the critics of the Sunday school are failures, then the Sunday school has failed. They are the products of the Sunday school. It was the Sunday school that gave them their interest in the Sunday school, and that has developed in them their interest in religious education.

Frequently it is the advocate and promoter of week-day religious education that takes occasion to berate the Sunday school as a "failure." Who started the movement for week-day religious education? Why the Sunday-school people—those who were the products of the Sunday school and who were workers in the Sunday school, and, if the week-day movement ever gets beyond the experimental stage, it will be the Sunday-school people who will put it there.

We shall never get anywhere with week-day religious education or any other kind of religious education by discounting the Sunday school. It is the Sunday school, despite all its defects—which are admittedly many—that has saved us from theological petrification and dogmatic putrefaction.

God be praised for the Sunday school and for that noble company of Sunday-school workers, who, with all their shortcomings, have done something besides talk. It is they who have brought us thus far. Now let us go on, appreciatively and gratefully, to where we are going.

TEAM-WORK: HELPS AND HINDRANCES
Neh. 2:17-20; 3:28; 4:6

"So we built the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto half the height thereof: for the people had a mind to work."

The story of this rebuilding process is one of the most fascinating stories of the Old Testament. It may be divided into several parts: 1. The period of preparation. 2. Period of discouragement and difficulties. 3. The completion of the task. If the group plan is used, assign each of the topics to different members of the group.

FORWARD WITH CHRIST

This caption is the key-word for the Young People's Convention in St. Paul, Minn., June 28-July 2, 1922. In addition to the topics suggested above, the following are suggested:

1. Forward. So long as a project goes forward and success can be measured, all well and good. When things begin to slow up, people become discouraged and begin to talk. It is the same old story from the rebuilding of the temple to our day. Take the New World Movement of Northern Baptists. What hilarity attended our first year's operations. Obstacles came thick and fast with the second and third years. We are talking a great deal; we are suspicious of each other. These are indications of a retrograde movement. Just where it will stop, no one can tell. We need a Nehemiah to preach to us on the subject "The Revival of Idealism." Certainly this is not the time for Northern Baptists to give themselves over to selfishness and jealousies. Forward should be the watchword of the hour!

2. With Christ. We recall the days of the slogan "Back to Christ." Well, Christ is a long way ahead of his followers in his redemptive plan for the world. He stands away yonder in the lead, calling us on. There are some folks living today who will accept the heading of this paper as a good one—"Forward with Christ," but "I must be in the lead." They are terribly particular at which end of the line they are found. Of course, such people have long since lost the spirit of the Master. They are the worst sort of heretics.

"With Christ"! If his spirit were operative in us all, what a difference there would be! The pulling for advantage would stop! The attempt to get control of this part of the machinery for "my party" would stop! We would hear more discussion of "orthopraxy" than "orthodoxy"! There would be more emphasis laid on "vitals" than "fundamentals"! There would be more action and less talk! There would be less emphasis on "creed-making" and more stress on "Christian living!" There would be more brotherly love and less suspicion! There would be less dogmatism, and more humility! There would not be less doctrine, but more life!

3. Together. This word needs to be added. There are a lot of fine folks in the world who are conscientiously, they feel, trying to do the will of God. Fanciful interpretations of all sorts give them special authority to set the whole world aright. All who work with them or near them must either pronounce their "shibboleths" or be anathematized. They pride themselves on their Baptist liberty which word they roll under their tongues as a "sweet morsel," but they forget that their "liberty" ends where the other fellow's nose begins. They have no moral or any other right, to seeing their clubs all over God's green earth.

"Together"! This is the need of our day. The place to learn to get on together is in the young people's society, and the time is when we are young.

FORWARD WITH CHRIST, TOGETHER

Study Course Activities

A number of wide-awake pastors within the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention are leading their young people in study courses along the line of young people's activities.

Rev. W. Earle Smith, pastor of First Church, Ontario, Cal., has a large class taking the Baptist Trained Leaders' Course with the pastor's wife as the teacher. This class is doing exceptionally fine work. High school students in the course are securing one unit of credit out of sixteen on their high school course.

Rev. George C. Alborn, pastor of the Underwood Memorial Church of Wauwatosa, Wis., is teaching a fine class in his church. A recent lot of examination papers sent into the office of the B. Y. P. U. of America indicates a very high grade of work. The young people have just completed the new manual "Our B. Y. P. U." We present to the constituency the examination paper of Mr. Arthur F. Boyd, a student in Pastor Alborn's class. It indicates how thoroughly our young people are grasping the problems of the young life in our churches.

Question 1. State and discuss briefly the various reasons for having a young people's society.

Answer. It is absolutely necessary that the church have constantly in training a group of young people who will be ready to take up the burden of leadership when the present leaders drop out. The B. Y. P. U. is the recognized training school for this purpose. It is absolutely denominational and so prepares leaders who are not ignorant of denominational conditions. A B. Y. P. U. is as necessary to the church as an Annapolis or a West Point is to the United States, and its function is practically the same—the training of future leaders. The young members of the church whether they are to be leaders or not need to be instructed along Christian lines. This also must be done in the B. Y. P. U.

Question 2. Give in outline the organization of a young people's society. What do you consider the best plan?

Answer. (1) President; (2) vice-president; (3) recording secretary; (4) corresponding secretary; (5) treasurer; (6) librarian or chorister.

The group plan is considered the best way to conduct the program of a B. Y. P. U. The plan consists of dividing the society into four or less groups. Thus, with each group taking charge of a meeting, the people who, ordinarily, would not be reached are brought to lead the various meetings. Through this plan every member of the union is placed on the program an equal number of times. The work is arranged in a systematic method and there is no guesswork as to "who is going to lead tonight?" A union may be formed with six people but it works better if more may be found who will participate. Besides the above-named officers the following committees should be formed, composed of various members of the union and group leaders: Executive, membership, missionary, social, finance and music. Special committees may be appointed as desired.

Question 3. Name the various classes of membership in the young people's society. Discuss at length some means of increasing the membership of the society.

Answer. The membership of a Young People's Society may be divided into the following classes: Active, honorary and associate members. The active members belong to some Baptist church and have the right to vote and hold office. Associate members may be members of some other denomination and may enjoy all the privileges of active members except voting and holding office. There are in every community some young folks who are not attached to any church organization. A special social or meeting may be held to interest these people and once they are interested it is not difficult to persuade them to join the society.

Question 4. Name the various officers of a young people's society and state the qualifications you deem necessary for an efficient officer.

Answer. The following officers are necessary in a B. Y. P. U.: President, vice-president, recording secretary, corresponding secretary, treasurer, chorister and librarian. An officer to be efficient must have the ability to do the thing for which he was chosen and must be willing to do the thing. Both things are necessary. He must also be willing to work with the one end in view of consecration of others to Christ.

Question 5. Name and discuss at length the functions of the various committees of the young people's society.

Answer. a) The executive committee. This committee must meet at least once a month and plan out the program and go over plans. The pastor is a member of this committee and the other members are the chairmen of the other committees and the group leaders. The president is chairman of this committee.

b) The membership committee. The vice-president should be chairman of this committee. This committee should pass on each new member, classify them and assign them to groups.

c) The missionary committee. This committee must prepare the information for the regular missionary meeting. Another duty of this committee is to present to the members of the society the topic of missions in a more interesting manner. This may be accomplished by the use of plays. The corresponding secretary is advised as the chairman of this committee.

d) The social committee. The duty of this committee is to meet the social needs of the young people of the church by offering socials, straw rides and other gatherings. The committee should consist of members who are wide-awake and also spiritual.

Question 6. What value do you place upon the social activities of the young people's society? Who should direct them? Should the social life of the society be a means to an end or an end in itself?

Answer. The social has not been stressed enough in the past. Ordinarily socials have been merely repetitions of some other good time that this same crowd has had and this gets monotonous. A good wide-awake social committee can plan programs for socials that will attract the new people in town and keep some of the old members sticking. The need of a social at least once a month is apparent. The B. Y. P. U. usually meets once a week at the church on Sunday evening. This meeting is usually entirely religious and therefore the society does not get the social life it should. A well-planned social once a month serves to keep the society wide-awake and prevents the society from dying out. The members of the social committee should plan the social and direct it. The social life of a society should be a means to an end and not an end in itself. That end should be the increase of the membership of the society and thus indirectly the increase in the consecration of lives to the work of the Kingdom.

Question 7. State in your own way some practical service young people may render in the local church and in the community.

Answer. In our own community we have several poor families. The young people's society may make up baskets for these families and in this manner do some practical service for the community. A society may conduct services at a rescue mission or some similar place. Another useful service is to look up some church in the surrounding country that has no Young People's Society and move your meeting to that church. In this manner it is entirely possible that new interest may be awakened in a B. Y. P. U.

Question 8. What is the relation of the senior young people's society to the juniors? To the intermediate? To what extent should the senior society furnish the future leadership of the local church and the denomination?

Answer. The junior B. Y. P. U. should be under the direction of a committee in the senior society. The junior superintendent should be selected from the senior society and should make monthly reports to it. The intermediate union should be under the supervision of the seniors. The future leadership of the church depends wholly on the seniors.

What Shall We Do?

The following program is taken from "It Is To Laugh," a book of games and stunts, through the courtesy of the George H. Doran Company, New York.

I. GOSSIP

A circle is formed, with from three to six people in the center, their number to be determined by the size of the circle. Guests are warned that it is the object of these people in the center to get out of it, and that the only way they can do it is to get someone else in, in their place; that their methods of doing this is very effective, and that it behooves every last one of them to learn the name and occupation of his neighbor on either side, together with one juicy bit of gossip concerning him.

At a signal from the leader, each one of the people in the center turns around, snaps his fingers at some person who does not expect it, and asks his victim to give instantly all the required information about both of his neighbors. If he fails, into the center he goes, changing places with the person who caught him napping.

The neighbor is supposed to offer the juicy bit of gossip himself, but sometimes his imagination fails him, or his egotism overcomes him, and it is up to the victim pointed at to use his own imagination. Therefore, it is not unusual to have the following information shouted out by an excited victim who fears a place in the center: "My right hand neighbor's name is The Minister; his occupation is ministering and he has been in jail four times!"

All the others in the center have been asking for information at the same time and after a minute or two the leader calls out, "Change your neighbors!" and everyone is to find a new set of neighbors for himself. A great deal of publicity and a place in the center is promised any one who does not get into a new neighborhood!

This game is played not more than five minutes, for with such an incentive all guests will know each other intimately long before five minutes are over!

II. DODGE!

All guests are in a circle. Count off by twos. All No. 1's go into the center of the circle. Three or more bean bags are passed out to No. 2's who form the circle. At a signal they start to toss the bags at the ones who are in the center, no one being allowed to leave his place to get a better aim. It is the big business of life for those in the center to avoid the bean bags tossed at them, for any one who is hit must get out of the center and take his former place in the circle. If a bean bag is caught it does not count as a hit.

When all No. 1's have been hit, No. 2's go into the center and take their turn acting as targets, while No. 1's aim at them with the bean bags. When they have all been driven out of the circle, the last No. 1 and the last No. 2 to be hit by a bean bag go into the center and become targets. The one who stays in the longest without getting hit gets a prize—a bean.

III. LAUGHTER!

Does it seem stupid to exact forfeits of people who were unfortunate in a game that demanded skill or speed or ingenuity? That all depends on the forfeit. Four or five men, who are left-overs in a game which provides the chance to get a partner, can be made to pay a forfeit that is a real one! These left-overs are lined up in a row facing all the other guests. They are told that they are to be given a chance to vindicate themselves in a try-out of a particular talent. The first test is as to the musical quality of each one's laugh. Each in turn laughs for the audience in as musical a tone as he can muster up. The audience votes for the best. Next, each in turn must laugh as long as he can without taking a breath. The next test is for shrillness; the next for the heartiest laugh, and the last for the most contagious laugh!

IV. QUIZZ

Some five or six people are chosen for the class which is to be quizzed. The teacher has her back to the guests, and her class faces them. She has prepared a list of questions which she puts to different members of her class, pointing to one of them at a time. All other guests are to act as judges, and as a question is answered they call out either "Right" or "Wrong." The faction that shouts the loudest gets a verdict. A scorekeeper keeps a bogus score of points made by each member of the class, and at the end the prize is given to the one who made the poorest showing although all through the quizz much ado is made about how close the score is between different members of the class.

The questions in the quizz can be on any subject under the sun, and the more impossible the better, for every member of the class must give some answer to the question put to him. "I don't know" is not allowed under any circumstances. The following set of question is typical:

1. Where do we get kerosene?
2. Who is the best looking man (or woman) present?

Religious Education

Enlargement

By WILLIAM H. MAIN

Our young people should be impressed with three very important things. They should realize their opportunity. This is their day. All days are short. How quickly the years fly by and opportunities, too. In a Greek city of long ago there stood a statue. The statue is gone, but an imagined conversation between it and a traveler has been preserved.

"What is thy name, O statue?"

"I am called Opportunity."

"Why art thou on thy toes?"

"To show that I stay but a moment."

"Why hast thou wings on thy feet?"

"To show how quickly I pass by."

"Why is thy hair so long on thy forehead?"

"That men may seize me when they meet me."

"Why then, is thy head so bald behind?"

"To show that when I have once passed I cannot be caught."

An old proverb declares that "What may be done at any time may be done at no time. Strike while the iron is hot." Here is an improvement. Make the iron hot by striking. Our young people, and other people too, are letting golden opportunities slip by them each day. The history of all great achievement is the history of seeing and grasping opportunity.

The next thing we ought to realize is that opportunity will be nothing to us unless we have an ideal. Margaret Deland has said: "The space between a man's ideal and the man himself, is his opportunity." We are so easily satisfied. When we are satisfied our usefulness usually ceases. Coming to church one Sunday morning I found on the bulletin board this notice: "Usual services here today." I looked up the man who did the printing and said: "Did you put that sign out there?" He said, "Yes." "Well don't you do it again! We are all tired of the usual services. If you can't think of anything else, put on 'Unusual services here today.'" The next Sunday it was there in large letters. "Unusual services here today." We had them, too.

Thorwaldsen, the great sculptor, was so well satisfied with his statue of Christ that he wept, saying he feared he should never have another great inspiration. Our ideals should always be higher than our present attainments. If we expect to reach our ideal, we should push it up a little higher. "Hitch your wagon to the stars," said Emerson, and Mr. Moody added—"And keep the wheels on the earth." One of the great needs of this hour is practical aspirations. Our greatest ideal should be the winning of this world to Christ, and it can only be done by practical methods.

We ought also to realize that we must use our opportunities as stepping stones to our ideal. We can only reach the mountain top by climbing, but every step adds to our strength. We cannot overestimate the importance of Christian training. Our young people's societies are the training schools of the church. Culture is not an evidence of weakness. A piece of marble in the rough is strong, but it is no less strong when it is polished, and surely it is much more beautiful. It is a wonderful thing to have made advancement in numbers, but have we kept pace in efficiency? Recently our city entertained some soldiers. In the park there was a great tent, and everything in connection was on a large scale. I went over to see the big tent, and Isaiah's words came to me—"Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes." Israel was a church as well as a nation. What Isaiah advised is just what our young people need to do. Enlarge! Not in membership only, but in effective service. A young artist sent a picture to Michaelangelo for his criticism. The greater artist wrote across it: "Amplius!" Everything about it looked cramped. Amplius! We need enlarging in many directions.

Many do not come to our meetings because we give them so little when they do come. We need more thought and more personal experiences in our testimonies. Sometimes a society will have a clipping meeting—that is, the leader cuts up several religious papers and hands out the clippings by the dozen, so that no time may be lost. Usually the whole meeting is lost. Then there is the easy method of reading a verse of scripture in place of a prayer or a testimony. This is all right for a few years, but when one keeps it up for many years, we look in vain for his spiritual development. Thought! Get the thought of a verse, and present it red-hot to the meeting! Give a warm personal experience, and you give a blessing to the whole company! Then there is the silent brigade. They talk up to the beginning of the meeting and as soon as it is over, but no word of love for the Master during the meeting. Silence is never golden during a prayer meeting. Better a poor testimony than no testimony. But why either, after years of opportunity? One verse of scripture learned, and taken into the heart and mind will produce a helpful thought.

International Uniform Lesson for June 11

JEREMIAH CAST INTO PRISON

Lesson: Jeremiah 38:4-13. Golden Text Jeremiah 1:8.

Setting

After a reign of eleven years, and six years after he had burned the parchment containing God's word, Jehoiakim's life came to an end—just how is not known—and his son Jehoiachin ruled for three months, when he and various court officials were carried into exile in Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar. Nebuchadnezzar then placed Zedekiah, brother of Jehoiakim and the weakest of men, on the throne.

Lesson

To advise surrender to the enemy sounded traitorous, but such is the advice that Jeremiah gave. He was sure that the city and country were doomed, and there was no resisting the Chaldeans. It must be surrender sooner or later, better sooner. "He weakeneth the hands of the men of war that remain in the city," complained the princes, "and the hands of the people in speaking such words unto them. Let him be put to death." Zedekiah must have believed in Jeremiah, for he sought his advice and his prayers in secret, but now he took the easy way for a weak, frightened man: "Behold he is in your hands!" Jeremiah's death was probably to be by starvation, for he was let down into a miry dungeon without water and without food. When Ebed-melech, an Ethiopian in the king's house—a man who had the courage of his convictions—heard of this, he sought the king and told him that Jeremiah would die of famine if left in the pit. Zedekiah, not unwillingly for he was weak rather than wicked, veered with this new wind and ordered the Ethiopian to take thirty men and withdraw Jeremiah from the miry pit. Any kind of a rescue from such a plight would have been welcome, but Ebed-melech saw that it was done in the least uncomfortable way. He ordered Jeremiah to bind the cloths and old garments which were thrown down to him, about his "arm-holes" so that the rope used in drawing him up would not cut his flesh. So they "took him up out of the dungeon and Jeremiah remained in the court of the guard," where the better class of prisoners were placed. It was a railroad-off section of the court surrounding the palace, where friends had access to them.

Leading Thoughts

1. Faithfulness to duty is death to fear.
2. If a man's work is outstanding for righteousness it always meets with some opposition and courage is needed to continue it.
3. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him and delivereth them."

Our Own Folks

An Appreciation of Alexander L. Lockert

W. J. GEEN

After nearly half a century of faithful spiritual service in the Baptist ministry, Rev. A. L. Lockert entered into his eternal rest April 3, 1922 at the age of 80 years. For a dozen years or more he had struggled with failing health but most of that time continued in the active pastorate doing full duty. In 1919, however, declining health compelled him to retire from the pastorate and he returned to Summit County, Ohio, where he was born and took up his residence in West Richfield. Even here, up to within two days of his departure, he persisted in his regular study and teaching in Bible school and teacher-training class.

He was the youngest son of James and Minerva Moon Lockert who came from Galways, N. Y., to Richfield, Ohio in 1832. Of a family of three sons and four daughters, he is survived by one sister, Mrs. Minerva Reed of West Richfield. He received his early education in the district school and the Richfield Academy and later graduated from Denison University in 1870 and from Rochester Theological Seminary in 1873. In December of the same year he was ordained to the ministry at Franklin, Ohio, his first pastorate of nine years, and in August 9, 1882, he was united in marriage with Miss Emma Kimball of Franklin, a woman of more than ordinary ability who has been his faithful helper and co-worker and who survives him. During a ministry of nearly forty-six years, he held pastorates in Ohio, Michigan, Illinois and Iowa, two pastorates being with the same church in Illinois.

Brother Lockert was a devout Christian, a wise counselor, an indefatigable worker, a faithful and kind pastor, a diligent student, an exceptional teacher loyal to his denomination and in touch with all her enterprises. Early in his ministry he cultivated the habit of careful and complete study of the Sunday-school lessons and kept it up to the last, writing out in sermon-outline form the results of his study each week, sometimes three or four such outlines on each lesson, so that he would frequently have a score or more sermons ahead for his pulpit use and his unpublished notes on the Sunday-school lessons are unsurpassed. "With his pastoral visitation he successfully combined the home department of the Sunday school so that his home department enrolment sometimes was as much as seven times that of his church membership and these he visited regularly every quarter. As a Bible teacher in church school and in teacher training he was unexcelled and would have been an honor to the department of English Bible in any of our theological seminaries.

He was always a regular subscriber to our denominational periodicals and it was a part of his weekly program to read them through from beginning to end, keeping himself fully informed and in sympathy with the work of the denomination. No appeal from his denomination, either missionary or humanitarian, domestic or foreign, was ignored but all received due and careful consideration. For his efficient and faithful service the salary was never large. His was a real Christian service. He was an outstanding example in our denomination of that class of servants of the Living God, who, well trained and equipped, fully developed and growing in mind and spirit, toil in unselfish service without undue thought of earthly compensation but whose life and service are vital to Christianity and who find their chief joy and satisfaction in the consciousness of helping him. To him the Lord will surely say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." "Thou hast been faithful . . . I will make thee ruler."

Funeral services were conducted at his late residence in West Richfield, Ohio, by Rev. W. J. Geen of Chicago, Ill., a former pastor.

A Special Representative in Europe

By JAMES H. FRANKLIN

In recent years it has become evident that conditions in the Baptist work in France required a closer study than could be made by one who is not in residence in that country. It became clear that a type of exceedingly important service was necessary which could not be rendered by the Baptist commissioner for Europe, Rev. J. H. Rushbrooke, who as the representative of Northern, Southern, Canadian and English Baptists is fully occupied with other important duties. With a view to careful and wise expenditure of money and possible reductions in view of the present financial emergency, and in order to establish closer relationships with struggling Baptist churches as well as with associations and committees in Europe, the appointment of a special representative for service in France and other European countries seemed essential. Accordingly, Professor W. O. Lewis of William Jewell College, Missouri, who by training, experience and interest seems peculiarly well qualified for this task, has been invited by the Foreign Mission Society to undertake this special service.

It gives the board of managers pleasure to announce that Dr. Lewis has accepted the invitation and will sail soon after the close of the present school year at William Jewell College. Dr. Lewis is a native of Missouri, a graduate of William Jewell College and of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville. After pastorates in St. Louis and St. Joseph, Mo., he studied for several years in Germany and since 1910 has been on the faculty of his alma mater.

He served as a chaplain with the American Expeditionary Forces in France and spent three months with the army of occupation. During this real service he became well acquainted with French Baptist leaders and has long been interested in the progress of Baptists in Europe. Dr. Lewis will make his residence in France and during the first part of his special service will give particular attention to the progress of Baptist work in France.

Individual Freedom and Magna Charta Day

By DAVID STARR JORDAN

Democracy rests solidly on personal liberty. It is said in London that "America is like England, only more so." American freedom is identical with British freedom from which it sprang, a foundation stone of which is the Magna Charta wrested from King John in 1215. The thirty-ninth article of this epoch-making document reads as follows:

"No freeman shall be arrested or detained in prison . . . or in any way molested . . . unless by the lawful judgment of his peers and by the law of the land."

In the age-long conflict of justice against privilege, the freeman's rights were further safeguarded by the affirmation that "An Englishman's home is his castle," and his body sacred from official man-handling except under legal accusation of crime. These doctrines were thus authoritatively set forth by Lord Chatbam:

"Every man's house has been called his castle . . . and why is it called his castle? Is it because it is defended by a wall, and because it is surrounded by a moat? No! It may be nothing but a straw-built shed. It may be open to all the elements; the wind may enter it, the rain may enter, but the King can not."

The Bill of Rights of 1689 emphasized personal freedom and declared "the law as it stood" in Great Britain. This act recognized the Prince and Princess of Orange (William III and Mary) as the lawful rulers of England, confirming at the same time certain provisions for the rights of the citizen and of Parliament.

Article V insists "That it is the right of subjects to petition the king, and all commitments and persecutions for such petitionings are illegal. Article IX declares "That the freedom of speech and debates or proceedings in Parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any place outside of Parliament."

In a letter to workmen of London in 1863, Lincoln said: "These sentiments of American democracy are manifestly the enduring support of the free institutions of England, so I am sure also that they constitute the only reliable basis for free institutions throughout the world It seems to have devolved on the (American) people to test whether a government established on the principles of human freedom can be maintained against an effort to build one upon the exclusive foundation of human bondage."

These declarations and others of like tenor, from Magna Charta down to the present time, form the basis of Anglo-Saxon liberty. The main provisions of the Bill of Rights were adopted in the Constitution of the United States as well as in those of the several Commonwealths. The fourth federal amendment reads as follows:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath and affirmation and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized."

A full definition of democratic freedom is implied in these words of John Stuart Mill:

"If all mankind, minus one, were of one opinion, and only one person was of contrary opinion, mankind would be no more justified in silencing that one person, than he, if he had the power would be justified in silencing mankind. Strange it is that men should admit the validity of the arguments for free discussion but object to their being 'pushed to an extreme,' not seeing that unless the reasons are good in an extreme case, they are not good in any case . . ."

"If a man does not keep step with his companion," said Thoreau, "it is just because he hears a different drummer."

From a personal letter of Mr. Amos Pinchot to Mr. Samuel Gompers, I make this illustrative quotation:

"Whether we call it democracy or liberty, the best thing we have here in America is a national ideal towards which the progressive forces and especially the labor movement are constantly working. This ideal is that the citizens shall have the most possible freedom and initiative in thought and action and the best possible opportunity to make a living, and, at the same time, to develop along natural and constructive lines . . . If the fight for democracy is to be won in this country, we must keep one thought clear and one principle sacred: the initiative and independence of the average man must be protected. It is the sole foundation of our democracy. The moment you find the American citizen disciplined to authority and trained to look for leadership to a superior class, at that moment you have lost democracy and with it all that is vital or valuable to American life."

Says Thoreau:

"There will never be a really free and enlightened state until the state comes to realize the individual as a higher and independent power from which all its own power and authority are derived, and treats him accordingly."

The Magna Charta was the first formal assertion of the principle of individual freedom which constitutes the solid basis of our national fabric, and without which our republic could never have been formed and could not endure. It is well, therefore, for us to cherish its memory, to study its significance and to place its anniversary, June 15, on the same plane as Independence Day and the birthdays of Washington and Lincoln. The third Sunday in June, as suggested by the Magna Charta Day Association, could be fitly celebrated by religious services.

A Request for Material on Prayer

Dear Mr. Editor:

I received such splendid responses to my request for material on the life of Mrs. Ingalls, that I am emboldened to make another claim upon the time and cooperation of your subscribers. I am expecting to write a new mission study book, on the theme "Prayer and Missions." It will be somewhat similar in arrangement to the book "The Bible and Missions." I am seeking for fresh and modern illustrative material. One chapter will be devoted to "Prayer in the Experience of the Missionaries"; another to "Prayer in the Life of the Native Church," and another to "Prayer in the Strategy of Missions."

Now if any of your subscribers know of material on any or all of these lines, I shall be more grateful than I can say if they will send it to me, or tell me where I can get it. If they do not have material in their own experience or personal knowledge, they may know of books which recount marked answers to prayer. I am especially eager to get instances where the founding or the location of a mission has been the outcome of prayer.

Hoping that I may have the help of our missionaries, both home and foreign, in the collection of the material sought, I am

Cordially yours,

(Signed) Helen B. Montgomery.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN

The departure of Rev. C. A. Daniel, for nine years the gracious and successful pastor of the First German-American Church, to take up his new administrative task in Chicago, was the occasion of two beautiful and delightful testimonials. Monday, May 1, the Baptist ministers' conference was held in the First Swedish-American Baptist Church, to which the pastors' wives were also invited, and while the pastors were indulging in their program the wives enjoyed a constructive conference discussing how they might better perform their high calling. Then around a bounteous board prepared by the women of the Swedish Baptist Church, Rev. O. W. Johnson, pastor, they all enjoyed the feast of good things and the flow of soul that followed. Of course, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel were the center of the thought. On Tuesday evening following the First German-American Church gave a farewell reception to them. The church was filled to overflowing with a loving and appreciative people. Dr. Gleiss presided and introduced the speakers who in turn bore testimony to the richness of the stewardship of the past nine years. Refreshments were served and God-speed and blessing bestowed upon the departing ones.

Not satisfied with taking Pastor Daniel, Chicago has called to its larger service another efficient pastor in the person of Vincent Watsick of the Serbo-Croatian Church. He too, is a brother of beautiful spirit and life.

Annual Meeting of the Detroit Union

The outstanding event of this month was the annual meeting of the Detroit Baptist Union, held Tuesday afternoon and evening, May 9, with the new Jefferson Avenue Church as hostess.

The past year has been one of trying experience, because of the industrial depression but, notwithstanding lessened receipts from several sources, every bill was paid and the treasurer's report is most gratifying, showing over $250,000 of expenditures during the year.

Superintendent Gleiss, in his annual report, voiced greater satisfaction in the missionary and evangelistic results of the year. The union has had twenty-five men and women employed during the year and much detailed information was given. During the afternoon session each was introduced and spoke of his or her work.

The Detroit Baptist Union now holds title to over $1,000,000 worth of property, largely in trust for local congregations while they are being aided in building operations or from infancy to full growth and maturity. In Detroit we are endeavoring to foster a fine spirit of cooperation whereby our whole Detroit task is considered as one, the local church independent and self-governing, realizing that its particular field is only a part of the larger field of the metropolitan area. In turn, the necessity of any individual field is the deep concern of the whole Baptist brotherhood. Just now three fine new edifices are in process of erection for three strategic fields, the building committee of the Detroit Union having general direction, and the financing being done in cooperation with and through the union.

Religious education stands high in the plans and purposes of Detroit Baptists. Splendid progress was made the past year under the leadership of Rev. A. V. Allen, but when Jefferson Avenue chose him for its pastor the Detroit Union was compelled to seek another leader. Rev. Benj. T. Leonard, of Rochester, N. Y., has been called and enters upon his new work June 1.

Detroit Baptists lead all other Protestant communions in foreign-speaking evangelism. This is a blessed work and one that is already bearing splendid fruitage.

Under the inspiring leadership of Dr. M. C. Pearson, the entire Protestant brotherhood in Detroit is working in a fine spirit of cooperation with effectiveness and power. The coming summer a city-wide campaign of outdoor evangelism will be conducted under the direction of Rev. D. L. Schultz, who has been loaned Detroit by the American Home Mission Society.

The Detroit Union is heartily committed to the Christian Center idea. The first one was established this last year in the congested downtown Negro district on Russell Street. It is already doing a potential service. Next it is planned to build a combined house of worship and Christian Center on the west side for the Poles. Rev. Jos. Rzepecki has gathered the largest Polish Baptist church in any American city and this under most discouraging conditions. The site has already been purchased and both Home Mission societies are pledged to its assistance. It should materialize this year. Rev. Morze is already making himself felt as an earnest Baptist propagandist on the east side among the great Polish community there, and without equipment or organization.

Wednesday evening the old church at Farmington, originally organized in 1826, voted to take up the task again and elected Rev. H. H. Ford pastor.

Dearborn has been on the Baptist state for several years, but with a program so pressing and full it appeared to be quite out of the possibilities. Recently Dr. H. H. Ford has been doing some intelligent and effective scout work there and has delighted our hearts with his findings. Work will open there at once and the young people of the Woodward Avenue Church, under the leadership of Rev. G. M. Rowland, will more particularly become responsible for this new work.

Dr. and Mrs. Phelps have greatly stirred the growing community known as Council Corners. A series of special meetings have resulted in large audiences, many conventions and new hopes and a larger vision.

Detroit has some thirty-eight or thirty-nine Negro Baptist churches and Dr. Gleiss informed the faithful at the annual meeting of the Detroit Union that there are more Negro Baptists in Detroit today than there are white. Every possible effort is being made to aid in the housing of these Negro brethren. Already twelve congregations have been aided to say nothing of the large value of the Negro Christian Center.

The ladies of the Jefferson Avenue Church spread an inviting board for the 450 Baptists who sat down at the annual dinner. It is not a small task to feed and serve so great a number but it was all done with remarkable skill. After Dr. Gleiss had given his wonderful report for the past year, President Smith introduced Dr. Benj. Otto, superintendent of Baptist work in Chicago, who gave a thoughtful, compelling address on "Christianizing a Metropolitan City." Dr. Otto knows the Detroit of years ago, as his father was a former honored pastor of the First German-American Baptist Church of this city. He confessed to having practiced on several local churches in his seminary days, but Tuesday night it was no practice effort. He spoke out of a rich experience, and plead for the new Americans who in the next generation will be the native Americans. We cannot speak of our great northern cities as American as they all are largely foreign because of the over-numbering foreign-speaking groups that have come here from the ends of the earth. Our great cities must be won to Jesus Christ or we will fail in our response to the Great Commission and our civilization will fail. The great dinner audience listened in wrapt attention and with much appreciation.

Meanderings of an Illinois Man

By EDWARD P. BRAND

I spent four weeks in Los Angeles and other parts of southern California. Los Angeles is a rapidly growing city. It seems to me to be over-advertised and over-boomed, yet the growth is rapid and much of it seems to be substantial. On April 30, I had the privilege of preaching for the Lincoln Heights Church, Los Angeles, of which Rev. L. T. Barkman is pastor. Brother Barkman started in the ministry in Illinois and was ordained at Aurora, Ill. After spending five years in a chapel car, he took charge of the Lincoln Heights Church about eight years ago. The church was in a very low condition. Now it has about 400 members, a good meeting house and parsonage. The Sunday school is large and the congregation filled the auditorium. Rev. A. P. Rossier went from Geneseo, Ill., to southern California and became pastor of the Compton Church near Los Angeles. He is quite successful there. On April 23 he dedicated a new meeting house, costing $28,000, and all the money was raised to clear it of indebtedness.

The writer attended First Church of Pasadena Sunday night, April 30. All the seats in the auditorium, Sunday-school room and both galleries were taken. The pastor, Dr. John M. Dean, preached a well-prepared and well-delivered sermon on the second coming of our Lord. Dr. O. P. Gifford lives in Pasadena and although he is quite aged, he is in great demand for sermons and addresses in southern California. The last prayer meeting I attended in Temple Church was large and of deep interest.

I spent three days in Salt Lake City, arriving there on Tuesday night in time for prayer meeting. In the Baptist church twenty-six persons were engaged in a covenant meeting. The meeting continued an hour and forty-five minutes with good interest. The church is looking forward with strong hope to the coming of its newly called pastor, Mr. Brounger, son of Dr. J. W. Brounger of Los Angeles.

I am now on a large ranch 182 miles southeast of Salt Lake. Last Sunday the only church service I could attend was a Mormon service in a schoolhouse. The people did not know who I was but the leader asked me to speak if I had anything to say. I accepted the invitation and talked twenty minutes on the proper observance of the Christian Sabbath. I had noticed among the Mormons and many other people in the extreme West a strong tendency to do secular work on Sunday. I was kindly treated but the meeting was strongly Mormon. It seems to me, however, that the spirit of Mormonism is being somewhat modified from what it was in earlier days.

This is May 10 and the snow is fourteen inches on the level and it is still snowing heavily. Thousands of sheep have been sheared within the past two weeks and taken with the lambs to the mountain ranges. There is great fear that many of them will perish in this deep snow.

The state of Utah has yet much good undeveloped land but a large portion of it will forever be a barren desert. There are veins of fine coal in this state. Some of the mines are closed by the coal strike but some of them are putting out large quantities of coal.

The Chicago Training School Is Much Alive

The report is being circulated that the Baptist Missionary Training School in Chicago, is giving up its work. This is not so. The building has been sold to Negroes for the purpose of maintaining a training school of their own, but the training school will certainly continue. The past year has been one of the best in the history of the school. The courses offered are exceedingly fine in point of academic standard and cultural point of view; the practice work very much enlarged over former years and supervised most carefully; the student body composed of the highest type of young womanhood.

The present senior class has had an enrolment of twenty-three, two of whom have already been sent to Spanish-speaking fields outside of the United States. Of these twenty-three, ten are college graduates; one a graduate and registered nurse; three normal school graduates, and one part college. The others are high-school students who have taken the three-year course.

The forty-two years of prestige form the background for the splendid years of service which are beckoning us on. We have always been in the lead and we shall continue to be. The future is to be greater than the past. For our work we ask the kindly cooperation of all Baptists pledging you that in all things we are faithful to Baptist standards and principles.

Just where our new quarters will be we are not at the present time sure, but we are not planning to leave Chicago. We expect to be able to give this information at the time of the meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis. Help us in our forward look by contradicting the false rumor regarding our school. MRS. CLARA D. PINKHAM.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MASSACHUSETTS

ON SUNDAY, MAY 7, Rev. E. S. Philbrook, pastor of First Church, Randolph, gave the hand of fellowship to thirty-three new members, twenty-seven of whom were received by baptism, which makes seventy-four added to the church during the present pastorate of two years. The Sunday school has increased to 350. A Bible class of sixty men is taught by the pastor, whose salary has been twice raised. A young people's society and a troop of Boy Scouts have been organized. Offerings have been nearly doubled, and improvements are being made upon the church property.

BROADWAY CHURCH, CAMBRIDGE, Rev. Austen T. Kempton, pastor: The church closed its year with all bills paid. More money has been raised and expended than ever before. Ninety-two have united with the church this year, most of them by baptism. The Sunday school numbers 500. The pastor is beginning his eleventh year of service.

DR. ROBERT W. VAN KIRK HAS BEEN constantly in demand as pulpit supply since coming East. Through the summer months he will be the supply pastor at Osterville, on the Cape where the Baptists and Methodists have joined their forces. There is a large colony of summer people; many of whom are regular worshippers. Dr. and Mrs. Van Kirk are in the parsonage.

TWO OF THE BUSIEST BAPTISTS are Dr. F. F. Peterson and Miss Gertrude Hartley, the educational leaders among young Massachusetts Baptist workers. They are at the head of the monthly workers' council, held in Kingsley Hall, where much intelligent interest is kindled, and then follows instruction in teaching efficiency.

EASTER SUNDAY was a notable day in the history of Brookline Church. The pastor, Rev. S. M. Lindsay, baptized nine members of the Bible school at the morning service and extended the hand of fellowship to sixteen others, who united by letter and experience. In three instances, an entire family was received. The Easter exercises of the Bible school took place at noon and the offering taken was given to the Baptist Home in Cambridge. Congregations taxed the capacity of the church at every service. April 29, two more were baptized. New life is evident in every department of church work.

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE STATE convention, an interest was started three years ago, at Fulton Heights, in the Malden district, and was housed in a portable chapel. Soon the chapel had to be enlarged and a church constituted and organized. At the public recognition, Pastors F. M. Holt, D. J. Nelly and Edw. B. Dolan officiated. It is a developing field, and a promising enterprise. Rev. B. E. Tucker is the pastor.

DR. HERBERT S. JOHNSON has recently transferred his membership from First Church, Boston, to the Brookline Church, where he had the joy of baptizing his two older children, also Mrs. Johnson, into that fellowship. Mrs. Johnson came from the Congregationalists. At a hearty and largely attended farewell reception recently given by the Boston church, appreciation of his long pastorate at the Warren Avenue and his later service in the First Church was fully expressed. The sustained and unexampled generosity of Mrs. Johnson and himself merited unusual recognition. A tribute, chaste and eloquent in expression, richly bound and embossed, accompanied by a bank of Beauty roses, was presented to Dr. and Mrs. Johnson at the reception, and befittingly crowned a delightful occasion.

CONNECTICUT

ON MONDAY, MAY 8, THE HARTFORD ministers' meeting was held in First Church. "The Denominational Situation" was outlined by Dr. A. B. Coats, general secretary of the Connecticut Convention, followed by an informal discussion. Officers elected for the ensuing year are: President, Frank B. Haggard, pastor of Asylum Avenue Church, Hartford; secretary, H. B. Hutchins, pastor of Olivet Church, Hartford.

ON EASTER SUNDAY, Rev. D. P. Gaines, pastor of First Church, Waterbury, received seven candidates into the membership—four by letter, three by baptism. This church is in an evangelistic campaign which opened Sunday, May 21, with Rev. D. B. MacQueen, Bridgeport, as preacher.

REV. FRANK B. HAGGARD, pastor of Asylum Avenue Church, Hartford, has just closed the Sunday evening community services. This was a new venture for the church. The interest and attendance demonstrated the worth-whileness of the undertaking and it is planned to feature this service more strongly another year. The pastor received sixteen into the fellowship of the church on Easter Sunday, eight by baptism.

THE FIRST ANNUAL MEETING of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Connecticut was held Thursday, May 11, in the Y. W. C. A. auditorium, Hartford. After devotional exercises led by Mrs. H. B. Sloat, Hartford, and the welcome by Mrs. E. H. Crosby, Hartford, the officers of the organization presented their reports giving the history of the year's work. This was followed by the presentation of the associational officers. The Connecticut missionaries serving under the woman's board were presented and severally spoke of their work. The W. W. G. of the South Baptist Church, Hartford, put on the play "The Missionary Drug Store." The session closed with an address by Miss Helen Hudson of the New York office. After luncheon served by the ladies of South Church, the devotional service was led by Mrs. D. B. MacQueen. Paul G. Meng and Miss Albertine Bischoff spoke respectively on the work in China and Porto Rico. State campaign director for the Woman's Continuation Campaign, Mrs. J. D. Rough, made her report which showed that the women of Connecticut went $10,000, "over the top," their original quota having been $37,500. The associational loving cups went to the following churches: Stonington, First; Bridgeport, Memorial; Meriden, Main Street; Warrenville; Norwich, Third; Hartford, Asylum Avenue. The reading contest for the ensuing year was outlined by Mrs. G. C. Laudenslager. The children of the Hartford Italian mission, under the direction of Miss Bertha Bridgeman, presented "Her Choice." Officers for the following year: President, Miss Mary

L. Howard, Hartford; first vice-president, Mrs. A. L. Mulloy, Waterbury; second vice-president, Mrs. C. S. Carter, Ansonia; secretary, Miss E. Louise Carey, Hartford; treasurer, Mrs. A. I. Ward, New Haven; woman's representative on the Board of Promotion, Mrs. J. D. Rough, Norwich.

VERMONT

THE FISCAL YEAR for Vermont State Convention has just closed and it is a little better than 82 per cent of the splendid showing in collections last year which it is feared is considerably better than the states throughout the Northern Baptist Convention will average. Out of the 111 churches in the state, ninety-nine of them contributed to the New World Movement during the past year, the twelve not contributing being churches in name only and having neither pastor nor service. Ninety-six per cent of the membership in the churches within the state have contributed during the past year. It also has been a good year spiritually and numerically. The state convention and allied organizations held their annual meetings at Ludlow, May 22-24.

THE LITTLE CHURCH AT WEST WARDSDORO, Dr. W. W. Hackett, pastor, has sustained a great loss by the translation of a familiar figure, their blind veteran, Rev. H. M. Hopkinson, who was called home April 8, in the eighty-second year of his age after being ill about one month. Mr. Hopkinson was, for four years, a missionary in Burma and upon his return in the early eighties became pastor at West Wardsboro. Since then he has had various pastorates in Vermont and near-by states until about seven years ago when he closed his work at South Ackworth, N. H. and came to West Wardsboro to spend his remaining days. His wife and two sons, Dr. George of Akron, Ohio, and S. Henry, principal of the Berkley School in Boston, survive him. The funeral service was conducted by Dr. Hackett, pastor, assisted by Rev. Dennison of the Federated church at Wardsboro.

THE ENOSBURG FALLS CHURCH, Rev. E. E. Scates, pastor, recently observed Heart Sunday. A Jesus valentine was given to the boys and girls in attendance and the pastor spoke on "The Adventures of a Little Heart."

THE CHURCH AT NORTH SPRINGFIELD, Rev. E. C. Weeks pastor, has recently lost three of its older members; John Cook, who was formerly Sunday School superintendent and quite prominent in church matters, A. J. Gibbs who, although past ninety, was still interested in the welfare of the church, and Deacon Amos D. Heald who united with the church in 1866 and at the time of his decease was one of the trustees. All three will be greatly missed in the church and community.

THE CHURCH AT LUDLOW, Rev. W. B. Chase pastor, has demonstrated the value of the Christian Endeavor movement for present day conditions. For some years the Christian Endeavor Society has been one of the most active and effective branches of the church work. This society, for the past three years, has won the banner for greatest efficiency in the Black River Union which is probably the most active Christian Endeavor Union in Vermont. This award is based on accurate records of work done according to the efficiency chart of the national society. Many of the additions to the church by baptism have come from the Christian Endeavor Society. Much of this success is due to Deacon Charles F. Brown who since boyhood has been an active worker with the young people and who is now president of the Black River Union.

REV. KENNETH MACLEOD, pastor of the church at Sutton, will have the loving sympathy of many friends in the great affliction and loss that he has sustained by the sudden death of his able and beloved wife who was taken ill with acute anemia on Friday, May 5, and after the operation "went home" on Saturday, the 6th. Besides her husband, she leaves three little children, two, three and four years old.

NEW YORK

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES of the Theological Seminary and the College of Colgate University will be held June 17-20. A feature of the week's activities will be the ceremony of laying the corner stone of the new Richard M. Colgate memorial dormitory, conducted by his son, Mr. Henry A. Colgate, a member of the University board of trustees. This building will be erected at a cost of approximately $175,000, and will be large enough to accommodate eighty-four men. Seven men will be graduated from the seminary and 103 from the college. Alumni headquarters will be in Taylor Hall, the Y. M. C. A. House. All alumni are requested to register at their earliest convenience, and are invited to make use of the rooms. Rooms in the college dormitories, free of charge will be available for use by alumni and their families. Meals will be served during the week in the college commons. Requests for the reservation of rooms should be sent to Prof. Alfred E. Alton, Hamilton, N. Y.

THE FOURTH ANNUAL TRAINING SCHOOL for leaders at "Old Oak Farm" will be held at the Central Park Church, New York, 235 East 83rd Street (between Second and Third Avenues), at 8 p.m., on Monday evenings, May 22 and 29, June 5 and 12. An excellent program has been planned and the topics for discussion will be interesting and educational. Any young people in our Baptist churches wishing to volunteer their services as leaders among the children at the farm should get in touch immediately with Mrs. Florence M. Stowell, chairman of administration, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City, Room 1038.

A GOOD DAY WAS ENJOYED May 7, by First Church of Batavia, Rev. George K. Warren, pastor. Although no special services have been held during the winter, at the communion service forty-four persons received the hand of fellowship. Twenty-eight of these were baptized on Easter day. Most of the young people attended an instruction class conducted by the pastor for six weeks preceding Easter. In the evening, Rev. Mahlon H. Day, home secretary of Canton Christian College, China, gave a splendid address on conditions in China and the work of the college.

AT THE MAY COMMUNION SERVICE sixteen received the hand of fellowship at Ballston Spa Church. Thirteen young people from the Sunday school and one adult were baptized by Pastor D. E. Sprague on Easter Sunday, two have been received by letter and one restored. Present membership of 353 is the largest in many years. A monthly fellowship supper with group meetings for S. S. officers and teachers led by Supt. E. L. Parsons, a Bible study group led by the pastor and a young people's group led by Mrs. W. N. Sowle, following the supper and followed by the regular weekly prayer meeting has been helpful to our work.

CALVARY CHURCH, YONKERS, has purchased a site for a new building with a 169-foot frontage on North Broadway. Plans for the building have not yet been prepared. Calvary Church is one of the youngest churches in the city. Rev. John Henry Day, the present pastor, has been with the church for six years. He has taken an active interest in planning interesting programs for the young people, who have become an integral part of the church.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

FIFTY-FOUR CHURCHES IN PENNSYLVANIA have reported stewardship leagues with a total of 1700 members enrolled.

PASTOR A. M. GREGG and his family were tendered a reception by the Milton Church on Thursday evening, April 27. The churches of the community were represented by the president of the Ministerial Association, Dr. Raymond M. West, Dean Llewellyn Phillips and Dr. Leroy Stephens brought greetings from Lewisburg. Mr. Wm. D. Golightly who has been acting as pulpit supply and Mr. Neisser of the educational board also spoke briefly. Mr. Gregg made a happy response. There was a large attendance and a joyous and hopeful spirit prevailed.

PASTORAL CHANGES: Rev. J. A. Crown goes from Portland to the Hickory St. Church, Scranton; Rev. H. F. Crossin becomes pastor at Royersford; the Lebanon Church has secured the services of Rev. John L. Sawyer. Dr. George E. Rees is preaching for the Glenside Church as stated supply. Two members of the graduating class at Crozer Seminary have accepted pastorates in the eastern part of the state. Albert C. Cheetham goes to Prospect Park Church at Moores, and Raymond J. Cornish to Canton.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

MR. W. W. ANDERSON, of Monessen, has baptized twenty-six during his nine months' pastorate. The church is sending Mr. Anderson to Indianapolis.

FIRST CHURCH, MCKEESPORT, REV. J. S. BRAKER, PASTOR, bade farewell and God-speed to Miss Edna Oden, its missionary to Ntondo, Lac Ntomba, Congo Belge, Africa. She sailed from New York, Tuesday, May 16.

THE SHADY AVENUE CHURCH, REV. R. N. JESSUP, pastor, held its annual business meeting Wednesday evening, May 10. Full and encouraging reports were received from all departments. The current expense fund shows a balance of $240 with all bills paid. Twenty-five additions were reported for the year. The question of a new building is under consideration and Mr. G. E. Merrill, secretary of architecture of the Home Mission Society, will be called to advise the committee.

THE GLASSPORT CHURCH has extended a call to C. A. Downing, of First Church, McKeesport. Mr. Downing, a licensed preacher, has served the Industry Church most acceptably for several years.

REV. ROBERT M. CAMPBELL entered upon his pastorate of the Johnston Avenue Church, May 1.

MANY IN PENNSYLVANIA will be interested to know that Dr. J. S. Kirtley will serve as acting pastor of the Mt. Morris church, New York City, during May and June.

NEW JERSEY

FIRST CHURCH, ATLANTIC CITY, observed on May 7 the seventh anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Hinson V. Howlett. Goals set for the occasion were: At least seven for baptism; at least seven to be welcomed to membership; and $700 for special items in the church program of summer activities. Twenty-three were welcomed, and the offerings of the day went beyond the goal set. It was noted that in the seven years offerings for current expenses had increased 45 per cent, and for benevolences, 735 per cent.

EMMANUEL, RIDGEWOOD, DR. T. H. SPRAGUE, pastor: The church is able to report over $25,480 turned over to the New World Movement for the two years ending April 30. The pastor is to be sent to the Northern Convention in Indianapolis as a delegate from the church. Fifty of the men of the Church Fellowship Club spent the week-end, May 19-21, at Culver's Lake. A community vacation Bible school movement has been inaugurated; four schools will be held, July 5 to 28, one of which will be in Emmanuel Church house.

THE ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING of Mt. Pleasant Church, Rev. Sidney W. Powell, pastor, was a joyous occasion, although for years the church has been facing large deficits at such meetings. At the close of the year the only bill unpaid was $120. The church has reduced the $30,000 mortgage to $14,000, and expects to further reduce this amount during the next three months. The people have paid into this fund $16,738.90. During the year twenty-nine were baptized and twenty-nine others added. The membership is now 521.

Atlantic District Meeting

The first annual meeting of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society and the Woman's Home Mission Society was held in Peddie Memorial Church, Newark, May 3-5. While, as the pastor, Mr. Twomey, said, "The word 'welcome' would be found nowhere," one felt it in every handshake. Education and promotion were the key notes of the opening day.

Simultaneous conferences on missionary education, children's, young people's and White Cross work had been planned but so many wished to participate in more than one, this being especially true of missionary education and White Cross, these followed each other during the morning session.

The theme for the afternoon session was "Cultivation of the Field." Addresses were by Miss Lucinda Johnson, of the Board of Promotion, Mrs. Nathan Wood, of the National Foreign Society, and Mrs. Charles A. Brooks, National Home Society. Miss Dorothy Hume, missionary among the Indians in Arizona and Mrs. W. W. Moore, of the Morgan Settlement in Pittsburgh. Addresses by Miss Frances Tenace of India and Miss Sarah Slater of Burma were heard with interest. The World Wide Guild banquet was presided over by the District Secretary Miss Frances Langstroth with the New Jersey secretary, Miss Mary F. Buchanan, as toast mistress.

On Thursday evening after a word of greeting from Dr. Anna Degenring of India, and Dr. Clara Leech of China, Mrs.

Arthur Strickland brought little Italy home to the heart with her impersonation of Michael and Marie. The suggestion for Friday's program was evangelism and inspiration. Miss Mildred Kaminski, Americanization secretary, and Miss Belle Chisakoffsky, missionary among the Italians deepened appreciation of the need of work among foreigners. Mrs. J. M. Baker of Ongole, India, sketched the history of that mission. Mrs. W. A. Montgomery conducted a forum on methods for missionary societies. Mrs. George W. Doane and Mrs. E. O. Silver entertained the district board, the missionaries and missionary mothers at a luncheon in celebration of the first annual meeting of the Union District. A missionary banquet at which Mrs. Howard Wayne Smith presided was also a delightful feature of the meetings.

An invitation was extended by the Woman's Mission Society of Philadelphia Association to meet with that body in May, 1923, and was accepted.

The following officers were elected: Pres., Mrs. H. H. Skerrett; home administrative vice-pres., Mrs. Willard Smith, Haddonfield, N. J.; foreign administrative vice-pres., Mrs. Charles Gauger, Philadelphia; home mission vice-pres., Mrs. Ray L. Hudson, Philadelphia; foreign mission vice-pres., Mrs. George W. Doane, South Orange, N. J.; Rec. Sec., Mrs. A. L. Kennelly, Plainsfield, N. J.; treas., Mrs. W. E. Morris, Philadelphia.

ILLINOIS

WOMAN'S BAPTIST MISSION UNION (Chicago Association) held its last meeting before the summer vacation on May 9 in Morgan Park Church. Over 500 attended, with forty-four churches represented. Miss Maud Brook spoke on "Our Home," bringing a clear vision of the work done in the Bacon Home for Missionaries' Children, of which Miss Brook is the head. The kindergarten department of the Training School was presented by Miss Carman. During the luncheon hour a conference of Americanization workers was most helpful. Mr. Emil Tribolet (home on furlough from Burma), in an address on "Thirty Years in Burma," gave his opinion of the immediate needs in that country, emphasizing the known fact of the necessary adaptability of our missionaries. The closing period of the day was devoted to an inspirational message, by Mrs. J. W. Hoyt, on "Standards of Christian Living." The music of the day was furnished by members of Morgan Park Church, Mrs. Hartley Laycock and Mrs. Milton Cruse singing, with Mrs. Leonard Cox at the piano.

FORTY NEW MEMBERS received the hand of fellowship May 7 in First Church, Peoria. At this service the associate pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. John V. Whiting, were presented with a purse of gold and asked to attend the N. B. C. in Indianapolis. The pastor, Dr. Joseph C. Hazen, has been sent by the church for six years. The financial year closed April 30 with all bills paid and a good cash surplus in the treasury. The every-member canvass was doubtless the most thorough and successful in the history of the church. The Agar plan has been followed for five years with great success.

IOWA

GOOD MUSIC, CONGREGATIONAL SINGING led by an enthusiastic director, and practical messages by the pastor, Lewis Jacobson, give the evening services of First Church, Sioux City, an appeal which is appreciated by the general public as well as the church members. Thirty-eight persons received the hand of fellowship at a recent Wednesday evening service. Since last August, the beginning of the present pastorate, 135 have been added to the church, seventy-five of whom came by baptism. Fifty-one have come in since January 1. Evidence of the work Mr. J. L. Pickett is doing on the mission fields in Sioux City is shown in the fact that ten adults have recently been baptized from Glendale. Total receipts for the Contin-nation Campaign Fund are $412.50; for the New World Movement since January 1, $5,279.07. This makes a grand total of $24,373.25 which has been paid toward the New World Movement during the last two years. The total amount pledged for the four year period was $50,118.50. Miss Carolyn J. Wheeler, recently of Chicago, is now assistant and secretary to the pastor.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, FIRST CHURCH, J. F. Catlin, pastor, reports for the year ending April 30: Current expenses, $5,175.41; benevolences, $2,926.66, $2,790.71 of which was for the New World Movement; $6,440.46 was added to the building fund, making a total of $22,511.54 cash on hand. The Ladies' Aid Society cleared $2,927.38. All told the church raised $15,301.73 during the year. The average Sunday-school attendance was 246. Sixty-five new members were received into the church, thirty-seven of them by baptism. There is a tithe's league of more than fifty members.

OHIO

SINCE BEGINNING HIS PASTORATE at Piqua Church, six months ago, Dr. Franklin F. Fenner has received seventy-five into the membership of which number more than fifty have been received by baptism. The church is in a prosperous condition.

FIRST CHURCH, TOLEDO: The pastor, Rev. A. K. Morris, and members of First Church, Toledo, have been made happy in the prospect of a new church edifice. Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Bartley, who have been connected with the church for over forty years, presented a gift of $25,000 with which to purchase a new site. No effort has been made to raise any additional funds but there is $11,000, a gift from another source to be used for building. This church is the mother church of Baptists in Toledo. It has for years maintained an able work in a rapidly changing downtown district. At the present time its membership is scattered over the entire city with only forty supporting members living within a radius of one-half mile of the church. For nearly seventy years this church has worshipped in the same building. Easter Day forty-eight members were received into the church, twenty-eight of whom came by baptism. The offering amounted to $2,600, $1,000 of which was the result of the women's effort for the Continuation Fund. On the following Sunday morning over $300 was raised for the Anti-saloon League. Mr. Morris has been using the motion pictures with his Sunday evening sermons which has attracted large audiences, but this month the motion pictures will be omitted and special services are being given with attractions in music and dramatization.

THE NEW ASSOCIATIONAL EVANGELIST, Mr. Maier, recently said of Little Muskegon Church, "It is missionary and cannot die." Rev. J. W. Weddell, acting pastor of First Church in Marietta, has been a source of inspiration to the weak rural churches.

GLENNVILLE CHURCH, CLEVELAND: Rev. R. D. Wood, of Conneaut, began his work here April 30, with good congregations.

COLUMBIA CHURCH, CINCINNATI: Since Jan. 1, sixty-eight new members, fifty-two of them by baptism, have been added. The church services have nearly doubled in attendance. Over 100 attend prayer meetings regularly. The revival spirit is in evidence. Rev. C. A. Mitchell has been pastor since the beginning of the year.

MICHIGAN

Annual Meeting of Central District

The ninth annual meeting of Central District of the W. A. B. F. M. S. and the first annual meeting of Central District as a joint District of W. A. B. H. M. S. and W. A. B. F. M. S. was held at Battle Creek, Mich., May 3-5. About 150 delegates registered. The sessions were notable for the number of fine speakers assembled for the program, among whom were Mrs. Smith Thomas Ford, Mrs. Andrew MacLeish, Mrs. John Nuveen, Mrs. H. E. Goodman, Miss Mary Hyndman, Mrs. Clara Pinkham, all of Chicago; Miss Harriet Cooper, Detroit, Miss Vickland, Assam, Rev. L. F. Wood, Africa, and Mr. Maou, China. All of the speakers struck a very serious note in their addresses but also one of great faith and consecration.

The president, Mrs. Frank J. Miller of Chicago, made a delightful presiding officer. She was assisted by Mrs. MacLeish, Mrs. Hilton and Mrs. Edward Wilson. A banquet was served at the Presbyterian church Thursday evening after which some inspiring and clever toasts were given. A helpful "Round Table" was conducted by Mrs. Enlette, Mrs. Nuveen and Mrs. Wadsworth at the Friday morning session. At the business session a few minor changes were made in the by-laws. The election of officers resulted in the reelection of all officers with the exception of recording secretary and Miss Florence E. Grant of Birmingham, Mich., was elected to fill that vacancy. A district song, district motto and district slogan were adopted. District motto: "Not to be ministered unto, but to minister." District slogan: "Learning, loving, giving, working, praying, living."

Among the resolutions adopted was the following: Resolved; That, as a district, we urge upon all the churches and the women's circles at this critical time, loyalty to the great denomination of which we are a part: that we discourage criticism and emphasize our great denominational program, making all our work a strong factor toward unity in the denomination, emphasizing the constructive things which make for harmony and giving ourselves much to prayer."

MISSOURI

REV. GROVER C. SCHWARTZ, pastor of Tabernacle Church, St. Louis, has been compelled to give up his work and go into a government sanitarium for treatment. Brother Schwartz was a chaplain in the U. S. Army during the war and while in the service acquired certain disabilities which have grown upon him. He did a wonderful work in Tabernacle Church. Every department was prosperous and large crowds waited upon his ministry. Sunday school increased over 90 per cent under his leadership. Exactly 101 were added to the fellowship, forty-four by baptism and fifty-seven by letter. The church passed through the most difficult times in fifteen years with every bill paid and no deficit. Mr. Schwartz was with this church only sixteen months but it is with sadness that it parts with him.

DR. D. J. EVANS, PASTOR of First Church, Kansas City, was invited to preach in Calvary Church, Washington, D. C., on May 21, morning and evening, and accepted. Rev. Elmer A. Love, assistant pastor of First Church, has received a unanimous call from First Church of Marshall. He has accepted and leaves the work in Kansas City June 1. The business men's Bible class had 551 men in attendance May 7. The goal is $800 to 1,000 for May 14. This is the end of a four-weeks' drive for new members. Total in Sunday school May 6 was 1,647.

NEBRASKA

Mr. F. P. TIMMEL, a veteran of the Civil War, a homesteader in Nebraska and for many years a deacon in First Church of Western, died recently at the age of seventy-eight. Funeral services were held at First Church, Rev. E. M. Owings officiating. Six sons survive him.

KANSAS

Rev. W. A. HOLLADAY closed his pastorate at Peabody on April 30. During the three years of his work there sixty-five members were received into the church, forty-six by baptism, making a net gain of 35 per cent. Benevolences increased fourfold. The Sunday school attendance now taxes the capacity of the building.

NORTH DAKOTA

BISMARCK: Director of religious education, Rev. E. Wiese, assisted Pastor L. R. Johnson in a series of revival meetings. Mr. Johnson speaks very highly of the work and of the results obtained in the church. Four have already been baptized; others are expected soon.

NEWPORT: Rev. C. W. Finwall will lead the Newport Church in a brief series of meetings, May 14-21, and will baptize a number of candidates.

Rev. C. W. FINWALL's daughter, Edith, has recently undergone another operation in Bismarck. She is rapidly recovering.

ROSEGLLEN: The lumber has been ordered for the new church building, and it is expected that it will reach North Dakota by June 1.

CRYSTAL AND GRAFTON: Rev. B. H. Thorlakson began his work as missionary-pastor at Crystal and Grafton, April 1. Annual church meeting was held April 4.

Pacific Coast

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Rev. CROWELL D. EDDY has been pastor of Covina Church for two years. Under his leadership there has been steady growth. In the recent Continuation Campaign the W. W. G. went over the top. Other members did not do so well, but considering that almost every family was affected by the freeze which visited California last winter, there is reason for satisfaction with the results of the campaign, especially as many paid their back pledges.

Mrs. NIRA STENGER, BORN IN ZANESVILLE, Ohio, in 1846, passed away in Pasadena, April 15. Her husband, W. H. Stenger, who survives her, is a minister of the gospel, and has had successful pastorates both in the East and West. Of her five children living to grow up, all became missionaries or were preparing for missionary life. The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. B. B. Jacques, of Calvary Church, assisted by Dr. John Marvin Dean, Dr. O. P. Gifford and Rev. John Newcomb, missionary on furlough from India.

OCEAN BEACH CHURCH, SAN DIEGO, Rev. Rolla E. Brown, pastor, "has decided to arise and build." On May 10 was laid the cornerstone of the new structure which is expected to cost about $15,000. The principal address was delivered by Dr. W. F. Harper, executive secretary of the Southern California Convention. Others who took part in the program were Rev. L. P. Valentine of Scott Memorial Church, Rev. W. J. Beaven of Logan Heights Church, Rev. F. O. Belden and Rev. Floy T. Barkman of First Church, all of San Diego, and Rev. G. M. Parks, of National City. Mr. F. S. Runyon, chairman of the building committee, presided at the services. The new edifice is to be in the Spanish mission style of architecture, and will be the largest and best equipped building in that part of San Diego.

TWO YEARS AGO TREMONT CHURCH, Pasadena, Rev. John Bentzien, pastor, accepted for the New World Movement an apportionment of over $17,000 to be paid in four years. The church has 376 members, none of them wealthy, yet the amount had been promptly paid and this year the church went over the top $465. The total benevolence account of the church for the past year was $5,500; current expense account about the same. The church has raised from all sources $11,000. During the past year the Sunday school, David P. Ward, superintendent, has maintained a monthly meeting of teachers and officers with average attendance of over thirty; also an excellent teachers' training class with an attendance of over eighteen. The average attendance of the Sunday school is over 200. Mr. Bentzien was associate pastor with Dr. J. W. Brounger for over eight years.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

BERKELEY BAPTIST DIVINITY SCHOOL held its commencement April 2-May 1. The alumni dinner was given Saturday evening; on Sunday morning the educational sermon by Rev. E. A. Hanley and the missionary sermon by Rev. P. C. Wright; on Monday came the ministers' conference on "The Minister and His Work" with five addresses followed by discussions. The commencement address by Rev. James Francis was delivered before the largest audience ever assembled at commencement. The graduates are Elmer A. Fridell, for the past year assistant to Rev. John Snape, Oakland; Kenneth G. Hobart, son of Dr. Charles Hobart, and prepared for work abroad; Hubert C. Matthews, successful pastor at Santa Clara; and Victor S. Silke, with Y. M. C. A. experience. The annual report of President Hill revealed the fact that the affairs of the school are in a healthy and hopeful condition. The year's expenses have been met, all obligations on account of the new building, costing over $100,000, have been paid. The treasurer's report showed a total of permanent assets in the amount of $234,000 with no debts. All of the proposed plans of the president for enlargement were heartily adopted by the board of trustees.

SUNDAY, APRIL 30 an ecclesiastical council unanimously voted the new Thousand Oaks Baptist Church of Berkeley into the fellowship of the San Francisco Bay Association. This church was duly organized on Lincoln's Birthday, February 12, with sixty-seven constituent members, Rev. Albert Ehrgott, pastor. The following participated in the recognition program: Frank N. Davidson, moderator; Prof. W. F. Martin, clerk; Rev. J. N.

Garst, Pres. C. M. Hill, Prof. John W. Johnson, Rev. C. E. Tingley, Rev. Elijah A. Hanley, Rev. C. H. Hobart, Rev. A. S. Phelps, Mr. Hugh Thomas and Mrs. H. A. Johnson. The new Thousand Oaks Church has secured a strategic building site, and is securing the necessary funds for the erection of a modern house of worship.

Apology and Polemic in the New Testament, by Andrew D. Heffern. New York:
Macmillan Co.

The contents of this volume are a course of lectures prepared for the John Bohlen
Lectureship in the Protestant Divinity School in Philadelphia. The course was to be delivered in 1915. The author died a few days after completing the manuscript. He was an eminent scholar, especially in the department of New Testament literature and theology, a graduate of Harvard, and a student of the universities of Berlin and Bonn; and later, for twenty years a professor in the Philadelphia Divinity School. The author maintains that many of the words of Jesus in the Gospels and many portions of the letters of sacred writers are polemic and apologetic. Of course this statement is readily verified in such Pauline letters as those to the Romans, Galatians and Colossians; but much of the polemic portions is missed by the average reader in the more general writings. The author treats largely of the Judaistic and Gnostic controversies. The student of church history has not been uninformed on these subjects; but these lectures enter more fully into the details and particulars of the subject.
They are written more for scholars and specialists than for a lay reader, and yet the latter may study them with much profit. Needed light is thrown on many phrases and terms which are at least perplexing. We are impressed in reading—rather, in studying—the contents, with how much there is to know about the New Testament which has not been discovered.
Close Bible students will find this volume a rare educator in New Testament literature and the import of many of its terms and references.

The Community Daily Vacation Bible School, by E. C. Knapp, general secretary, Inland Empire Sunday school Association. New York: F. H. Revell Co.
$1 net.

An excellent manual, based on practical experience, dealing with the community, as distinguished from the denominational school. It tells how to organize, finance, advertise and conduct the school.
The various chapters deal with such subjects as music, story-telling, handwork, dramatics, games, discipline, etc., concerning which all beginners want to know and of which others feel they never know enough. The vacation school habit is fast growing, and every book which deals with the subject in a practical way is welcome to the workers.

Satan, His Personality, Power and Overthrow, by Edward M. Bounds. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25.

The revered author of this volume had gone to his rest before his books were published. Friends, discovering the manuscripts of several books and believing in their great spiritual value, prepared them for the press under the general title of "The Bounds Spiritual Life Books." The title indicates the contents of the volume.

The viewpoint of the author is the old-fashioned orthodox demonology. It is written in a most readable phraseology as is that of a Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" or a sermon of Moody's—simple, clear and strong. Bible quotations are woven into its composition like threads of gold into the warp and woof of the cloth. It is didactic and devotional. A veritable little classic on a subject not often discussed in these times.

On the Rim of the World, by J. Paterson-Smyth. New York: F. H. Revell Co.
75 cents net.

A little book of consolation and hope for that great multitude of people which stands "on the rim of the world" looking out into the undiscovered country into which their loved ones have gone. A book which looks away from spiritualism to the saner teachings which our Lord and his apostles bring. Undoubtedly it will be of help to some who desire to be free from the fear of death.

"It Is to Laugh"

S. K. Ratcliffe of the Manchester Guardian, who returned from a speaking tour in the Middle West recently, in which he followed immediately on the heels of Mrs.
Asquith, was asked whether he considered his much-talked-of compatriot had made a hit in the West. "Well," he replied, "I didn't notice any inclination among Western mothers to name their babies Margot."
—New York Evening Post.

A Sunday school superintendent, a graduate of Yale, was deploring the fact that children of the present generation do not memorize the Scriptures as they did a generation ago. "I'll tell you of a practical joke," he announced to the children,
"that a student once tried to play on the old president of Yale. He removed the Bible from the desk and put a dictionary in its place. Next morning at chapel the president announced that he would read the 119th Psalm. He opened the dictionary, and so perfectly had he committed the Psalm that no one ever knew that the change had been made, except the president and the boy who did it." He paused a moment for this to take effect, when a small voice piped up, "How did you find it out, Mr. Mead?"—Lippincott's.

A Cornish joke was about a St. Just man who had been away in America for a good many years. On his return to Cornwall and to St. Just the first thing he did was to go into the churchyard and see which of his old friends had passed away during his absence. When he arrived in the churchyard one of his old friends put his hand up out of a grave to shake hands with him. Mr. Money was not very surprised at this tale, as he knew there was a good deal of superstition existing among Cornish folk. After a short pause the narrator of the tale said to him:

"Do you believe it, sir?"

When he said that he didn't, the reply was:—

"Well, I do, for his old friend was the grave-digger."

MUSIC REVIEW

From Carl Fischer, New York, N. Y.

- The River of Joy.....Jones ($0.10)
- Rejoice, Ye People.....Kingsley ($0.12)
- Still, Still with Thee.....Nevin ($0.10)
- Gracious Saviour.....Sears ($0.12)

Four serviceable anthems are listed above. All are of the popular type known as "hymn-anthems," simple in structure and style, not original enough to attract attention by any particular veins of strange statements, and not technically difficult to any degree offensive to the average chorus-choir forces. The Jones anthem is a melodious setting of an interesting text by Frederick H. Martens; the organ accompaniment has enough independent thematic flow to render it above the average in interest. Its tuneful sweetness should give it a wide popularity. The Kingsley chorus is most fitted for Easter-tide, but could be used for any festive church occasion. The means used are strictly choral and in several passages the modal harmonies used give a most effective touch of ecclesiastical style. A chorus which would work out the suggested shading and expression-markings with care would find this choral number one of unusual value. The setting of the familiar and much-loved hymn by Harriet Beecher Stowe, by Nevin, is of a more sentimental order, and less musical value than the two preceding titles. The composer has done less in the way of digesting his musical material, less in the workshop-effort to set forth his ideas with the best possible background of technical effects. He has thrown more responsibility upon the singers of the anthem—which is easier on the creative music of the composer but less satisfactory as to actual performance-results! Another selection of the same type is the anthem by Sears. Artists can bring all the powers of commentary and knowledge of effects gained by long apprenticeship and ceaseless striving, and illuminate with these artistic powers simply-built pieces so that they seem to be of greater value than purely intrinsic merit warrants. But artists are few; and too great a dependence upon their cooperation is too often likely to result in second-rate results when the works have to be produced under average conditions. All of which drawn-out dissertation is of no particular moment except to show my reaction to the last two titles reviewed above. Both could be made highly effective numbers, if properly humored; and both would be much more valuable if they had received a little more polishing and revising before being published. Which criticism is not as harsh as it seems at sight, for only too much of the present out-pour of the composers of church music suffers from the same haste and lack of thoroughness in self-criticism.

From Oliver Ditson Co., Boston.

- A Prayer for Guidance.....Lester ($0.60)

Under the above title this long-established publishing firm offers a new sacred song by the reviewer. The eloquent text—by Frederick H. Martens—and its simple, melodic musical setting should render it of wide availability for all occasions where a solo of reverent character and good vocal effect is desired. The accompaniment is equally effective for piano or organ. The song is issued in two keys, and the range called for is moderate.

FOUR MANUAL FOR OAK PARK

Another large four-manual organ is to be added to the equipment of the churches of Chicago and suburbs. The Skinner Organ Company has won the contract for an instrument of forty-three full sets of speaking stops to be installed in the new edifice of First Baptist Church of Oak Park as soon as the building is ready for it. The specifications were prepared in consultation with William H. Shuey of Oak Park, a confirmed organ "fan" and student of specifications, who has been helpful to various churches in designing their organs. There will be seven borrowed stops, in addition to the forty-three complete sets of pipes, and the total of pipes, bars and tubes in the instrument will be 2,562. In addition there are to be thirty couplers and thirty-nine combination pistons. The console will be prepared for the addition later of fifteen stops. Among the toe pistons provided is one to lock all the other expression pedals to the swell pedal. There will also be toe pistons to bring on all reeds, all strings and all diapasons and flutes, and a cancel piston for all stops.

- The scheme of stops is as follows:
- Great (Six-inch Wind): 1. Bourdon (Pedal Extension), 16 ft., 5 pipes. 2. First Diapason, 8 ft., 61 pipes. 3. Second Diapason, 8 ft., 61 pipes. 4. Claribel Flute, 8 ft., 61 pipes. 5. Erzaehler, 8 ft., 61 pipes. 6. Octave, 4 ft., 61 pipes. 7. Flute, 4 ft., 61 pipes. 8. Twelfth, 2-2/3 ft., 61 pipes. 9. Fifteenth, 2 ft., 61 pipes. Chimes (from Echo). Harp. Celesta (from Choir).
- Swell (Seven and One-half-Inch Wind): 10. Bourdon, 16 ft., 73 pipes. 11. Diapason, 8 ft., 73 pipes. 12. Gedeckt, 8 ft., 73 pipes. 13. Salicional, 8 ft., 73 pipes. 14. A Word from Madame Yajima

By MRS. HENRY TOPPING

When on January 20 Madame Yajima reached the end of her now famous pilgrimage to the Washington Conference, and found herself once more at home in her little room at the headquarters of the W. C. T. U. in Tokyo, she suffered a physical collapse so serious that cablegrams were sent to friends in America asking prayer for her recovery. Owing to these cables there was in America, a rumor of her death.

But she came back to the activities of this life with undiminished zeal and interest, and on April 24, when the late cherry blossoms were in their full glory she attained her ninetieth birthday. From all round the world came messages of congratulation representing all classes of people and organizations.

This month of May brings the two anniversaries that most keenly stir the hearts of women and remind us again of Yajima's spirit and example. Mother's Day and Memorial Day both bring to us not only a sharper pang of the ever-present hunger for dear ones already sacrificed to the folly and wickedness of war, but a reminder that the "next war" will be more destructive and terrible than can now be imagined or predicted. Out of this pain and apprehension we must face together with a new vision our great question of how we women of the world can cooperate to do our part to forever put an end to international warfare.

It is an encouraging fact that individuals and organizations the country over are taking a more serious consideration of our international relations. Again there is a call for preparedness, this time a preparedness for peace. This will involve a tax on our time, our devotion, our resources, that cannot be estimated. For the establishment of justice, mercy, sympathy, humility are all involved in preparedness for peace. It is not enough to hate war and to long for deliverance from the cost of war. We must so love peace as to be ready and able to pay the price of peace, to say with Yajima's spirit of high devotion, "Woe is me if I do not dedicate the remaining years of my life to the utmost effort to train the rising generation to hate war with a blazing hatred and to determine to achieve such mutual understanding and cooperation as will banish it from the world."

Indianapolis Convention Rates

The various passenger associations whose authority embraces the entire Northern Baptist Convention territory, have granted to those attending the Indianapolis Convention, for themselves and the immediate members of their families, the rates indicated below, under the following regulations:

From the Pacific Coast states (the Trans-continental Association), a rate has been authorized, slightly in excess of one fare for the round trip, permitting stop-overs at all points, both going and returning, within the final limits, selling dates May 25 to August 31, return limit October 31, 1922.

From all other associations, round-trip tickets will be sold at one and one-half the regular one-way rate, by the ticket agent at each local station, when the rate is more than $1.00 upon the presentation and surrender, of an identification certificate, any time between June 5 to June 14 inclusive. These tickets must be validated at Indianapolis at the ticket office of the line over which the ticket reads into that city, which will be done upon presentation of the ticket thereto, any time from June 8-26. The same route must be taken on returning which was used in going to Indianapolis.

Passengers may leave to return at any date within the final limit, but care must be taken to allow time to reach the original starting place, not later than midnight of June 26.

Identification certificates may be procured from state or city superintendents, or secretaries, or by application to the undersigned.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

Swedish Baptist Conference

This body met with First Swedish Church, Tacoma, May 4-7. There was a large and representative attendance. The reports showed 198 additions to the churches, of whom 120 were received by baptism. This is a larger number of baptisms than reported for several years. Delegates brought word of fine evangelistic spirit in the churches. There have been raised and expended for all purposes during the year $65,500. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. J. P. Sundstrom, pastor at Matsqui, B. C., and acting superintendent of missions in Western Canada. Dr. J. F. Watson, executive secretary of the Western Washington Convention also preached.

The missionary spirit was heightened by the presence of four missionaries under appointment of the Swedish Baptist Foreign Mission Society on their way to Siberia. They were the Rev. and Mrs. E. W. Olson, of Chicago; Rev. Lindstedt, from Sweden, and Miss Margaret Bergskold, of Chicago.

The next session will meet with the Swedish Baptist Church at Mt. Vernon, Wash. Officers elected were: President, Dr. Emil Friberg, Seattle; vice-pres., Rev. Charles Asplund, Tacoma; corres. secy., Rev. J. Paul Erickson, Seattle; treasurer, Robert J. Johnson, Seattle.

MT. ZION BAPTIST CHURCH (Negro), Seattle: Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Young, of Topeka, Kans., helped Dr. W. D. Carter, pastor, in special meetings, March 19-April 9. Fifty-five decisions were made; 25 persons have been baptized and others will follow. The spiritual life in the church is excellent. Since entering the new building about a year and a half ago, $3,000 has been paid on the indebtedness. The offerings for benevolence this year show a marked increase.

PORT TOWNSEND: Rev. Conrad L. Owen, evangelist, and H. M. Hack, singer, assisted Rev. S. L. Brown in evangelistic meetings which closed April 23. The church has been greatly strengthened by the spiritual uplift and the additions received, both by baptism and otherwise.

Snapshots From Seattle

At the Ministers' Conference in Seattle Monday, May 8, the following snapshot reports were given by pastors present:

Queen Anne Church, Rev. F. W. Car-

stens, pastor: 20 new members received hand of fellowship, May 7. April 30, nine young people dedicated their lives to foreign mission work.

Japanese Church, Rev. F. Okazaki, pastor, broke ground May 7 for a new building to cost about $35,000. Hopes of entering the building about October 1 are entertained.

Chinese Church, Rev. Lum Ming Tak, pastor, hopes within a month to begin the erection of a new building to cost about $35,000.

University Church, Rev. Frank B. Matthews, pastor, May 7 adopted a resolution to sell the present site of the church and secure plans at once for a new building to cost about $65,000, to be built on lots recently purchased.

Immanuel Church, Rev. J. H. Teale, pastor: Membership of the church doubled between Easter, 1921, and Easter, 1922. A class of high-school girls has been organized with Mrs. Wilbert R. Howell as teacher.

Tabernacle Church: Rev. F. E. Dark, pastor: Twenty-one received hand of fellowship May 7, of whom thirteen have been received by baptism. Offerings for denominational missionary work showed an increase of 35 per cent over those of the preceding year, with all local expenses met.

First Church, Dr. A. M. Bailey, pastor: Thirty-six received hand of fellowship and one baptized on May 7. Missionary offerings nearly 50 per cent above those of last year.

West Side, Dr. C. A. Cook, pastor: Mission study class organized. Offerings for missions increased 70 per cent. A church loyalty campaign started to secure active cooperation of every member in church work.

Obituary

MRS. FRANK H. KEELER

Mrs. Rea Ella Keeler who departed this life from the hospital in Galesburg, Ill., on May 11, 1922, was one of that devoted number who make the light, life and power of our Baptist churches. Mrs. Keeler was making her home with her daughter, the wife of Rev. Fred F. Shields, pastor of the Baptist church in Orion, Ill. She had gone to Galesburg for treatment in the hospital where she suffered a stroke that released her beautiful spirit in the sixty-sixth year of her earthly life, she having been born Nov. 17, 1856, in Wheeling, W. Va. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Caldwell. Oct. 15, 1889, she married Mr. Frank H. Keeler; to them were born three children, Josephine and William C. dying in infancy. Her husband and daughter, Agnes Dorcas Shields, survive. One brother, Frank G. Caldwell of Wheeling, W. Va., also survives. Mrs. Keeler was active in the Baptist churches in Wheeling, W. Va., Woodlawn, Chicago; Sandwich, Ill.; Windsor Park, Chicago; and at Orion, Ill. She served as deaconess and was always active in the woman's work of the church. From her earliest girlhood she devoted her life to the Master's service. Hers was a most charming personality. She bore every burden with a smile and cheered with her bright faith every fellowship of which she was a part.

The funeral services were held at the home of her daughter in Orion, Ill., on Monday, May 15, 1922. Rev. M. P. Boynton, pastor of the Woodlawn Church of Chicago, where Mrs. Keeler had been most blessedly active for a number of years, conducted the service. The hymns "Saved by Grace" and "Safe in the Arms of Jesus" were sweetly sung by a quartet composed of Mrs. Arthur Bothwell, soprano; Mrs. Lloyd Love, alto; Dr. A. A. Gustafson, tenor; Mr. Edgar Kerr, basso.

Many beautiful floral pieces were received from Wheeling, W. Va., Muscatine, Iowa, and from the church and families in Orion. The pallbearers were Mr. L. C. Warner, Mr. H. E. Ferguson, Dr. J. A. Gustafson, Mr. Henry Miller, Mr. Henry Sheesley, and Mr. D. C. Keleher. The parsonage was thronged with friends from far and near. Burial was made in beautiful Western Cemetery, Orion, Ill.

The Great Fundamental

"WHEN we understand that the Lordship of Christ is fundamental and cannot be ignored, we find ourselves together until we talk ourselves down and out. The wonder of the world is our unity. Everybody is to strive to magnify those things that make for vital unity in the Kingdom of God. 'Stand fast, brethren, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free' is a wonderful word. We like that. That word is a marvellous word for lovers of freedom everywhere. That is the word that Luther took to batter down the evils of medievalism. To that word our Baptist fathers have, through the centuries, turned again and again. People will be coming back to that as a beacon light while time lasts. But the last word in the Baptist vocabulary is not liberty, but love.—Personally I won't go one-millionth of an inch with any man who seeks to destroy the faith of our Lord. The outstanding heresy is the heresy of anti-missionism and omissionism, and the 'black plague' in Christian work is to have cold feet and cold hearts and cold words about that cause that brought Christ from the Father's house on high out to Gethsemane and Calvary, to lead the troubled world out of darkness to the light."

George W. Truett.
At the Southern Baptist Convention.

Fresh from the Field

At Brown University a new office has been established—that of Dean of Freshmen—and the first appointment to the new office is that of Prof. W. R. Burwell, now of the University of Tennessee. Mr. Burwell was graduated from Brown in 1915, his father having graduated in 1885 and his brother in 1913. Mr. Burwell was for three years at Oxford as Rhodes scholar, for two years with the War Industries Board in Washington, serving in the Division of Statistics, and for one year instructor at Brown. He will return as assistant professor of mathematics, but will give the greater part of his time to the counsel and direction of the Freshman class. The number of students has so increased as to make the new appointment imperative. Prof. Burwell is to be married on June 3 to Miss Eaton, the daughter of Dr. Charles A. Eaton, formerly of the Madison Avenue Church, New York City.

Col. Edw. H. Haskell of Newton, Mass., chairman of the medical committee of the American College for Girls at Constantinople, sailed on May 20 on the S. S. "Majestic" for Constantinople, in connection with the erection of the medical building and dormitory, presented by Mr. Wm. Bingham, 2nd, of Maine.

Dr. F. G. Cressey, promotion director for Ohio, reports that Ohio's contributions for the New World Movement during the year just closed amounted to $626,437, which is 93 per cent of the contributions for the preceding year. The total state promotion expense was 1½ per cent of the receipts.

At the annual meeting of the First Church of Los Angeles, held May 8, it was found that the membership of the church is now 1,685, that the Sunday-school enrollment is 983, that 147 from the Sunday school had joined the church during the year, that there were three B. Y. P. U.'s with combined attendance of 150, that the giving of the church for the year had been $100,413.57, of which amount $40,443 had been given for missions and benevolence, $28,000 toward the purchase of property adjoining the church, so as to secure a larger site for the new church home, the balance for current expenses. The church has been able to meet its full quota on the New World Movement, plus a substantial gift toward the Continuation Fund.

The annual conference of Church Federation secretaries was held in Chicago, May 20-June 2. The Chicago Federation, representing sixteen denominations and more than 650 churches acted as host. There are now between forty and fifty city councils and federations of churches in the United States.

Franklin G. Huling, formerly pastor of the Hoover Street Church, Los Angeles, Cal., has accepted a three-months' engagement with the First Church, Pendleton, Oregon, with a view to becoming pastor.

Once more the World Wide Guild has proved its mettle. The girls of the World Wide Guild have long shown such a splendid spirit in all their work that the Department of Missionary Education has been accustomed to declare that W. W. G. stands for Will Win Goal. This time they have not only achieved their goal but gone far beyond it. They more than doubled their quota, in the recent Women's Continuation Campaign. The World Wide Guild quota for the year ending April 30, 1922, was $16,666.66. The pledges received and paid by April 30, 1922, amounted to $36,588.01—or 225 per cent of their quota! Already, in one year's time, the girls of the World Wide Guild have raised 73 per cent of their three years' quota of $50,000.

Rev. G. C. Crippen has resigned his position with University of Chicago Press, to take effect June 1. He has been with the press for nearly five years: in charge

A Record Year in Evangelism

"Then they that gladly received the word were baptised."

THE Foreign Mission Society announces that based on preliminary reports from missionaries, the total number of converts on all fields, who, during the year ended December 31, 1921, were baptized on their profession of faith in Jesus Christ, already exceeds 12,000. Complete reports from all fields have not yet been received.

This means a record year in evangelism. The statistical records of the past twenty years show that only one year, that of 1905, exceeds this in evangelistic achievements.

According to present indications, the new year 1922 is likely to show another great evangelistic ingathering. On the new field across from Burma, the preachers associated with Rev. William M. Young have already baptized more than 2,500 converts since the first of January.

It would be a tragedy if this evangelistic movement were to be retarded and many of the open doors now before the missionaries were to remain unentered because of the twenty-five per cent reduction forced upon the Foreign Mission Society by the grave financial situation and the heavy accumulated deficit.

of publication of religious education materials; acting manager of the Publication Department; and for two years advertising manager. He is planning to spend the summer in England and on the Continent, returning about the first of September, when he will be open to a call from some church as pastor.

The Seattle Federation of Churches will hereafter be known as the Seattle Council of Churches, the necessary amendment to the constitution having been voted recently.

Dr. Albert G. Lawson will on June 5 celebrate his eightieth birthday and will on that occasion speak at the New York Ministers Conference on "Sixty Years of Service." At 1 p. m. the Conference is to tender him an informal luncheon at Hotel Martha Washington, 29 East 29th Street.

The Children's World Crusade of the Department of Missionary Education has made a record that grown-up Northern Baptists may well aspire to equal. In the recent financial campaign, the children received their quota through the Women's Continuation Campaign, with which the Children's World Crusade co-operated. They had their own leaders and raised the money through their own effort. Results prove that the rest of us should take a leaf from their methods, for the Children's World Crusade paid in over 450 per cent of the expected year's quota, and over 150 per cent of the three years' quota. Nine states have not yet reported as this goes to print, and details from some of the states are missing, but the following figures tell the story of the children's victory: Three-year quota, $6,000; receipts, $9,067.50.

Alva J. Brasted writes from Camp Stanley, Texas: "The Northern Baptist Convention now recognizes in an official way the chaplains of the army and navy as missionaries of the convention without salary. No chaplain of the Northern Baptist Convention can now feel that he is cut off or forgotten by the church. We are now confident that we have the interest and prayers of our brethren and that they are with us in spirit to help promote every work that has Christ's approval. It is a source of great consolation and inspiration to one who is engaged in ministerial work outside the organized church to know that none of the church ties of fellowship and cooperation are severed."

The missionary address at the Franklin College commencement will be delivered on June 4 in the Baptist Church by Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery.

The first community church conference of the Middle West was held, May 9-10, at the Urbandale Federated Church, Des Moines, Iowa. A skeleton organization was formed with Chas. E. Coleman, business man of Chicago, as president. This conference is one of three regional conferences held this year.

India is the country that the women and young people of the churches will be studying next fall. July 12-20, at East Northfield, Mass., is to be held the nineteenth session of the Women's Foreign Mission Conference. Camp Salaam is the place for our Baptist girls (ages 16 to 30 years) where they may become acquainted with each other and also with some of our missionaries and secretaries, besides learning all the newest and best plans for presenting the new text books. All inquiries concerning Camp Salaam should be made to Miss Elizabeth S. Sargent, 101 Centre St., Concord, N. H.

In the two years ending in 1919 all stereopticon depositories handling foreign mission lectures reported that 791 had been loaned out. In the fiscal year ending April 30, 1922, the Boston depository of the Stereopticon Department of the General Board of Promotion handled 732 lectures, not quite as many as all depositories handled in the two years quoted above, and the New York depository handled 1620; fourteen more depositories are yet to be heard from. Many churches are finding that the stereopticon lectures are of special help in the summertime and are now booking lectures for the summer months.

Militant Christians

THE BAPTIST believes in prayer. It believes more things are wrought by prayer than the world dreams of. It sets aside each week considerable portion of its space for material designed to feed and stimulate the spiritual life. We have, however, seen instances in which prayer to human eyes has been carried to such an extent that good men and women have given up not only personal prejudices and desires but also surrendered great moral principles. To be spiritual does not mean to be weak in the face of evil in church or state. There are times when we should arise from our knees to fight the good fight of faith. We are Christian soldiers.

Killam's Kollum

Peace

It takes two to make a quarrel. THE BAPTIST loves peace and promotes peace. There would never be any friction or unpleasantness if everybody had the sense to agree with us. We know we are right. Something must be the matter with folks who do not see things as we do. Let them come to our position. Let them take our point of view. Let them submit to our terms. Let them agree with us as they should and we will have peace, sweet peace!

It's a BAPTIST Paper

Mr. J. C. Price, a lawyer of Republic, Kan., writes: "Am glad to receive a Baptist paper that I am proud to show to my neighbors." It is a Baptist paper. It belongs to the denomination. It lives to serve the ends sought by our churches—the extension of Christ's kingdom among all men. THE BAPTIST must be reasonably fair in its dealings for we are often charged with leaning toward the liberal position and more often charged with having gone over to the extreme conservative position. Baptists at large are not extremists. We believe we represent Baptists at large.

And Still They Come

Not long ago we called attention to a fine list of sixty-three subscriptions from the Olney Church, Philadelphia. The past week Pastor Slawter sent in nine more annual subscriptions. A good list can be secured in any church where the pastor and a few good folks are interested in having the membership informed on vital denominational movements. THE BAPTIST gives the information.

What a Difference

Rev. C. R. Osborn, who begins his work as pastor of the Morgan Park Church, Chicago, June 1, in closing his work at Coldwater, Mich., saw to it that the balance of the list of subscribers to THE BAPTIST and Missions were renewed. The check amounted to $54. What a difference there is in men! We know pastors who, having accepted a new charge, are so busy looking upon the green pastures to which they are turning that the old field gets slight consideration. Other men up to the last day of service plan and work for the future of the church they are about to leave.

Extra Copies

There is an unusual demand upon THE BAPTIST for extra copies. We have sold hundreds of copies of recent issues. Calls for the issue of May 20 are still coming in but we are now unable to fill any more orders.

Plans for the Re-organization of the Board of Promotion

MATTERS of unusual importance came before the administrative committee of the General Board of Promotion at its fully attended meeting May 16-17 at headquarters in New York. A realization of the seriousness of the present situation was manifest in the deliberations, but the spirit was one of faith in the ultimate outcome and of unity in carrying forward the work with zeal. The report of the treasurer gave the figures already published, showing the receipts of the year to be approximately $9,500,000, but it was not possible as yet to tell accurately the amount of designated gifts.

Chief interest centered in the report of the committee on organization and program for the next fiscal year. This committee was appointed at the February meeting and is composed of Mrs. H. E. Goodman of Chicago, Mrs. George W. Coleman of Boston, Dr. Clarence A. Barbour of Rochester, Mr. Albert L. Scott of Boston and Mr. Henry Bond of Brattleboro. During many and long sessions the committee had wrestled with this question, seeking in regard to reorganization two things—efficiency and reduction in expenses. The recommendations adopted, after full discussion, to be presented to the Board of Promotion at its meeting in Indianapolis, provide for: (1) An administrative committee of fifteen members chosen annually, made up of one representative from each cooperating society and board, one representative of the state conventions, one of the standard city mission societies, and six members at large—two laymen, two ministers and two women. All of the representatives of organizations are to be unsalaried, and nominated by their respective organizations. The present administrative committee has twenty members. In the new, six members at large are dropped and one representative of the standard city mission societies is added. (2) An advisory committee composed of a representative from each of the cooperating organizations, a representative of the state conventions, and one of the standard city mission societies, all to be appointed by their respective organizations; a chairman appointed by the administrative committee, and the general director. (3) The discontinuance of the present six departments—conventions and conferences, publicity and statistics, prayer and stewardship, life work, special gifts, and business department—and in place of these a less elaborate office organization based on functional lines. (4) The discontinuance of the officers' council.

Important Changes

The most important changes made by these recommendations lie in the substitution of the functional for the departmental system, and in the new relationship established between the advisory committee and the general director, and between both and the administrative committee. Under the functional system it will be possible to do the work more economically, and with less elaborate machinery. The board will continue to publish Missions and mission literature, to issue stereopticon lectures, to conduct field work, to help in stewardship, and to receive and distribute mission funds from the states. Such sub-committees will be appointed by the administrative committee as may be necessary to carry on this cooperative work. A single directing head, with adequate staff assistance, accords with the best methods of conducting modern business, and locates responsibility.

As for the advisory committee, which replaces the cabinet set up last year at Des Moines, the composition is practically the same, but the addition of a chairman appointed by the administrative committee from its membership is a new feature, and the definition of duties creates a new relationship which gives initiative to the committee, as well as to the general director. On the part of the general director, it is made his duty to initiate policies, submit them to the review of the advisory committee, and present them to the administrative committee whether approved by the advisory committee or not. The advisory committee shall have referred to it questions for its advice from the general director and the administrative committee. It may also, if it sees fit, initiate policies, and after review by the general director, present them to the administrative committee whether approved by the general director or not.

Annual Meeting

The committee recommended that the time of the annual meeting of the Board be changed from November to June, during or immediately following the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention. The purpose of this proposal is to make possible the development of plans and the beginning of financial solicitation early in the fiscal year, thus avoiding the hitherto common experience of being compelled to secure practically all of the funds during the closing months. It was recommended that meetings of the administrative committee be held bi-monthly.

The resignations of Dr. H. R. Greaves as business manager and of Dr. F. W. Padelford as secretary of the Department of Publicity and Statistics were accepted and committees were appointed to draft a suitable recognition of their highly efficient service from the beginning of the New World Movement.

A New England Train

A personally conducted New England party in special sleeping cars without change leaves Boston from the South Station via the Boston and Albany Railroad, Monday, June 12, at 2 p. m. (Eastern Standard time), stopping at Newtonville 2:15 p. m., Worcester 3:15 p. m., Springfield 4:35 p. m., Westfield 4:53 p. m., and Pittsfield 6:20 p. m., arriving at Indianapolis at 12:10 noon, Tuesday, June 13.

Returning delegates can leave Indianapolis any day up to June 25 in through sleeping cars. Free side-trip Buffalo to Niagara Falls and return, if desired, on notice to conductor. The cost of transportation follows:

	Fare	Lower berth (round trip)	Upper berth (each way)
From Boston	$52.07	$10.13	$8.10
From Worcester	49.67	10.13	8.10
From Springfield	46.76	9.00	7.20
From Pittsfield	43.92	8.63	6.90

The reduced rate round-trip tickets may be obtained at any of the principal railroad stations in New England, but will be sold only to those who present authorized Identification Certificates to the ticket agent. For accommodations in the special Pullman sleeping cars on going journey apply immediately to C. E. Colony, C. P. & T. A., Boston and Albany R. R., 67 Franklin St., Boston.

For hotel reservations at Indianapolis write to Roy N. Adams, Occidental building, Indianapolis, Ind. For Railroad Identification Certificates (furnished without charge) and for further information, apply to W. A. Kinzie, 16 Ashburton Place, Boston, or to H. N. Lathrop, 161 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

Resignation of Dr. Greaves

By J. Y. AITCHISON

At its meeting in New York, May 16-17, the administrative committee of the General Board of Promotion accepted with regret the resignation of Dr. H. R. Greaves as business manager of the board. Dr. Greaves voluntarily offered to resign in order to enable the board to make such changes in its organization as might be deemed necessary in view of the present financial condition of the denomination.

The wide experience that Dr. Greaves has had in pastoral and business relations has enabled him to render an invaluable service to the Board during his term of service. He has worked out a most efficient system of accounting for the Board of Promotion. In view of the different methods employed by so many of the organizations participating in the New World Movement, it has been an exceedingly difficult task to work out a uniform system. Dr. Greaves has occupied one of the most difficult and trying positions in connection with the work of the denomination in recent years. The funds of the board however, have been handled with an exceptional degree of accuracy, as every penny of the more than $20,000,000 which has passed through the treasury of the Board of Promotion during the term of Dr. Greaves' service has been accounted for. Dr. Greaves has also shown great discretion and ability in the letting of contracts and the management of the business affairs of the Board. During these years he has saved to the Board many times the amount of his salary.

Dr. Greaves' relation to the board terminates May 31. His associates at headquarters and the representatives of the national, state and city societies and boards, as well as the churches, unite in expressing to him grateful appreciation for his unselfish and untiring services during the years he has been connected with the General Board of Promotion.

Hotel Accommodations at Indianapolis Convention

Because of the crowded conditions of the larger hotels in Indianapolis during the week of the Northern Baptist Convention, the committee suggests that persons desiring accommodations write directly and at once to Rev. F. A. Hayward, 730 Occidental Bldg., Indianapolis, instead of to the hotels. There are a number of hotels and a large list of fine, commodious homes listed by the committee. Please state the kind of accommodation you desire and who will be in your party, if more than one. There will be ample accommodations for all, but you can save delay by making your reservations immediately. Write at once.

For the Committee,
T. J. Parsons.

The Baptist

Reorganizing the Board of Promotion

THREE Committees have for some time been at work on reports designed to give the denomination the suggestions of experience regarding the organization and program for the new year of the General Board of Promotion. One of these committees was appointed by the Board of Promotion itself; another by the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention; and the third by the Administrative Committee. The last committee has made its report in three sections, the first being a historical statement showing the conditions under which the Board came into being; the second being suggested changes; and the third being a local church program for the year. The second part of which a digest is printed on another page of this issue and contains findings of much interest to the denomination. These findings have, of course, been determined in some measure by the fact that the two other committees were working on related problems

Having given to this report such hasty examination as is possible, we note the following facts:

1. This report, if adopted, does away with the separate departments of the General Board of Promotion, greatly simplifying the organization and reducing the expense of its operation.

2. It gives a larger society representation. The personnel of the Administrative Committee has been reduced from twenty to fifteen members. Of these, six are elected at large, seven are representatives (not paid officers) of the societies and boards; one each is from the state organizations as a whole and the city mission societies. It will be noted that of the fifteen members, nine represent official groups, while there is nothing to prevent some of the six to be elected at large from being members of the boards of the various societies. While the report does not so state, the intent apparently is to give a larger society representation on this committee.

3. Through the new Advisory Committee, which displaces the present Cabinet, and which may have paid secretaries among its members, provision is made for initiative, not only on the part of the General Director, but also on the part of the cooperating organizations. In case of conflict between the plans of these two, the Administrative Committee is both judge and jury. In effect this subordinates the General Director to the societies, since the Advisory Committee may initiate counter-plans to those he has in mind, and submit them, without his approval, to the Administrative Committee which has, as before noted, a much larger society representation than before. It will be interesting to see how, under these circumstances, the General Director is going to direct.

An excellent feature of the report is the provision made for the meeting of the Board of Promotion during or immediately at the close of the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention. This will allow time for the development of church plans so that they may promptly be put into effect in the fall and will also give a much longer period for the solicitation of funds. A meeting of the Board late in the fall, as heretofore, has meant a long period of uncertainty and practical inactivity in planning and executing, which should now be avoided.

This report which is to be made at the annual meeting of the General Board of Promotion is commended to the very careful scrutiny of all Baptist churches and pastors.

Look Out, Mr. Official, It's Going to Rain

THERE has come to our desk a letter addressed, "To Ministers of the Northern Baptist Convention," and signed by J. C. Massee. Enclosed was a program of the Pre-Convention Conference on Fundamentalism, and a pamphlet containing an authoritative statement of the meaning and mission of Baptist Fundamentalism. The letter referred to is so remarkable a document that we feel constrained to call general attention to its contents. The language is gentle and persuasive, but the proposals are stern and uncompromising.

The letter begins with an expression of concern regarding "some situations at present obtaining in the denomination," goes on to say that there has never been a slush fund to support the Fundamentalist agitation, and then comes to the paragraph which is marked "Second." This paragraph states that the Fundamentalists have no divisive purpose, that they wish unity, but unity on a particular basis, namely, "the inspired and authoritative Word of God and those time-honored beliefs which have determined the basis of unity in the Baptist brotherhood from the beginning." The appeal is to the past. Is it true historically that Baptist unity has been primarily on the basis of doctrinal beliefs? We think not. A later paragraph speaks of the agreement signed recently in New York City by sixteen men of varying views and remarks: "No man of that group by his own statement brings in question the sovereign lordship of Jesus Christ our Master. Within that group there were widely varying conceptions of other truths. We believed then and we believe now, that there is a liberty in the denomination that permits men of varying convictions to work together." Does not this contradict the earlier statement? Certainly unity based on a common devotion to Jesus Christ is something which all Baptists believe in, whereas unity based on particular theological dogmas and interpretations does not seem to them at all possible.

Paragraph Third demands a return to the faith once for all delivered and "a strict adherence to the purpose and programs for which Boards and Conventions were originally organized." It says: "We reject the leadership of men of liberal theological views," and deprecates what it calls an "over-emphasis" on the social gospel. This should lead into some inquiry into the original purposes of the Northern Baptist Convention. It is doubtful if, in accord with those purposes, the Convention has any authority to adopt such a thing as a Confession of Faith.

According to paragraph Fourth every pupil in a Baptist school or college "will there receive truth as held and believed by us." A creedal standard becomes a necessity if this provision is to be enforced. The professors also must be orthodox not in life alone but in creed. If this be true there is no Christian education for Baptists apart from a belief in an inerrant Bible and Dr. Massee would compel all professors to hold this view.

Now we come to the iron hand and to the voice of the Baptist autocrat. Listen: "I express a profound personal conviction when I say that in my judgment every man of modernistic theological tendencies, though he may at heart hold the faith of Christ, should be discontinued from any office in the Northern Baptist Convention for the simple reason that his tendency is wrong. * * * It is my hope that such a crowd of independent (note the term—Ed.) Baptists will attend the Indianapolis convention as has never before been assembled on this continent and that they will in the exercise of their prerogative elect to every board and committee a clear majority of pronouncedly conservative men and women. That we shall there serve notice on the denomination that we are no longer tolerant of the drift from the ancient moorings nor willing to support a program outlined for any other purpose than the preaching of the gospel to the ends of the earth. Every officer of the Convention this year should be distinctly and pronouncedly a conservative man."

If this means anything it means that conservatism is the faith as held by Dr. Massee, that every man who differs from him, no matter how loyal to Christ he may be, ought to be allowed to hold no position of responsibility, that all sympathizers should all be at the Convention to put through a pre-arranged program, and that every phase of Christian effort except evangelization should be discontinued. This is a declaration of war on all officials of the Convention and all missionaries and denominational leaders who do not agree with Dr. Massee's theology. Certainly an interesting document, a most interesting document!

Dr. Massee is right in this, that our great problem just now is the problem of leadership. This is true not only in the Convention but in the entire denomination. Religious autocrats are not all in office. Whose leadership will the Convention choose?

Non-Cooperating Churches

IN the issue of the Watchman-Examiner for May 11, Dr. W. B. Riley, of Minneapolis, while heartily endorsing the notion of "The Presbyterian" that Baptists of liberal convictions should "withdraw and organize a body of their own," strongly dissents from the idea that churches unwilling to cooperate with State Conventions or the Northern Baptist Convention should follow the same course and rather plaintively remonstrates because, as he says, "ultra-conservatives" are being "automatically" excluded from the denomination. If the alleged exclusion is a fact, and if it is "automatic," it would appear that it must originate in forces inherent in the ultra-conservatives; in other words, that they are excluding themselves. But Dr. Riley charges some party or parties unnamed with "conscienceless political wirepulling" with that purpose of exclusion in view.

We would not charge our brother with resorting to the conventional device of dragging a red herring across the trail of the avowed political policy of the Fundamentalists in preparation for the Indianapolis Convention. It is not so long ago that Fundamentalists were exhorted by their leader to "attend in such numbers and in such organizations as will enable them if necessary by votes to determine the policies and personnel of the next Convention." But we hope that that purpose has been relinquished.

Nor would we call Dr. Riley to account for language that might appear to some to be somewhat extreme and unparliamentary. We recognize that these are days when we cannot insist upon the ordinary amenities of speech where the grave issues of a clamant "ultra-conservatism" are at stake. Language is acquiring a new usage. When, for example, a militant "ultra-conservative" tells a consecrated Christian worker among the children of the poor in New York City that he "is not interested in sick babies, and would not give three cents to save civilization," we are tempted to infer either that he thinks more than is fitting of the paltry sum of money involved, or that he sets too low a value upon civilization, and that his disposition is something less than humane. But we prefer to believe that he is simply contending for his conception of the faith once delivered, and that this is only a rather vigorous form of theological polemic, and represents a recognizable distaste for the so-called "social gospel." So when Dr. Riley charges that the Board of Promotion is the product "of conscienceless political wirepulling," which ordinarily might arouse deep resentment, we like to think that it is merely his rather unhappy way of saying that its present theological complexion is not pleasing to him. We freely absolve Dr. Riley of all taint of modernism in his theology, but find him guilty of novelties in expression that seem to us to fall somewhat below the level of the strictest conservatism in controversial style. However, we are prepared to discount liberally these "modernistic" rhetorical modes, without in any way curtailing freedom, not to say license, of speech.

But we are confused, nevertheless. For if the charge be true in any sense, against whom should it be directed? Who elects the Board of Promotion, and thus, presumably, does the wirepulling? The Northern Baptist Convention, with the assistance of its committee on nominations. If the leader of the Fundamentalists is right in claiming that "the conservative group" of the denomination is "composed of perhaps 85 per cent of the great body of the Baptist constituency and 75 per cent of the preachers" (we do not know the source of his statistics), who controls the Convention? If "the conservative group" do not, why do they not? Are the rights of the majority not sufficiently guarded in the procedure of the Convention? If so, what is the remedy?

"The action of the Michigan Convention in dropping from its fellowship the non-cooperating churches" is deplored by Dr. Riley. As to that Michigan Baptists may answer. But what shall we do in the Northern Baptist Convention with churches that do not desire to cooperate with it? Have they a right to share in its councils and in its benefits? Should non-cooperating pastors, for example, profit by the contributions of others to the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board? Should churches which give all their missionary contributions to organizations outside the denomination aspire to control the policies of Baptist missionary societies supported by others? The executive committee now proposes that the Convention shall amend the article of its by-laws dealing with its membership, so as to give only those churches the right to appoint delegates which "during the year immediately preceding the annual meeting of the Convention shall have made a contribution of money for the work of at least one of the cooperating organizations of the Convention" or for the work of one of the Convention Boards. The Convention is to be asked whether that is a reasonable provision, and it is well that we should be thinking about it.

It is deeply to be regretted, this deliberate insistence upon "grouping" the denomination, and lining up its members in opposite camps. We shall never willingly consent to it if it can be avoided. That there are men of widely differing views within the denomination, as there are within every local church, may be cheerfully admitted. All claim equally to be "orthodox" and sharers in the historic Baptist heritage, and all affirm equally their loyalty to Jesus Christ as Lord, and to His kingdom for whose establishment they are laboring. "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up: for God is able to make him stand!"

The overwhelming majority of conservatives and liberals (if the divisive terms must be employed), in the denomination as in the local church, love and trust one another, and heartily respect one another's convictions, and if it were not for a very few irreconcilables, would find it as easy to work together today as they have found it in the past. May God grant that the coming Convention may make it possible for those of all shades of theological opinion to work together harmoniously on a platform of mutual toleration and appreciation, nothing being done through strife or vainglory, but each esteeming other better than themselves!

An Uninformed People

According to a report read at the recent meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention, of 680,000 white Baptist families in the South only 180,000 were getting their state paper in January of this year, leaving approximately 500,000 families who are not getting their papers and who are therefore cut off in a great measure from connection with their state program and the work of the Convention. "In other words," the reporter said, "more than 2,000,000, or 76 per cent of our Southern Baptist people are not informed and in the main unenlisted in our Southern Baptist program."

The percentage in the North is certainly no higher and the inference is the same. How can we expect hearty denominational cooperation when the great mass of our people have but the vaguest ideas of what is being done and how it is being accomplished? An uninformed people will never be a denominationally efficient people. And the greatest single agency for putting them in touch with things is the denominational paper. Think how lost people would be to the world without their daily paper. They are just as much lost to the active work of the Kingdom without the right religious paper.

Southern Baptists Turn Down Proposed Confession

Two actions taken by Southern Baptists at their annual meeting at Jacksonville, a report of which appears in this issue, have particular interest for us in the North. Both seem to have been taken by what was practically a unanimous vote. Objection, if there was any, did not become vocal.

The Columbia Conference held last January recommended that there should be a permanent committee of conference, made up of an equal number of delegates from the Southern and Northern Conventions. It was voted that, inasmuch as relations are now harmonious and seem likely to continue so, there is no need of such a committee.

From the same conference had come the recommendation that a committee should be appointed by the two conventions to draw up a new statement of Baptist faith and polity. This was rejected on the ground that there was no necessity for such a new statement on the part of Southern Baptists.

Before the convention met, it had been generally assumed that both of these recommendations would carry. Naturally there is much speculation now as to the effect on the convention at Indianapolis of the rejection of the second. Many, among the Fundamentalists and other groups in the North, had counted on such a committee as a way out of the present complicated situation. Various of our leaders have given their endorsement to the proposal. Just where are we at now? Will there be renewed agitation in favor of the Des Moines Confession, or will the delegates conclude that our Southern brethren have pointed out to us the way of wisdom and peace? If the South needs no new statement, will the North gain anything by hastily putting one forth?

Our Convention Preacher

An interview with Rev. Albert W. Beaven.

By ALFRED E. ISAAC

ANY pastor might well covet such a record as Dr. Beaven has made during his pastorate of thirteen years at Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y. He was called to the pastorate before he was graduated from the Rochester Theological Seminary, and is the third pastor the church has had during the fifty years of its existence, both of his predecessors also going direct from the seminary. Dr. Barrett, Mrs. W. A. Montgomery's father, was the first; he was succeeded by Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, who served the church for seventeen years.

During Dr. Beaven's pastorate, the membership of the church has increased from 1,185 to 2,200, while the average attendance of the Sunday school has risen from 547 to 1,071. Baptisms have averaged sixty-two per year. The per capita giving for current expenses has increased during this time from $12.50 to $15.50, and for benevolences from $8.30 to $20.60. A few years ago the entire building was remodeled and greatly enlarged, representing an outlay of over $300,000.

A Close-Up View

Thinking that the readers of THE BAPTIST would be interested in a close-up view of Dr. Beaven and his work, I prevailed on him, but only after much persuasion, to talk with me about his achievements. Dr. Beaven is very reticent when it comes to talking about himself. He gives one the impression that he has entirely lost sight of himself in his enthusiasm for the work in which he is engaged.

The first question I put to Dr. Beaven was: "What do you consider the outstanding achievement of your long ministry?" After some reflection, he replied, "On the whole, I should consider it the planning and putting into operation of our new building, with its advanced ideas of religious educational work." Then, he added hastily, "Of course, whatever I have done is due to the splendid cooperation of the hundreds and thousands of people who have been interested in this work."

Then I wanted to know what Dr. Beaven regarded as some of the most important features of his ministry. In reply, he suggested that possibly he would put at the head of the list the great increase in giving by his people. They are by no means wealthy, being made up largely of the great middle class. Twelve years ago the church was giving about $25,000 a year for all purposes. On a recent Sunday an every-member canvass was conducted to secure a budget totaling $81,000, and when the pledges were counted up, they amounted to more than $83,000. In the New World Movement, the quota of Lake Avenue was $190,000, and the people pledged $192,000. But Dr. Beaven made three canvasses before the full sum was secured.

"Such achievements," Dr. Beaven continued, "were only possible because of the splendid cooperation of our people. We have almost no trouble-makers in the church. This fine spirit of the people is an inheritance from the past. It was begun under Dr. Barrett and greatly enlarged under the ministry of Mr. Barbour. I regard this spirit as one of the greatest assets of the church."

"Another great feature of Lake Avenue is its organization. We go on the principle of putting as many people to work as possible. We have a service corps of 265 workers who largely direct the activities of the church. Altogether, we have nearly 600 who have definite responsibility for the different activities of the church."

"Perhaps the most unique feature of my church is the principle we have adopted that the child comes first. In erecting our building, the Bible school had first consideration, the auditorium for the adults being secondary. For this reason also, we adopted the three-period session, and trebled the amount of religious instruction given the children."

Desiring to bring Dr. Beaven back to talking more about himself, I asked him, on a basis of 100, how he would rate preaching, organization and personal contact in his ministry. He replied: "Of course, it is difficult to assign definite values to the different lines of work, but I think I should arrange them about as follows: Preaching, 45 per cent; organization, 35 per cent, and personal contact, 20 per cent."

A Big Challenge

Continuing along this line, I wanted to know if there had been any change of emphasis in his work. He replied, "Yes, I am coming more and more to place larger emphasis on the work for the children and young people. We try to adapt the morning service to the needs of the children, and we are putting great stress on religious education."

Then I asked Dr. Beaven what methods he found successful in bringing the great crowds that flock to his church every Sunday? "Well," said Dr. Beaven, "I have discovered that if you put up a big challenge to men, they respond. Men seldom lose their interest in church because they are asked to do too much, but rather because they are not asked to do anything. I look upon the morning service as a teaching period, and I use it for the presentation of the essential elements of religion, always endeavoring to make them practical and usable in every-day life. The evening service is planned with a view to drawing in people who are not definitely tied up with the church. For the past nine years I have conducted a series of Fireside Sermons every fall, dealing with the problems of the home and showing how religion can solve them. These services are planned with the definite idea of getting in touch with the largest possible number of strangers. Through registration cards, meeting them after service, and in other ways getting their names, we make much of our mailing list and also friendly visitation. We do some newspaper advertising."

It would seem that Dr. Beaven had enough to do to keep this great institution going, for he has only one assistant, and that, by the way, is his own father; but he is one of the speakers most in demand for all kinds of meetings in the city and outside. I therefore asked him to tell me something about his outside work. "It is true," he said, "that I do a good deal of speaking outside the church. I have adopted the principle of giving one day a week for engagements out of the city, using this as my rest day. The time I spend on the trains is frequently about the only time I have for uninterrupted reading and planning of my work. By vote of the church, I give three Sundays a year to speaking to student bodies. I never miss my mid-week service, however, except during the vacation season. In the city I give occasional series of talks at the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., and am now giving a series at the seminary. I do a certain amount of speaking before the Rotary Club, Chamber of Commerce and other men's organizations."

"Dr. Beaven," I said, "I think some of your fellow ministers at least would like to peep into your diary for a week to see how you occupy your time." He rather demurred at this, but finally he said, "Well, we will take last week, if you insist, and see what my engagements were."

A Week's Program

Sunday: 10:30, morning service; 12:30, pastor's class on "Meaning of church membership"; 3:30, spoke before Older Boys' Conference at Y. M. C. A., conducting the closing life decision hour; 6, attended Christian Endeavor; 7:15, evening service and after meeting.

Monday: 10:30 to 3, Baptist Ministers' Conference; 3:30 to 6, dictation and interviews at the office; 6:30, gave one of a series of talks to men at the Y. M. C. A.; 8, meeting of deacons at the church to receive new members.

Tuesday: morning, office work; Rotary Club at noon; afternoon, called. 6:30, supper for teachers of Sunday school. Spoke on the evangelistic campaign of the Bible school. Dropped into the Radio Club to assure them the church is back of them in their efforts, also the Boy Scouts to speak of their summer camp. Took in part of the organ recital being given in the church. 9 to 10 personal interviews.

Wednesday: Committee meeting down town at noon; 5, meeting of Bible school committee; 6:20, supper hour of Wednesday Night Club;

7:30, prayer meeting; 8:15, conducted class in our school of religion; 9:45 to 10:30, personal interviews.

Thursday: Worked in study during forenoon. Called in afternoon. 4, left for Jamestown to speak at annual meeting. Had five hours' solid reading and study on train.

Friday: Office work. Wrote article for press. Worked on sermons. Evening, attended three cottage prayer meetings, led one.

Saturday: Worked on sermons. Wedding at noon.

My interview and acquaintance with Dr. Beaven convinces me that he is one of the strongest "all-round" ministers we have. His preaching attracts great crowds year after year. From a pretty wide knowledge of our churches over the country I should say we have no church in our denomination that is better or more efficiently organized than Lake Avenue. Every department seems to be so carefully adjusted that the whole work of the church runs with the precision of a clock. People come from far and near to see and study the Lake Avenue Bible school. Dr. Beaven is a great leader; he inspires confidence. The marvel to those who are in close touch with him is how he can do so many things so well, and keep going seven days a week.

The Indianapolis Churches

By R. E. NEIGHBOR

INDIANAPOLIS Baptists extend a cordial greeting to the great brotherhood of Baptist folk from near and far who will be their guests during the sessions of the present Northern Baptist Convention and we avail ourselves of this opportunity to introduce them severally—albeit very briefly for want of larger space. There are twenty-two of them all told, and fairly well distributed over the city. There are other districts in which new churches or missions might be and probably will be as soon as circumstances will allow. After the organization of the First Church, which is "the mother of us all," so to speak, there was a term of years when but little was done in the way of church extension, but latterly the Baptist growth has been quite as rapid as perhaps could be expected in view of conditions then prevailing and as therefore was wise. At present, however, all things promise more rapid growth for the future. The individual churches are prosecuting their work with encouraging success; all, except for four recent resignations, have pastors, and all signs are hopeful. There is also a Roumanian mission and an unknown number of Negro churches with many excellent men as pastors.

At the last associational meeting the total membership reported for the white churches was 6,086, baptisms somewhat over 500 and the value of church property about $615,000. This was in September and does not include the results of the past winter's work. The total Sunday-school enrolment, so far as reported at that date, was 5,026 with an average attendance of 3,732; the number of officers and teachers, 487.

The churches have organized themselves into a federation, taking the place of the former City Mission Board, and have employed Rev. F. A. Hayward as executive secretary, who gives his entire time to the supervision of our general denominational interests. From this federation much is confidently hoped for; its beneficial influence is already felt in many ways.

First Church will celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of its organization this fall. Its first meeting-house was on the corner of Meridian and Maryland streets. Among its pastors have been such men as Sydney Dyer, Dr. Henry Day, Reuben Jeffery, Henry C. Mabie and others—all of them men of outstanding ability. The present pastor is Dr. F. E. Taylor, of national reputation, whose incumbency has already extended over sixteen years. The membership is a little less than 1,800 and steadily increasing. The edifice, corner Vermont and Meridian streets, is the finest of any in the city. The church's activities are numerous.

Second Church, organized in 1869 under the name of the South Church, stands at the corner of Fletcher Place and Noble Street. It has an excellent building recently improved and enlarged. For several years it was ably served in the pastorate by Rev. I. N. Clark, who later became district secretary for the Foreign Mission Society in Kansas and adjacent states. Dr. G. R. Dye, the last pastor, has just resigned to go to San Bernardino, Cal. Rev. H. R. Waldo leaves the Broadway Church to succeed him at Second Church.

College Avenue, formerly known as the North Church, was the next established (1871). Dr. F. E. Webb is the present pastor and under his varied ministries the work there is prospering. It has an attractive edifice at the corner of Fifteenth Street. Such men as I. Carman and G. H. Elgin were among the various pastors of the old North Church; Dr. Elgin resigned to establish what is now the Baptist Observer; he was a man of exceptional ability whose helpful influence in all our denominational matters was felt throughout Indiana.

Garden Church followed in 1872 on the west side, near the corner of New York and Blake streets. It still occupies its original building, has a membership somewhat less than 200, and has been served continuously for a longer period than any other of our Baptist churches of the city by Rev. W. H. Harris. Owing to the change in the character of the population in that part of the city its location is not now favorable to rapid growth and removal to some other has been under consideration for some time.

The Church with a Parsonage

River Avenue. Sixteen years passed and then through the efforts of Rev. T. J. Connor this church in 1888 was added to the list, with him as its first pastor, a most worthy man. It has a good field, a good location in the southwest part of town, a good building, and about 200 members. It has recently called to its pastorate Rev. J. R. Quick.

Memorial (1891) is a good church with an excellent building, now under the pastoral care of Rev. G. C. Chandler. It is the only one of our churches which has a parsonage; it has lately been erected and makes a fine home. The church is on the west side beyond the river and is located in a fine field; the future is full of promise.

Woodruff Place, at first a mission of the First Church, became an independent body in 1894 and is now one of our strong churches, having had a successful history from the beginning, enjoying wise leadership and a consecrated membership. It is in one of the most beautiful parts of the city. It has a commodious house of worship, a property valued at $25,000, and a roll of about 600 members. Rev. J. D. Forward has been its efficient pastor for several years but has just resigned.

Immanuel is the next in order (1899), on Woodlawn and Laurel streets, with an excellent property including an attractive meetinghouse. The membership is about 250 and is a faithful body of people, active in good works. The pastor, Rev. W. P. Pearce, has just resigned accepting a call to Carbondale, Ill.

Tuxedo Park, dating from 1902, has prospered under the ministry of Rev. U. S. Clutton, its only pastor. It has a finely aggressive membership of more than 400, a good property and church.

"STABILITY of conviction," says Professor Peabody, "comes not so much by adding new truths to one's creed, as by leaning very hard on a few truths and finding them able to bear the strain. When a man in the oil fields of Pennsylvania counts up the value of his property, he does not say, 'I have ten wells while my neighbor has one,' for he knows that ten wells may be dry, and that one may be a fortune. What he wants is not ten wells, but one that flows. If he has one such, he is rich. Out of its mysterious depths there leaps an overwhelming flood which fills his tanks and pipes, and makes him try, not for more wells, but for storage-room for the wealth which he has found. That is the way a man strikes truth. It is not the number of shafts he sinks that counts; it is the finding of something in any one of them. It is not many beliefs which one needs, it is much belief in something. He does not ask for many Gods lest some of them should fail him. One real God is enough. One real truth makes a man rich. Out of its mysterious depths there wells up a flood of assurance and consolation, as though the universe of God had but that single outlet." (Extract from editorial, "The Divine Foundation," by T. R. W., in The Christian Work, issue of January 15, 1921.)

Churchman Avenue was organized in 1905 and is under the pastoral care of Rev. F. M. Buchanan.

Calvary began as a mission of the First Church and was organized in 1907. It is located in Brightwood where it is ministering to a growing community of railroad operatives. Rev. Alonzo Slaughter is the minister.

Thirty-first, another mission of the First Church, was organized the same year as Calvary (1907) and is having a fine growth in a splendid residence section of the northwest side of the city. The church is in a building enterprise and Rev. J. J. Patterson is the efficient pastor.

Beech Grove was the next point to be preempted by Baptists. It is located in the vicinity of extensive railroad shops in the southeastern part of the city. The church was organized in 1912 and is under the pastoral care of Rev. S. W. Hartsock, a former missionary to Africa.

Southern Avenue: The population was increasing in the southern part of the city and work was begun which culminated in organizing a church in 1913. The location is directly east of Garfield Park and the outlook for the church is promising. Rev. LeRoy James is the pastor.

West View was organized in 1917. It has had somewhat of a struggle, but is experiencing a decided uplift under the ministry of Rev. J. L. Jones.

The Trend of the People

Tabernacle: Following the people as they moved out from the more congested centers work was begun in the northwest which developed into a church in 1917. This field has been fostered by Dr. J. E. Sharp, a practicing physician who has materially helped the work. A fine work is being done, a new church house has been built and a pipe organ installed. Rev. C. P. Greenfield is the pastor.

Broadway: This church was organized in 1918 in a beautiful section of fine residences on the north side of the city, but for some reason the results thus far have not been as large as was expected. The church at present is without a pastor, Rev. H. R. Waldo having resigned. A thorough survey of the field is being made by the city executive board.

Lynnhurst is a growing suburban community west of the city. A church was organized in 1920 and is in a flourishing condition. Rev. C. H. Scheick has recently become pastor.

Emerson Avenue, formerly a mission of Tuxedo Park Church, was organized in 1921. It is located in a growing residence section in the eastern part of the city near Irvington. Rev. P. J. Morris is the pastor. A modern church plant is in the course of construction; the first unit was recently dedicated.

Temple. This church was organized in October, 1921, of members from several Baptist churches. A new lot has been purchased facing Riverside Park and plans have been approved for the erection of a modern church plant in the near future. Rev. Joseph Belcher, for four years pastor of the Southern Avenue congregation and for five years the office secretary of the Indiana Baptist Convention, is leading this youngest Baptist church in Indianapolis.

There is also a German Baptist church and a Roumanian Baptist Mission in the city. Rev. Paul Brindusi is pastor of the mission.

The City Federation

The Federated Baptist Churches of Indianapolis as an organization came into existence about a year ago. Previous to that time a City Mission Society had been known for several years. The type of work formerly conducted is still carried on, but a far greater vision and program prevails. In the plan of reorganization the state and city organizations worked together and invited Rev. F. A. Hayward to become "the city man." This was in April last year. Immediately a study was made of the situation. The program of work began with the first day of cooperative effort and has been steadily and increasingly carried forward. In this great metropolis Baptists have a responsibility toward the state at large and toward the coming generations which cannot be easily met. It was with this in mind that the city work was completely organized and a new constitution adopted. The new name is The Federated Churches of Indianapolis and the name means what it suggests. This reorganization means a great program with years to carry it out into permanent success and money to put it across. Consecration to the ideal is essential.

Indianapolis, the City of the Northern Baptist Convention

A preliminary glimpse of a city crowded with worth-while interests.

INDIANAPOLIS, the "Capital of the Land of Opportunity," "The Hub without a Wobble," "The Buckle on the Great Corn Belt," the home of James Whitcomb Riley's "Raggedy Man," and of Booth Tarkington's "Penrod," is to add a new distinction to its long list of achievements this June—it is to be the seat of the fifteenth annual convention of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Northern Baptists are always so busy during their convention that they seldom have time to acquaint themselves with facts about the cities in which these are held. Hence it may be just as well to give them now a preliminary glimpse of Indianapolis. From the moment when the visitor gets off at the Union Station with its clock-faced tower to the moment when he takes a last look at the beautiful Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument in the heart of the city before he hurries away, Indianapolis is full of worth-while things.

The Chief Interest

From the point of view of Northern Baptist interest, the first of these to be mentioned is the Cadle Tabernacle, where the Northern Baptist Convention will be held. One of the greatest auditoriums in the country, this seats 10,000 persons. The acoustics are said to be such that a speaker who talks in conversational tone can be heard in the farthest corner. A modern system of ventilation changes the air in the building every four minutes so that Northern Baptists have little to fear from the hot June days.

Then comes the beautiful First Baptist Church, where several meetings will be held during the convention. This is the largest Baptist church in all Indiana in point of membership. Its pastor, Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, is well known to people of all denominations and of no denomination throughout the city.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument in the center of the famous Circle of Indianapolis is one of the best known pieces of memorial architecture in the country. The great bronze figure surmounting the top is 284 feet above the ground. War mementos of every kind and an extensive collection of war photographs are to be found in the basement. Only 100 years ago a wilderness lay where today this great shaft towers as testimonial to the valor of Indiana's soldiers and sailors. The city celebrated her one hundredth anniversary two years ago.

Of course no visitor to Indianapolis will want to miss seeing the home of James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet who has won the title of "The People's Poet Laureate." This beautiful old-fashioned house, where James Whitcomb Riley spent the last twenty-five years of his life and where he wrote most of the poems that have made him famous, was made a public shrine only recently. It is on "beautiful Lockerbie Street" just a few blocks from the center of Indianapolis so that no one need miss it who has a few moments to spare.

Some Superlatives

Other points of interest that should be seen are the United States courthouse and postoffice, one of the most beautiful federal buildings in the country; the Indianapolis public library built upon ground most of which was given to the city by James Whitcomb Riley; the largest inter-urban station in the world in the Traction Terminal Building and the unusually beautiful fountain in University Park.

Indianapolis, which is the capital of Indiana, has an area of almost forty-three square miles and a population of 314,194. It is the largest inland city not on a navigable stream, in the United States. It is said that more persons own their homes there than in almost any other city in the country.

The city is not only unusually fortunate in being situated in the richest agricultural territory of the United States, but it is a great manufacturing center. Seven hundred and eighty different articles are manufactured here, including everything from tacks to automobiles and from pop-corn machines to printing of poetry books.

IF I can sit at home in easy chair
And hear the choir a thousand miles away,
The text, the sermon, and the preacher say
The quiet amen; if I my breath of air
Can throw across the wide Atlantic, then where
Is end of word's earth faring? If I may
But rightly tune my ear, will Sappho play
Her lyre to me, and Plato's voice declare
The Good Supreme; Saint Francis preach again
To sister birds, and David play the strain That freed the prisoner Saul? I hear the strife
When Edwin fell; King Arthur making dole?
Will Shakespeare take once more his Ham-

And Christ repeat, "I am the Way and

Baptists and the Press

The papers want Baptist news. Will we give it to them?

By BLANCHE BRACE

IN its issue of April 29, THE BAPTIST carried an interesting and significant article by Rev. J. H. Hollingsworth on "Baptists and the Press." In that article, a minister of forty-five years' standing came to the front in a plea for printers' ink. I wish that every minister in the Northern Baptist Convention might have read that plea, been persuaded of the importance of getting Baptist news into print, and enlisted in the work of making Northern Baptists the best-known denomination in the country.

With your permission, I wish to add to what Mr. Hollingsworth has said certain facts about Baptists and the press which I have learned in the two and a half years during which I have been connected with the Department of Publicity and Statistics of the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention. My work has brought me into touch with editors of secular papers throughout the thirty-four states of the Northern Convention. Clipping bureaus have enabled me to know approximately how much Baptist news has been printed during every week and every month of that time. I believe that it will be of general interest to the denomination to know in a really definite way how Northern Baptists stand with relation to the press.

Editors Generous

It all boils down into this fact: The papers want Northern Baptist News, and have proved it. Editors are giving Northern Baptists generous space in their news columns at the present time. They will give Northern Baptists ten times as much space as at present if they can get ten times as much real news about the denomination.

This is such a new state of affairs that it is not strange that all Northern Baptists have not yet waked up to its possibilities. It used to be almost impossible to get our news into the daily papers. Mr. Hollingsworth has related his early difficulties in this respect. But during the past three or four years Northern Baptists have put themselves on the map in a newspaper way.

Our Northern Baptist Convention at Des Moines, which Mr. Hollingsworth has mentioned, afforded a most convincing proof that the papers want Northern Baptist news. A month before the convention opened, the Associated Press wrote asking us for abstracts of the addresses of all the leading speakers, which were sent out in advance to 1277 daily newspapers through the country by mail service. During the convention itself, the Associated Press carried four wire stories a day, thus sending our news without cost to us to more than a thousand newspapers throughout the country. No Methodist or other denominational conference has ever received better treatment from the daily papers than this. Dr. Frank W. Padelord, executive secretary of the Department of Publicity and Statistics of the General Board of Promotion, computed last August that the clippings of the Des Moines Convention on file, at our office covered one-third of a mile, and later clippings raised this total to half a mile.

Clipping bureaus return not more than one-third of the stories published, it is usually estimated. By subscribing to a clipping bureau service, one gets an approximate idea of the mass of Baptist news that gets into print. At the time of Mrs. Montgomery's election, for instance, 1200 papers called attention to the fact that the President of the Northern Baptist Convention was a woman. Since September, clippings measuring 750 feet in length have been sent into this office about Mrs. Montgomery. The Associated Press called attention to the fact that President Harding was a Baptist on almost every front page in the country.

Names for the Nameless

By PRUDENCE C. WORLEY

I HAVE often tried to fathom the feelings of the "Man without a Country." But always I have found myself confronted with a horrible sense of desolation and, with a shudder, have recalled myself from going further.

During the past few days I have been trying to think how it would feel to be without a name. Last week occurred "decision day" at our women's prayer meeting and you may know how delighted we were when twenty-seven women and girls rose to announce their intention to follow Christ. Among them were three hospital patients and when the evangelistic committee came to them to note their names they were told that to two of them none had ever been given, one having been called all her life "younger sister," the ordinary appellation given to little girls in general. The third, because she was not wanted, had been named Lo, which means Hate. You can imagine the atmosphere of her home!

"This will never do," the committee said, "you must have names." So Hate was named Sieh-Hui, which means Loving Grace, "Small sister" was named Thiam-Hui, which means Added Grace, and the entirely nameless one was called Tit-Hui, which means Obtained Grace. It is the usual Chinese custom to choose names with some significance and so the three women are delighted beyond measure to feel that they literally as well as spiritually have written upon them new names.

The papers want Baptist news. Today the clippings that have come into this office, representing the semi-weekly returns, total 105 feet in length. They deal with our financial campaign, our state conventions, our missionary speakers, our coming convention at Indianapolis, whatever the papers could get hold of in the way of real Baptist news. Another communication that has come into this office today is a clipping mailed to me directly by the editor of the Albany, N. Y., Times-Union. He not only printed a story of the Women's Continuation Campaign, three quarters of a column long on the front page of his paper, with national and international news, but he took the trouble to blue-pencil it, cut it out, and mail it back to this office, with his name written on the margin of the story—to show that he wants Baptist news.

From September 1 to the present date, the clippings that have come into this office of stories sent out by this department or by the Associated Press at our request, total within a few feet of a mile—it will be more than a mile by the time this gets into print. There are in our department, only one publicity writer and a secretary, and only a minimum of our time is left free for the secular papers, because of the mass of general publicity work to be done. Our publicity returns since September 1 might just as readily have been ten miles as one, had there been an adequate staff to turn out that much work, or had Northern Baptists throughout the country themselves given editors as much news as they should.

No Editorial Prejudice

Why do Catholics get more space in the daily papers than Northern Baptist do? It is due to no editorial prejudice against our denomination, but to the indisputable fact that Catholics give the papers more and better news than Northern Baptists do at the present time. Not only do Roman Catholics spend hundreds of thousands of dollars annually on their publicity service, not only do they have a $15,000 a year publicity writer in charge, but—and this is far more important—they have their priests taught the importance of the press in the theological seminaries. Formerly, as a reporter on a New York daily, I was impressed by the fact that there was never any difficulty in getting the Roman Catholic assignments on which we were sent. Invariably we were given the facts promptly and courteously, and in detail. This was in striking contrast to the treatment I often received at the hands of my Protestant co-religionists.

Episcopalians also have an ambitious publicity program. Their publicity budget, approved by the presiding bishop and council, calls for an expenditure of $152,000. Between $40,000 and $50,000 of this will be spent for straight news service, and a part of the remainder will be spent for a bi-monthly news sheet, with a circulation of from 450,000 to 600,000. The Episcopalians, like the Catholics, spend large sums on advertising.

Of course, Northern Baptists cannot compete with such expenditures as these for publicity in their present financial crisis. Probably our next budget cannot be stretched to cover the item of secular publicity at all. Nevertheless, Northern Baptists cannot afford to let their relations with the press, carefully built up and now in a healthy condition, decline. If there is no publicity department the denomination as a whole can turn itself into a publicity department. Every Northern Baptist minister, every leader in any branch of Northern Baptist work, can be a publicity agent for the denomination, with the papers in his own city or town.

A certain biblical injunction that has to do with lights and bushels, applies to the present case. For a great many years Northern Baptists let their light shine under a bushel, so far as the newspapers of the country were concerned. At the present time, the papers want Baptist news; will we give it to them?

Postscript

By FRANK W. PADELFOED

To the above statement of Miss Brace I would like to add one word. In this statement Mr. Hollingsworth set forth the situation exactly as it obtained two years ago, but since that time conditions have been entirely changed. If any one could step into our office and see the great folios of clippings which we have gathered, they would have no questions but that the Baptists have been put on the newspaper map. Miss Brace and her associates have demonstrated beyond argument that the newspapers want Baptist news, if it is real news and properly prepared.

The tragedy of it all is, now that we have changed the situation, that we have proved to the papers that Baptist news is worth printing, that we have created a demand in newspaper offices for Baptist news; that in response to a demand that the Board of Promotion shall reduce its expenditures we must close out all the publicity work, discontinue all our efforts to get Baptist news before the public and lapse into that state where Baptists will be known in the press only when some tragedy has occurred or some controversy makes a sweet morsel for some sensation-loving reporter. Is that not a tragedy?

Let Us Understand One Another

A letter to the editor from Mrs. Caroline Atwater Mason

BELIEVING you to be sincere in your effort to discuss my contribution to the Watchman-Examiner of May 4, entitled, "To Avert the Denominational Calamity," in a "kind and chivalrous manner," I am unwilling to doubt that your desire to treat it justly, also, will prompt you to give space to certain emendations of your editorial in THE BAPTIST of May 20.

In the first instance, in that editorial entitled "What Do You Suggest?" you make the following assertion: "There are some now who, like the critic whose article we are examining, declare that the $100,000,000 New World Movement was surreptitiously sprung upon the denomination by a group of designing men and women."

Let me say distinctly that I neither said nor imagined anything of the kind, as you will see by reference to the article in question and by the fact that I have not the habit of using "bad language." Reference, however, to the leading editorial in the same issue of the Watchman-Examiner has since shown me that when "the gigantic reorganization of our denominational agencies" took place at Denver "nobody understood what was involved." And this is perhaps not strange in view of the circumstance that the outlines of the plan for the Board of Promotion were made public but few weeks before the date of the convention.

In this instance of your discussion of my article the wrong impression is given by interpolation; in another instance the wrong impression is given by omission. You print in direct quotation the following:

"In the first place, the scheme of raising a sum so far in excess of the actual average giving of the churches ... appeared foredoomed to be an expensive failure." The phrase omitted was as follows: "and by means of a five-year pledge policy." This was the crux of this contention, the danger point, to many minds, in the enterprise. Would it not have been fair to give the whole sentence?

Regarding the figures quoted by me of the proportion of churches cooperating with the New World Movement, I can only say that, as these figures have appeared in the press of the denomination, and have not until now, to my knowledge, been challenged, I accepted them in all honesty as correct.

I wish to emphasize another point, which is that in no sense whatever have I "proposed" to "dissolve" the Board of Promotion as you state in the editorial before me. Even the most casual reading would seem to show that I regarded the board's continued existence as threatened, and that I was simply bringing forward certain ameliorating circumstances in the situation, as that the possibility of its passing was less revolutionary than was its institution. I certainly do not regard myself as in a position to "propose" any measure of any kind relative to the Board of Promotion.
